Price cutting orgies in Detroit in nearly all cases are attributable to the fact that some marketeer is able to buy at a wider differential between his cost price and the current prevailing retail price than most retailers and so has a wider margin of profit, and being anxious to expand and desiring to get more gallonage, he reduces his price to the public. That is always the start of the price cutting orgies which occur periodically (R. 431).

If all the major oil companies were prevented from selling to retail operators at tank-car prices in the Detroit area it would improve the competitive situation in Detroit (R. 435).

497 Mr. Raupagh, respondent's Detroit manager testified that:

When certain stations start to cut prices, that spreads among other stations and a general price cutting situation ensues (R. 3652).

Professor Clark, Chairman of the Department of Marketing, and Director of the Graduate Division of the School of Commerce of Northwestern University, was called as a witness by respondent (R. 1617). He displayed an intimate knowledge of marketing conditions generally and had given consideration to the marketing of petroleum products (R. 1623). His testimony will be found in the Record, pages 1617-1712, a few relevant portions of which are here partly set out verbatim and partly summarized:

The use of the jobber (referring to jobbers generally R. 1682), brings into the marketing picture a competitive factor which leads away from monopoly—certainly not toward it. "Without the jobber you would have a very much smaller number of competitors in the field" (R. 1642).

Witness was shown Resp. Ex. 19, which he had previously examined and testified that it fairly depicted the flow of gasoline from the refineries to the consumers by the different methods of marketing now in use (R. 1644). Among the various methods depicted are those of sale by the producer to the jobber who sells both at wholesale and at retail, and by the same producer to retail outlets. If the channels of distribution were so fixed that a producer of gasoline could not sell in a given territory to different types of buyers at different prices, it would, in the opinion of the witness "very likely lead to higher costs of marketing". It would also, in the opinion of the witness, be very unfortunate because it is through selling to different types of buyers that competition is continued and methods of marketing are improved (R. 1645).

The differential accorded the four dealers on Red Crown gasoline purchased in tank-car quantities below the tank-wagon prices charged the retail outlets; the storage and distribution equipment maintained by the four dealers, the sale of gasoline annually handled by them, were explained to the witness (R. 1646-7), and his opinion requested as to whether "there is anything economically unsound in 498 that set-up and system of distribution". The witness answered: "Well, the set-up seems entirely sound to me. All of these organizations, as you enumerate them are performing what we call the wholesale function, and would be justified—in fact they would have to obtain a functional discount on that basis because of the expense of operation, and it is quite possible also that they might be justified in some or all of that lower price because of the quantities in which they purchase"" (R. 1647). The witness was then asked his opinion as to whether there was anything in the set-up of the four dealers as outlined that "tends to create a monopoly, tends to restrict or injure competition, or tends to lessen competition, or restrain trade in any particular, or injure competitors'' (R. 1648), and answered: that there was nothing in the set-up of the four dealers that tended to restrict competition; that it had a tendency to increase competition. Whether it resulted in injury to their competitors depends on what is meant by the word ''injure''; that if a company distributes more effectively than a competitor distributing in the same way, it will outsell its competitors on the market. He could not, however, see anything in the set-up of the four dealers that could be construed as unfair (R. 1648).

The jobber who sells both at wholesale and at retail, performs a dual function (R. 1657), frequently combined in one operation (R. 1658-9). The normal function of a jobber is to resell to retailers (R. 1660). When the jobber sells at retail he is performing a retail function which commences when the goods reach the retail store, (R. 1661) and are charged to the store (R. 1678).

A functional discount is one given to a middleman because of his position in a channel, upon the assumption that he performs certain operations ''and the discount is for the purpose of covering his expense of doing that thing'' (R. 1663), and has no relation to his retail functions (R. 1665-6). Benefit to the public from a jobbers' operation of retail stores flows from more efficient and economical operation (R. 1680-1).

A jobber who buys gasoline in tank-car quantities, taking delivery at his bulk plant at a differential of 1.5¢ per gallon under the price paid by his competitor who takes delivery by tank-wagon at his retail service station, and delivers the gasoline at his expense from his bulk plant to his retail service stations, if the cost of distribution is less 499 than 1.5¢ per gallon, profits to the extent of the difference, even though he is not a more efficient retail service station operator, and to that extent has a competitive advantage which results in injury to his tank-wagon competitor. Any benefit to the public flows from efficiency, producing reduced costs in operation (R. 1683-97).

Conclusions of Fact:

1. At all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, respondent has made three brands of gasoline—Stanolind, Red Crown and Solite with Ethyl. During said period, respondent has annually marketed from 61,198,750 gallons in 1936 to 74,627,712 gallons in 1940 of said branded gasolines in the Detroit Metropolitan area of Michigan, which embraces all of the area within the limits of the cities of Detroit, Hamtramck, Dearborn and Highland Park in the State of Michigan: Respondent is the largest producer and distributor of gasolines operating in said area. Of the branded gasolines sold by respondent in said area, approximately 3 per cent was Stanolind; 7 per cent Solite with Ethyl; and 90 per cent Red Crown.

2. During all the time mentioned in paragraph 1, respondent has sold all of said branded gasolines, to be by the purchasers resold, to two classes of customers in said area known as (1) tank-wagon reseller, and (2) tank-car customers. The tank-wagon reseller customers, operators of retail service stations, took delivery by tank-wagon, and, with but one exception, paid respondent's posted tank wagon prices and resold said gasolines at retail through their stations. Before purchase of said gasolines for resale could be made in tank-car quantity the applicant had to possess certain qualifications prescribed by respondent as entitling him to recognition as a "jobber" or "wholesaler", and then selected and recognized by respondent as a jobber or wholesaler, was granted more favorable terms of purchase, usually 1¢ per gallon on Stanolind, 1.5¢ per gallon on Red Crown, and 1.75¢ per gallon on Solite with Ethyl, below respondent's posted tank-wagon prices for said gasolines, delivery being made at the bulk or storage plant of the jobber; said price differentials being no larger than differentials granted by other competitive oil companies, operating in said area, to their customers selected and recognized by them as "jobbers" or "wholesalers" for gasolines of like grade and quality similarly delivered. The jobber or wholesaler was at liberty to resell said gasoline either at wholesale or at retail at prices to be fixed by him.

3. Between September 1, 1936, and March 1, 1938, respondent, to meet an equally low or lower price, 500 offered by a competitor for gasolines of comparable grades and qualities and to retain the business of a valuable customer, granted one of its tank-wagon customers—Ned's Auto Supply Company—on tank-wagon deliveries at its retail stations, a price of .5¢ per gallon on its branded gasolines, Red Crown and Solite with Ethyl, below its posted tank-wagon prices for said gasolines.

4. Prior to June 19, 1936, respondent recognized three dealers as jobbers—the Stikeman Oil Company, the Wayne Oil Company and the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company—and on March 7, 1938, respondent recognized Ned's Auto Supply Company as a jobber, and ever since their said recognition as jobbers, to meet equally low or lower grade and quality similarly delivered, and to retain their business, has accorded said companies its usual jobber differentials on its branded gasolines.

5. Ned's Auto Supply Company has resold none of said gasolines purchased from respondent at the differentials referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3, to retail service stations, but has resold substantially all at retail through service stations operated by it, the volume of gasoline so resold being, in 1936, 2,401,600; in 1937, 4,240,500; in 1938 4,880,500; in 1939, 4,336,508; and in 1940, 4,290,965 gallons. The volume of branded gasolines annually purchased by the Stikeman, Wayne and Citrin-Kolb companies during the years 1936 to and including 1940, and the amount resold at retail through service stations operated by each of them was as follows:

Company	Year	Total Amount Purchased	Amount Sold at Retail
Wayne Oil Co.	1936	1,348,345	None
" " "	1937	1,686,637	None
" " "	1938	1,825,038	None
" " "	1939	2,226,177	169,189
" " "	1940	2,541,394	332,478
Stikeman Oil Co.	1936	2,255,000	626,890
" " "	1937	2,451,000	223,041
" " "	1938	2,290,000	6,870
" " "	1939	1,822,960	None
" " "	1940	1,772,911	None
Citrin-Kolb Oil Co.	1936	2,091,024	614,761
" " "	1937	5,501,000	847,154
" " "	1938	5,959,000	435,007
" " "	1939	5,144,675	519,612
" " "	1940	5,226,150	339,698

501 6. All of the branded gasolines purchased from respondent by the Wayne Oil Company and the Stikeman Oil Company and resold at retail service stations, was resold at respondent's posted tank-wagon prices. A part of the Red Crown gasoline purchased from respondent by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was resold to service stations at prices of .5¢ to 1.¢ per gallon less than respondent's posted tank-wagon prices, and in 1938 and 1939 said sales exceeded one million gallons per annum; a part of which was resold by those stations, receiving lower price, at less than the prevailing retail price. A large part of the Red Crown gasoline purchased from respondent by Ned's Auto Supply Company, and a part of that purchased by the Citrin-Kolb Company, was resold by said companies through retail stations operated by them at 2.¢ per gallon or more under the prevailing retail price for said gasoline.

7. All of the retail service stations supplied by respondent and those operated and those supplied by the four dealers within said area, are in competition with each other.

8. The average operating margin—difference between cost, and sale, prices—of the retail service stations handling Red Crown gasoline and paying the posted tank wagon price in said area is, and has been, during all the period referred to in the complaint, approximately 4.¢ per gallon. During the period from September 1, 1936, to March 1, 1938, the operating margin of Ned's Company was approximately 4.5¢ per gallon which gave it a marginal advantage of .5¢ per gallon in the resale of Red Crown gasoline over its competitors purchasing at the posted tank-wagon price. The Stikeman, Wayne and Citrin-Kolb companies, during all the time mentioned in the complaint, and Ned's Auto Supply Company at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, on all Red Crown gasoline purchased from respondent and resold through retail stations operated by each of them, had an operating margin of 5.5¢ per gallon, less the cost of maintaining their bulk or storage plants and transporting the gasoline therefrom to their retail service stations, which was approximately .5¢ per gallon, leaving them an operating margin to cover costs of sale of approximately 5.¢ per gallon, and giving each of them a marginal sales advantage of approximately 1.¢ per gallon over their competitors purchasing at the posted tank-wagon price.

9. The differentials respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company on its branded gasoline, Red Crown, conferred upon that company competitive price advantages which were used by that company to greatly enlarge the volume of its retail gasoline business, by offering for sale at retail, and selling said gasoline at a price of 2¢ or more per gallon below the prevailing retail price at which competitive retail service stations, purchasing Red Crown gasoline at respondent's posted tank-wagon price, were offering said gasoline for sale, which diverted gasoline trade in substantial volume from the retail service stations of its competitors to its own stations.

10. The differential respondent granted the Citrin-Kolb Company on its branded gasoline, Red Crown, conferred upon that company competitive price advantages which were used by that company to greatly enlarge the 502 volume of its gasoline business by (a) offering for sale and selling and delivering to certain of the retail service stations supplied by it, said gasoline at from .5¢ to 1¢ per gallon below the posted tank-wagon price; a part of which was resold through the stations receiving the differentials at less than the prevailing retail price at which their competitors, purchasing their gasoline at the posted tank-wagon price, were offering and selling said gasoline, with the result that a substantial volume of gasoline business was diverted to their stations from the stations of their competitors; and, (b) offering for sale and selling, a part of said gasoline through retail service stations operated by it at 2¢ per gallon less than the prevailing retail price at which those stations, paying the posted tank-wagon price for said gasoline, were offering the same for sale, with the result that a substantial volume of gasoline business was diverted to Citrin-Kolb stations from the stations of its competitors.

11. To regain the business of their gasoline customers in whole or in part it was necessary for the competitors of Ned's, Citrin-Kolb and stations supplied by Citrin-Kolb to correspondingly reduce their prices on Red Crown gasoline which reduced their operating margin to approximately 2¢ or less per gallon,—an amount insufficient to enable them to continue in business unless each increased its sales volume of gasoline, while the beneficiaries of said price advantages could operate with a profit on the margin they had established without increasing their business.

Conclusion of law:

1. The effect of the granting by respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company of .5¢ per gallon on tank-wagon deliveries below its posted tank-wagon price for its branded gasoline, Red Crown, from September 1, 1936, to March 1, 1938, was to substantially lessen competition and tended to injure, destroy or prevent competition with the retail service stations operated by Ned's Auto Supply Company by those retail service stations purchasing Red Crown gasoline at the posted tank-wagon price from respondent, the Stikeman Oil Company, the Wayne Oil Company and the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company; and the granting of said differential was in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended.

2. The effect of the granting by respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company, and to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, following their selection and recognition by respondent as jobbers, of a differential of 1.5¢ per gallon on its branded gasoline, Red Crown, below its posted tank-wagon price for said gasoline, was, is or may be, substantially to lessen competition or tend to injure, destroy or prevent competition with the retail service 503 stations operated by Ned's Auto Supply Company, those operated by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and a part of those stations supplied by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, by those service stations purchasing Red Crown gasoline from respondent, the Wayne Oil Company, the Stikeman Oil Company and the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company at respondent's posted tank wagon price; and the granting of said differential was in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended.

3. The effect of the granting by respondent to the Stikeman Oil Company and the Wayne Oil Company, following their selection and recognition by respondent as jobbers, of a differential of 1.5¢ per gallon on its branded gasoline, Red Crown, below the price respondent charged its tank-wagon customers was and is to give those companies competitive advantages in the resale of said Red Crown gasoline through the retail service stations operated, or that may be operated, by them and each of them, over those service stations purchasing Red Crown gasoline from respondent and the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by tank-wagon at respondent's posted tank-wagon price, and may result in substantially lessening competition or tending to injure, destroy or prevent competition with those stations now, or that may be, operated by them, or either of them, by those service stations purchasing Red Crown gasoline by tank-wagon and paying the posted tank-wagon price therefor; and the granting of said differential was in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended.

4. The effect of the granting by respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company, the Stikeman Oil Company, the Wayne Oil Company and the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, or either of them, following their selection and recognition by respondent as jobbers, of differentials of 1¢ per gallon on Stanolind and 1.75¢ per gallon on Solite with Ethyl, below the posted tank-wagon prices respondent charged its tank wagon customers for said gasolines, was to confer upon each of said companies competitive advantages in the sale of said gasoline through service stations operated by them, or either of them, over those service stations purchasing the same brands of gasolines at respondent's posted tank-wagon prices, which may result in substantially lessening competition, or tending to injure, destroy or prevent competition with each of the stations operated by each of said four companies, by those service stations purchasing said gasoline at respondent's posted tank-wagon prices; and the granting of said differentials was in violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended.

XII.

Informative Evidence.

The record contains a large amount of testimony and some exhibits, which have no bearing upon any question of fact alleged in the complaint and which constitute no 504 legal nor equitable defense to this proceeding. It is, however, informative as to marketing conditions generally existing in the oil industry throughout the United States and was admitted in evidence for the information of the Commission. This evidence is designed to show that the acts and practices of the respondent, against which the complaint is levelled, have been for years and are now sanctioned and approved by a large part of the oil industry and generally recognized as proper and lawful. It indicates with reasonable certainty that certain of the major oil companies do not sell to jobbers in fields in which they sell direct to the retail trade; while other major oil companies, like respondent, sell to both jobbers and to retailers in the same field, granting their jobber customers the usual jobber differential, which in rural sections is as high as 3¢ or more per gallon. Some of the jobbers resell entirely at wholesale, while others resell both at wholesale and at retail, and some entirely at retail, in competition with the retail trade purchasing at higher prices and supplied by the same oil company (See Resp. Exs. 23, 19, and testimony of Marshall, R. 1712-1840, Dyer, R. 1472-1567; 2760-77). With the non-major oil companies such is a common practice.

XIII.

Recommendation as to Form of Order.

Your examiner recommends that an order issue directing the respondent to cease and desist from—

(a) Selling its gasolines to any of its retailer tank-wagon customers in the Detroit Metropolitan area in Michigan, at a price less than its regular posted tank-wagon price, unless the difference in price makes only due allowance for differences in cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which the gasoline is to such purchaser sold or delivered; and where any preferential price terms are granted any one customer by reason of differing methods or quantities in which the gasoline is to such customer sold or delivered, like terms shall be granted to any of respondent's other tank-wagon customers who may purchase and take delivery by the same methods and in like quantities.

(b) Granting any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler, who resells at retail through service stations operated by said dealer in competition with retail service stations purchasing respondent's branded gasolines at its posted tank-wagon price, and within the Detroit Metropolitan area in Michigan, any differential on any of its branded gasolines to be by said dealer, jobber or wholesaler resold at retail through its service stations, unless the 505 difference in the price makes only due allowance for differences in cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which the gasoline is to such purchaser sold and delivered.

(c) Granting any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler who resells to retail service stations in the Detroit Metropolitan area in Michigan, any differential on its branded gasolines, under the posted tank-wagon price, to be resold by said dealer, jobber or wholesaler to retail service stations at less than the posted tank-wagon price, unless the difference in price makes only due allowance for differences in cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which the gasoline is to such purchaser sold and delivered.

Respectfully submitted,
Webster Ballinger,
Trial Examiner.

June 25, 1943.

Note: The Trial Examiner's report is not a report or finding of the Commission. Such report is advisory only, and is not binding upon the Commission.

---

* * (Caption—4389) * *

EXCEPTION TO TRIAL EXAMINER'S REPORT UPON THE EVIDENCE.

The undersigned, attorney for the Federal Trade Commission in the above-entitled matter, hereby excepts to the Trial Examiner's report upon the evidence herein, filed July 2, 1943, in the following respects:

I.

Exception is taken to the statement appearing at pages 44 and 45 of the Examiner's report, as follows:

"From 1930 to 1936 Ned's had received offers from responsible companies handling branded gasoline comparable in quality to those furnished by respondent at substantially lower prices—one cent per gallon less by tank-wagon (R. 3089, 3091), and from two (R. 3100) to five cents per gallon (R. 3094-6), less by tank-car than the price respondent was charging Ned's."

There is no evidence that any major oil company was offering to sell Ned's gasoline at a price lower than the prevailing tank-wagon price in 1936, at or prior to the time when respondent began to give Ned's a ½c differential on tank-wagon deliveries. There is no evidence that the one offer to sell to Ned's at less than the tank-wagon price which was effective in 1936 related to a gasoline "comparable in quality" to Red Crown gasoline, and it is affirmatively established that the one brand so offered was not a major brand and did not have the public acceptance of Red Crown.

The first so-called "offer" testified to by the witness Gershenson, president of Ned's Auto Supply Company, is said to have been made about 1930 by the Argo Oil Company. (It was agreed between counsel that the word "offer" when used in questions and answers on this subject 507 was used without legal significance and not as supporting a conclusion that any conversation or negotiation so referred to amounted to an offer in the legal sense.) This offer related to Dixie gasoline (not a major brand). Argo was then just starting to sell gasoline, and there is no evidence that it was a "responsible" company at that time. Mr. Gershenson told Argo "that we weren't interested in that offer and that died right there" (R. 3089).

The next offer referred to is one from the Red Indian Oil Company, which the witness said "has continued right up to today." That was also in 1930 (R. 3090). Red Indian at that time was selling Phillips 66 (R. 3091). However, in 1934 or 1935 the Red Indian Oil Company discontinued Phillips 66 and took on Fleetwing gasoline (R. 5337), and the subsequent testimony of Mr. Gershenson shows that the "continuing offer" from Red Indian thereafter referred to Fleetwing. Fleetwing was not a major brand, and did not have the public acceptance of respondent's gasoline in Detroit (R. 5345). There is no evidence that Fleetwing was "comparable in quality" to Red Crown.

Mr. Gershenson next testified regarding a conversation with a Mr. Dodge, representing the Texas Company, at Akron, Ohio in 1933 (R. 3094). There is testimony (purely hearsay) that Texas was then selling house brand gasoline to the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company in Detroit in tank-car quantities under a contract at 4c off tank-wagon price. Mr. Gershenson asked Mr. Dodge if Ned's could get the same kind of a contract. Ned's did not have a bulk plant at that time, and Mr. Gershenson returned to Detroit to see whether he could obtain bulk plant facilities, and he told Mr. Dodge that he would communicate with him further. Mr. Gershenson thereafter told Mr. Raupagh, respondent's Detroit manager, that "We wanted to buy and we were negotiating to buy gasoline from Texas on the same type of contract that Firestone had" (R. 3097). There is no evidence that Texas ever offered to sell to Ned's at 4c off tank-wagon price, or at any other price. All that appears is that Ned's had some negotiations with Texas with regard to buying in tank-car quantities. Ned's had no bulk plant at that time, and did not obtain one until February 1938 (R. 3120). Mr. Gershenson admitted that he had no offer in writing or any letter submitting any definite proposition from Texas (R. 3098).

The next offer described by Mr. Gershenson was from Shell Oil Company in 1933 or 1934. Shell was looking for a single jobber in Detroit, and according to Mr. Gershenson a representative of the Shell Oil Company told 508 him that Shell would sell to Ned's as a tank car jobber at 2c less than the prevailing tank-wagon price, but "it might have been only a cent and a quarter" (R. 3100-01). The Shell representative said that if Ned's didn't accept the offer they would get somebody else and it wouldn't be available; later Gershenson was told that Shell had made the deal with Stark Hickey (R. 3101), and that the offer was no longer open (R. 3198). Mr. Gershenson said further that "Jack Reed kept me posted on what they were doing, and he said they had signed up somebody else, and I told him not to feel badly. We didn't intend to change from Standard Oil Company" (R. 3104).

Mr. Gershenson didn't recall whether or not he specifically mentioned the Shell Oil Company in communicating with Mr. Raupagh (R. 3104), and that "I didn't disclose the company" (R. 3105).

While the authority of Jack Reed to represent the Shell Company in this capacity does not appear, it is clearly evident that such an offer, if made, expired shortly thereafter, and that Mr. Gershenson knew that no such offer was in effect in 1936.

Regarding Mr. Gershenson's conferences with respondent's representatives in Detroit and Chicago just prior to the time Ned's was given the ½c differential, Mr. Gershenson was asked by respondent's counsel whether he told respondent from whom he could get a lower price at that time. Mr. Gershenson replied, "I don't recall anything then. It is contrary to our practice to name a competitive price, as to whom it comes from; the supplier, because a competitive thing—there are too many arguments directly, and too many things to spoil them" (R. 3109). He said further that the only "offer" which he specifically had in mind at that time was the one from the Red Indian Oil Company (R. 3107, 3110).

The record is devoid of any evidence that any supplier of a major brand of gasoline was offering to sell to Ned's Auto Supply Company in 1936 at a lower price than the prevailing major tank-wagon price at which Ned's was then buying from respondent. Furthermore, it was Ned's "sincere business judgment" that the loss of volume which would result from a change from Standard to some other competitive brand would more than offset the additional margin that Ned's might make on the other brand, so that it would be a stand-off (R. 3099). Ned's was merely 509 trying to get a lower price from respondent so that they could make more profit (R. 3099), and we have Mr. Gershenson's direct admission that at this time (1936) he did not consider any change that he could make to another brand to be more favorable to his company than the continued purchase of respondent's brands at tank-wagon prices.

II.

Exception is taken to the following "Conclusion of Fact" at page 47 of the Examiner's report:

"The differential of .5c per gallon on Red Crown gasoline respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company on tank-wagon deliveries from September 1, 1936 to March 1, 1938 was made to meet an equally low or lower price of a competitor or competitors for branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality."

There is no evidence that any major competitor of respondent was offering Ned's an equally low or lower price on branded gasoline in 1936. There is evidence of an offer from Red Indian Oil Company to sell Fleetwing gasoline to Ned's at a price lower than respondent's price for Red Crown, but Fleetwing was not a major brand and there is no evidence that Fleetwing was a gasoline comparable in grade and quality with Red Crown. (See discussion under Exception I, supra.)

III.

Exception is taken to the "Conclusion of Fact" appearing at page 55 of the Examiner's report, as follows:

"The differentials on its branded gasolines respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, * * * and the Wayne Company, at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality."

a. Ned's Auto Supply Company.

There is no evidence that any major oil company was offering to sell gasoline to Ned's at tank-car prices in February or March of 1938, or in fact at any other time prior to the issuance of the complaint in this case.

510 Within a month prior to March 7, 1938, Mr. Gershenson had confirmed the fact that Ned's could buy gasoline from the Red Indian Oil Company on a tank-car basis (R. 3115-6). Ned's then made arrangement to acquire bulk plant facilities (R. 3119-20), and Mr. Gershenson told Mr. Raupagh that unless respondent would sell to Ned's on a tank-car basis, Ned's would buy from someone else (R. 3113, 3121). Mr. Gershenson mentioned three companies—Shell, Texas and Red Indian—to Mr. Raupagh as available sources of supply (R. 3113).

Mr. Gershenson well knew that he could not purchase gasoline from Shell and at that time, the 1934 offer having long since expired (R. 3104, 3198). It does not appear that Ned's ever received an offer from the Texas Company to sell Texaco gasoline at tank-car prices (page 2, supra). Evidently, the names Shell and Texas were merely used by Mr. Gershenson for added weight in his attempt to persuade respondent to give Ned's a tank-car deal. Actually the only offer which Ned's had and relied upon at that time was from the Red Indian Oil Company, sellers of Fleetwing gasoline, a non-major brand in Detroit (R. 5345).

In November or December of 1940, "in anticipation of being called to testify," Mr. Gershenson contacted five companies in an effort to obtain evidence or competing offers for the respondent's use (R. 3140). Aside from Red Indian, he was able to testify to an offer to sell at tank-car prices by only one company—Gulf. Gulf's price at this time, according to Mr. Gershenson, was the same as respondent's price (R. 3141). Respondent did not call as a witness any one representing Gulf or any other supplier, to confirm any alleged competitive offer.

b. Wayne Oil Company.

There is no evidence in the record that any competitor of respondent, major or non-major, offered to sell gasoline to Wayne Oil Company at tank-car prices prior to the issuance of the complaint herein. There is no evidence that any major company offered tank car prices to Wayne at any time.

Mr. Ledbetter, president of Wayne Oil Company, testified regarding two alleged offers made to his company in December, 1940, after the issuance of the Commission's complaint against respondent. He stated that on December 10, 1940, a salesman representing the Aurora Gasoline Company offered to sell Wayne 80 octane gasoline delivered by transport truck at 6.1c per gallon. Aurora is a Michigan refiner (R. 5276); its gasoline is unbranded and it does no advertising (R. 5278). Its president testified that Aurora makes no long term contracts on gasoline and will not quote a price for a period longer than thirty 511 days (R. 5279-80). An Aurora salesman could not bind the company for the sale of any large quantity of gasoline over a longer period of time (R. 5284); Aurora does not make any sales at a fixed margin below the major tank-wagon price (R. 5303).

It conclusively appears, therefore, that if any such "offer" as testified to by Mr. Ledbetter was made by the Aurora salesman, the salesman had no authority to make such an offer and the price quoted was not the price of, and was not binding upon, the Aurora Gasoline Company. Furthermore, unbranded gasoline regularly sells at a lower price than major brands in Detroit, retail competition from non-major brands at 2c per gallon less than the major price not being considered very severe (R. 404, 520).

Mr. Ledbetter also testified to an "offer" made by the National Refining Company in December, 1940. This offer was a joint offer made to Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, and was not available for acceptance by either company alone (R. 1912). National Refining Company was not selling gasoline in Detroit at this time (R. 1906), and had no distribution in the Detroit area (R. 1890). Its "White Rose" brand was not a major brand.

There is no evidence that Wayne considered accepting either of these offers. Mr. Ledbetter communicated them to respondent only because respondent told him, after the complaint herein was served, that they wanted to know about any competitive offers that had been made to him (R. 1886, 1903). The trial examiner struck from the record all of the testimony regarding these alleged offers, but it was reinstated by the Commission upon motion of the respondent after hearings were closed.

c. Stikeman Oil Company.

There is no evidence that any competitor of respondent offered to sell to Stikeman at tank-car prices, except the testimony of Mr. Ledbetter, just above referred to, that a joint offer was made to Stikeman and Wayne in December, 1940, by National Refining Company involving a non-major brand having no distribution in the Detroit area. There is no evidence that Stikeman could have purchased at tank-car prices from any major company other than respondent on June 19, 1936, or at any time thereafter.

IV.

Exception is taken to the statement of the examiner at page 54 of his report that Citrin-Kolb Oil Company received an offer from Aurora Gasoline Company on December 10, 1940, to furnish gasoline in tank-car quantities 512 at 1.5c per gallon less than respondent's price.

Testimony to that effect was given by Mr. Citrin. The date referred to was after the issuance of the complaint herein. According to Mr. Citrin's testimony, the offer was made by a Mr. MacGready, a salesman of Aurora Gasoline Company.

As above pointed out under Exception III-b, the president of Aurora testified that Aurora never makes any long term contracts on gasoline, never agrees to maintain a price for more than thirty days, and does not make any sales at a fixed margin below the prevailing major price (R. 5279-80, 5303). Mr. MacGready was called as a witness by the Commission, and he directly contradicted Mr. Citrin's testimony. He stated that at Mr. Citrin's request that he quoted to Mr. Citrin Aurora's then current price, but did not tell Mr. Citrin that Aurora would sell him gasoline at a fixed margin below the prevailing major price (R. 5326-29). While there is a conflict of testimony between Mr. MacGready and Mr. Citrin, the testimony of Mr.

Slaughter, president of Aurora, is uncontroverted to the effect that Mr. MacGready had no authority to make any such offer as described by Mr. Citrin, and that the records of the company indicate that no such deal was ever presented for consideration (R. 5283-6).

It will be recalled that about this time respondent asked its jobber customers to supply it with evidence of offers by respondent's competitors (R. 1886, 1993, 3140).

Respectfully submitted,

Cyrus B. Austin,
Trial Attorney.

July 12, 1943.
CBA:lva.

---

515 Before Federal Trade Commission.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

EXCEPTIONS TO TRIAL EXAMINER'S REPORT.

(Figures in parentheses, unless otherwise explained, refer to pages of the official record.)

* * * * *

Now comes Standard Oil Company, an Indiana corporation, Respondent herein, appearing by Arthur J. Abbott, of the law firm of MacMahon, Abbott and Roberts, and excepts to the report upon the facts of Honorable Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner of Federal Trade Commission, filed with the Commission on the 2nd day of July, 1943, and served upon Respondent on the 6th day of July, 1943,* in the following particulars, to-wit:

516 I.

To Paragraph V, on Page 15 to 18 (inclusive) of said Report, wherein it is stated that the transactions complained of were in interstate commerce.

Respondent further specifically excepts to said Paragraph V on the following grounds:

(The following specific exceptions are not inclusive nor substantial of the foregoing general exception to said Paragraph V).

(a) To the references, on Pages 15 and 16 thereof, to

---

* An order of the Commission was subsequently made, extending the time to file the within Exceptions to and including August 5, 1943.

the execution of written contracts for the furnishing of gasoline by Respondent, which references are irrelevant and redundant; likewise, to the references therein relative to the maintenance, in the Detroit area, of six bulk storage plants; inasmuch as such contracts and facilities relate solely to transactions wherein gasoline is sold by Respondent to customers other than the four jobber customers involved in this case, and are wholly separate and distinct therefrom, having no bearing whatsoever on the 517 question as to whether the transactions complained of were in interstate commerce; and, furthermore, inasmuch as there never were and are not now any written contracts between Respondent and said four jobber customers, covering tank car shipments of gasoline (34).

(b) To the reference on Page 17 of said Paragraph V, relative to certain cases of emergency jobber shipments made in interstate commerce, which have no bearing on the question of whether the transactions complained of were in interstate commerce; inasmuch as such shipments were atypical and constituted isolated and unusual transactions (182) due to emergencies occurring in the years 1938 and 1939, and one instance in April 1940, when Respondent, being out of stock of a particular grade of gasoline at River Rouge, Michigan, shipped the same by railroad direct from Whiting, Indiana,—it appearing from the testimony that in the closed lake navigation period Respondent sometimes ran short of gasoline at River Rouge and ordered cars from the refinery at Whiting to supply its jobbers, but that no such instance has occurred
518 since April 1940 (180).

(c) To the failure of the Trial Examiner to report that the storage tanks of Respondent at the River Rouge, Michigan, marine terminal are filled to their maximum capacity of one million five hundred thousand barrels of gasoline during the summer open lake navigation season, and that the gasoline stored therein comes to rest, often for several months (192), before being shipped wholly in Michigan to Respondent's jobber customers (155); and that none of such gasoline so stored is earmarked, when stored, to be sold to any of such jobbers (156),—the latter being supplied solely on day to day orders, all executed wholly in Michigan, without any contract whatsoever; and that none of such gasoline so stored and later sold to such jobbers is withdrawn from storage in fulfillment of any contract with any jobber customer involved in this proceeding; and that all of such transactions happen wholly within the State of Michigan (165-167); and that when the tank car shipment of gasoline from the River Rouge, Michigan, marine terminal of Respondent is delivered to the bulk plants of the jobbers

(all situated in the State of Michigan), that terminates 519 the transaction, insofar as the physical handling of the gasoline is concerned; and that thereafter the jobber pays the Detroit Office of Respondent for the shipment (167).

(d) To the conclusion of law stated on Page 18 of said Report, and to the answer "yes" made by the Trial Examiner to the question as to whether the transactions complained of were in interstate commerce; which conclusion and answer Respondent contends are incorrect, as a matter of law.

520 II.

To Paragraph VI, on Pages 18 to 28 (inclusive) of said Report, wherein it is stated that the .5¢ per gallon differential which Respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, from September 1, 1936 to March 1, 1938, on tank wagon deliveries of gasoline under the price charged other retail reseller tank wagon customers did not make due allowance only for differences in cost of sale and delivery resulting from different method and quantity in which said gasoline was sold and delivered, as between Ned's Auto Supply Company and Respondent's other tank wagon customers in the Detroit metropolitan area in the State of Michigan.

Respondent further specifically excepts to said Paragraph VI on the following grounds:

(The following specific objections are not inclusive nor substantial of the foregoing general exception of said Paragraph VI).

(a) That the issue presented by said Paragraph VI is moot, and should have been so reported by the 521 Examiner; the practice complained of having been permanently* discontinued as of March 1, 1938 (3742-3) (3745-6-8).

---

* In view of the express finding that the practice was permanently discontinued on March 1, 1938, it is submitted that Sears Roebuck & Co. v. F. T. C., 258 Fed. 307, 310, is not applicable.

(b) That the statement by the Trial Examiner to the effect that Respondent's witness, John W. Boatwright, "frankly admitted that he did not know, of his own knowledge or knowledge gained from records, either the number or percentage of full and partial dump deliveries made to Ned's during the year 1937" (Report, p. 22, 1st Paragraph) is contrary to the testimony of said witness,—he having testified that:

"I know that most of them were on full load basis, except as when it became necessary for our truck to operate out of our plants to make deliveries to stations in the nearby neighborhood, they were privileged at any time, upon report to the plant, to dump one or two compartments in Ned's tanks. That responsibility of keeping the tanks filled enabled us to operate our trucks on a full load basis to a greater extent than they could have been operated in serving other retailer accounts, had it not been for the Ned's outlets". (3818)

522 (c) That the statement by the Trial Examiner to the effect that "whether any of the other 357 customers took all or substantially all of the deliveries in full tank wagon loads, and, if so, how many, is not shown by the record, but that a substantial part of the deliveries made to a part of them were made in full dumps is fairly established", is contrary to the testimony, and constitutes an incorrect conclusion of fact therefrom. (3817-8) (5181)

(d) That in rejecting Respondent's testimony relative to sales promotion expenses claimed by Respondent as not chargeable to Ned's Auto Supply Company, the Trial Examiner (Report, pp. 23-25) unjustifiably adopts the opinion of the Commission's Accountant, William J. Warmack, to the general effect that such items of expense could not be allocated as between different classes of customers (5791); which opinion is contrary to the weight of the testimony. (2651-2) (4331) (5140-5)

(e) That in rejecting Respondent's testimony relative to advertising costs claimed by Respondent as not chargeable to Ned's Auto Supply Company, the Trial Ex-523 aminer (Report, pp. 25-27) again adopts the opinion of the Commission's Accountant, William J. Warmack, and states:

"In the opinion of Mr. Warmack, Commission's Accountant, some part of this expense should have been charged to Ned's". (5901-2) (Report, p. 26).

"Mr. Warmack, Commission's Accountant, testified that there is no sound method by which such costs can be allocated between different service stations selling Standard Oil products, except on the basis of gallonage corroborated by Boatwright (supra) (d), which would afford no cost differential". (Report, p. 27).

There is no factual basis in the record for stating that Mr. Warmack's opinion, as stated, was "corroborated by Boatwright".

As for the opinion of Commission's Accountant, which was permitted by the Trial Examiner to prevail over all of Respondent's testimony as to costs not attributable to gasoline sold and delivered to Ned's Auto Supply Company, the record shows that Mr. Warmack admitted on the record that he had no conception of what constitutes proper cost accounting procedure under the Robinson-Patman 524 Act,—his testimony being as follows:

Q. "As far as you know, Mr. Warmack, has there been, either by great degree or otherwise, any norm or yardstick established as to what is the proper cost accounting procedure under the Robinson-Patman Act?"

A. "I do not know if there has been, Judge Hanley."

Q. "If there has been, you don't know about it; is that what you mean to say?"

A. "I do not know about it." (6526).

It further appears from the record that the Trial Examiner, in allowing the testimony of Commission's accountant to prevail over all of Respondent's testimony justifying the one-half cent differential granted to Ned's Auto Supply Company, ignored testimony establishing that Mr. Warmack did not examine the work sheets of, or accounting procedure followed by, Respondent in its study of the costs applicable to this differential (5779) (6617) (7784).

(f) That the Conclusions of Fact and Conclusion of Law arrived at by the Trial Examiner in relation to the 525 one-half cent differential accorded Ned's Auto Supply Company, from September 1, 1936 to March 1, 1938, on tank wagon sales of gasoline (Report, pp. 27-28) are erroneous; particularly insofar as the Trial Examiner concludes that the testimony "neither establishes nor tends to establish any differential in the cost of sale and delivery of gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company and to Respondent's other tank wagon customers in that area"—which conclusion of the Trial Examiner disregards both facts and economics, and is contrary to the great weight of the testimony.

526

III.

To Paragraph VII, on Pages 28 to 43, (inclusive) of said Report, wherein it is stated that the answer is "no" to the question:

> "Did the differentials of 1¢ per gallon on Stanolind, 1.5¢ on Red Crown and 1.75¢ on Solite with Ethyl gasolines, accorded the four dealers recognized by Respondent as jobbers, or tank car or transport truck customers, under Respondent's tank wagon prices charged its retail reseller customers for gasoline of like grade and quality, make only due allowance for differences in cost of sale and delivery resulting from differing methods or quantities in which the gasoline was sold and delivered to Respondent's jobber, or tank car, customers, and to its retail reseller, or tank wagon, customers, in the Detroit metropolitan area in Michigan?"

Respondent further specifically excepts to said Paragraph VII on the following grounds:

(The following specific exceptions are not inclusive nor substitutional of the foregoing general exception to said Paragraph VII.)

(a) To the statement made in the last paragraph on Page 28 of said Report to the effect that the differential 527 of 1.75¢ per gallon on Ethyl Gasoline is admittedly not justified.

The impossibility of the segregation of marketing costs as between the different brands of gasoline is discussed twice in the record (2501-2) (8054-5). A calculation was made between counsel which showed that the average differential based on brand ratios and discount allowance of 1.75¢ per gallon on Solite with Ethyl, 1.50¢ per gallon on Standard Red Crown, and 1.0¢ per gallon on Stanolind, revealed a weighted average differential on the three grades of gasoline of approximately 1.5¢ per gallon. This calculation was referred to in the closing of the taking of testimony (8055), and had been used in conferences between attorneys for Respondent and the Commission, which resulted in a gentlemen's agreement, whereby it was stipulated and understood that the issue should be decided on the basis of the differentials of 1.5¢ per gallon allowed on Standard Red Crown gasoline, which represents approximately 90% of the gasoline gallonage involved in the proceeding. The existence of this gentlemen's agreement will, no doubt, be confirmed by Cyrus B. Austin, Attorney for the Commission.

528 (b). To the statement of the Trial Examiner, made in the last paragraph on Page 29 of the Report, and repeated several times thereafter, to the effect that the jobber price differential justification was based on operations in the entire Detroit Division, instead of on operations in the so-called Detroit metropolitan area; and that, according to the testimony, populous areas show a lower marketing cost than rural sections (Report, p. 30).

The citations to the record on p. 30 of the Report do not substantiate the Trial Examiner's conclusion that the marketing cost in the Detroit Division is, or may be, less than in the Detroit metropolitan area, so-called. The testimony of Mr. Boatwright, alluded to by the Examiner, only pointed out that the fields of Minneapolis, Kansas City and St. Louis contained metropolitan areas and reported high costs. (5657-8). The testimony of Mr. Dy of Sinclair, alluded to by the Trial Examiner, does not substantiate the conclusion that the cost of marketing 529 gasoline is usually less on a per gallonage basis in populous areas than in outlying sections. (1516).

Mr. Warmack, Commission's Accountant, stated that he made no objective factual study of costs in the Detroit metropolitan area, as distinguished from the rest of the Detroit field (5958).

In this case, Respondent used as the basis for its cost analysis the smallest geographical area for which records had been maintained and within which the complaint was lodged. Nothing more was humanly possible.

The testimony referred to by the Trial Examiner has reference only to general distribution costs incurred from serving all types of customers. The testimony of Respondent's witness, Dyer, contains no statement to the effect that it relates directly to the reseller volume.

(c) To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 32) to the effect that there is no factual basis established for Respondent's Exhibit 33-A to E (inclusive).

530 This conclusion is not justified by the record. The testimony of Mr. Boatwright shows clearly that accounting costs reflected by said Exhibit was comparable, and even identical, as between the Kansas-Oklahoma field and the Detroit field: accounting, selling and marketing procedures being exactly the same (2663-4).

(d) To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 34), to the effect that Mr. Warmack, Accountant for the Commission, made a thorough examination and study of Respondent's Exhibits 99, 100 and 101, and reviewed all the testimony relating thereto in the record.

The testimony shows that Mr. Warmack had never previously made any study or investigation relative to distribution cost accounting involving the sale and distribution of petroleum products (5774); and as to the thoroughness of his examination and study of these exhibits, and of Respondent's Exhibits 31 and 33-A to E (inclusive), and of the records underlying them, we refer to the record, which falls far short of substantiating the Trial Examiner's statement (5756) (5776-7) (5779) (6510) (6617). 531

(e) To the statement of the Trial Examiner on p. 36 of the Trial Examiner's Report, to the effect that "The 'other method' includes sales of gasoline to jobbers, sales of other products to jobbers, and expenses incident to direct shipments from Respondent's supply terminals to customers buying in carload quantities."

This statement is erroneous,—conflicting directly with the quotation on p. 3 of Respondent's Exhibit 100, which is as follows:

"It has not been deemed advisable to maintain a separate allocation of costs on sales of gasoline to jobbers, sales of other products to jobbers, or expenses incident to direct shipments from our supply terminals to customers buying in carload quantities. A separate classification of expense to these added channels has been considered unnecessary because of the small amount of expense applicable to sales to these classes of customers. Accordingly, any expense applicable to these classes of customers will be found scattered throughout the various channels on our 'Comparative Statement of Expense—Form 189, Detroit Field Year 1940'. The expense of isolating each marketing cost accurately to these additional classes of customers 532 would be prohibitive in terms of benefits received, and would load our sales with excessive accounting costs." (Resp. Ex. 100, p. 3)

There was no testimony to the contrary.

(f) To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 37) to the effect that the cost of transporting gasoline from the River Rouge terminal of the four dealers was omitted from the cost analysis, while identical costs were charged to the tank wagon trade.

This involves an infinitesimal factor. Respondent's contention throughout the trial was that transportation costs from the River Rouge Terminal to jobbers' bulk plants should not be computed as a part of the cost differential. However, in order to forestall objection to this position by the Attorney for the Commission, a study was made of the difference in differential which would have been caused by including transportation costs to Respondent's bulk plants and transportation costs to jobbers' bulk plants, and it was shown by uncontradicted evidence (4607), 533 that the differential would be reduced thereby by only 8/1000 of a cent (.008 of a cent); so that the differential for 1940, as shown by Respondent's Exhibit 33-A, would be reduced only from 1.47 cents to 1.462 cents (4607).

(g) To the statements of the Trial Examiner, on p. 39 of the Trial Examiner's Report; wherein:

(1) He adopts the opinion of the witness Warmack and rejects that of Respondent's Economist, Boatwright, and his corps of assistants, who make a business of cost accounting in relation to the merchandising of petroleum products exclusively; whereas the witness Warmack never previously made any study or investigation relative to cost accounting involving the sale and distribution of petroleum products (5774).

(2) He states that the costs of marketing kerosene and tractor fuels sold to the tank wagon trade are "concededly improperly charged" to the tank wagon reseller channel, and amount to about 1 percent of the total volume
534 shown in that channel. (Citing Record, p. 4257).

The reference cited (4257) is not a concession on the part of Respondent that any costs are improperly included in the channel distribution of costs on Form 189 (Resp. Ex. 101).

(h) To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 40) to the effect that "Before adopting the gallonage factor in the allocation of costs among the three bulk plant channels shown on Respondent's Exhibit 101, Respondent's economists made no study tending to verify or substantiate the use of the gallonage factor in the allocation of costs among the three sales channels * * *' (Boatwright, R. 8005), and therefore no study or tests had been made to support the use of the gallonage factor with a view to comparing the cost of sale and delivery of naphtha and gasoline to Respondent's tank wagon reseller and its jobber customers." (Italics ours.)

The record does not show that "no study" was made, as stated by the Trial Examiner.

The question of the use of a gallonage as an allo-
535 cation factor is dealt with at great length throughout the testimony. On page 8005 of the record, the witness Boatwright stated only that "we did not make additional studies to verify or substantiate the use of the gallonage factor in the allocation of costs among the three sales channels * * *." (8005)

This is far different from testifying that no study was made.

The great detail to which Respondent's Economist and staff have gone in analyzing the use of gallonage as an allocation factor is fully explained in the record. (7889-7897.) In the testimony referred to, Mr. Boatwright states that not only himself and staff, but the Comptroller of Respondent Company, C. T. Borgeson, and many of its other technical experts, and also Price, Waterhouse & Company, its Auditors, have given this problem long and close study, with the result that the use of the gallonage factor is substantiated without question. Mr. Boatwright's testimony on this point is clear and convincing.

536 (i) To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 40) to the effect that "Witness Warmack, Commission's Accountant, testified that he was told by Respondent's Accountant that no study had been made to support the gallonage method of allocation or the accuracy of the figures obtained by using this method. He spent six weeks in Detroit, reviewing the factual basis for Respondent's Exhibits 100 and 101, and while there he requested that he be furnished any information which would support the use of gallonage used in Respondent's cost study as a measuring factor, and was told that Respondent had no such information." (R. 4934-5941.)

Mr. Warmack's testimony, when closely examined (5941), shows that he did not testify that the gallonage basis of alplocation is inadequate, or that any other or better method exists.

"Q. That being true, Mr. Warmack, does it follow that in connection with some accounts and expenses that the gallonage basis may not be the best available method of allocation?

537 "A. It may not be.

"Q. It may not be.

"A. It may not be, or it may be." (5941)

"A. * * * It may be the very allocation that you can arrive at regardless of how many studies you may make." (5942)

(The above questions were propounded by the Attorney for the Commission.)

As to Mr. Warmack's claim that he asked for and received from Respondent no information which would support the gallonage measuring factor, the record amply shows, both from the testimony of Leonard W. Houghton, Accountant for Respondent, (7788-7792), and of John W. Boatwright, Economist for Respondent, (7885), that such information could have been supplied but was never asked for by Mr. Warmack, and that Mr. Warmack advised both Houghton and Boatwright that "I have got everything I want". (7792—bottom.)

There is no testimony to the effect that Mr. War-

538 mack was told by Respondent's accountants that no study had been made by Respondent to support the gallonage method of allocation or the accuracy of the figures obtained by this method. On the other hand, the evidence amply establishes the long and exhaustive study given by Respondent to substantiate the gallonage method. (7889-7897)

539 (j). To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 40) to the effect that:

"If the gallonage factor had been used in determining Respondent's costs of sale and delivery of naphtha and gasoline to the tank wagon resellers and its jobber customers, there would have been no differential." (Boatwright, R. 8003.)

The testimony referred to by the Trial Examiner is as follows:

"Q. If you had used total gallonage, Mr. Boatwright, including direct shipment gallonage, as a basis of allocation, no cost differential would have resulted between tank wagon reseller and jobber, naphtha and gasoline?

"A. That is correct. But it would have been an absurdity." (8003.)

The "absurdity" referred to is revealed by the testimony on the preceding two pages, wherein it appears that in Respondent's Exhibit 101, the expenses charged to jobber naphtha and gasoline were arrived at not by the gallonage method of allocation, but were predicated upon the effort measure; the allocation being based upon "the 540 sum total of effort devoted to the jobber, naphtha and gasoline, business." (8001-2.)

(k) To the statements of the Trial Examiner (Report, pp. 40-42), relative to the propriety of allocation of (1) advertising costs and (2) annuities and Retirement Plan expense, as between tank wagon resellers and jobber channels of gasoline distribution.

These items concern allocations made by Respondent's Economist and accountants, which the Trial Examiner rejects in favor of the opinions of the Commission's experts (Report, p. 42). Substantiation of these allocations is amply supported by the record. (5381) (5445-59) (7568) (7960) (7961) (Resp. Exhibit No. 101, pp. 24-36) (Resp. Exhibit No. 101, pp. 90-99). It is respectfully submitted that it is improper to adopt the opinions of accountants employed by the Commission, when their opinions are at variance not only with Respondent's experts, but also with practices followed by the Internal Revenue Department in calculating income tax, and by other non-interested 541 experts. The advertising costs reflected in these items are substantial, and are primarily and almost exclusively attributable to operations other than those affecting the jobber channels.

The claim (Report, p. 42) that Annuities and Retirement Plan expenses do not properly constitute marketing expense, is, it is respectfully submitted, not supported by the record.

The record shows that wherever an allocation of costs was found to be necessary, Respondent's experts accepted what they regarded as the most logical method of cost allocation. To quote Respondent's Economist, John W. Boatwright:

"In any detailed cost study, you go down to certain points where it is a matter of judgment. In the exercise of this judgment, we have attempted to adopt procedures which would throw all possible costs against the jobber." (4773.)

(I) To the Conclusion of Fact of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 42), and particularly to subdivision 3 thereof, wherein it is stated that:

542 (1) Costs in the tank wagon reseller channel are over-weighted and those in the jobber channel are under-weighted; and,

(2) Items of cost properly chargeable to the costs of sale and delivery to the jobbers were omitted; and

(3) Correction of the account in the items referred to would reduce the cost differential to less than 1¢ per gallon.

It is mathematically impossible to take the accounts discussed by the Trial Examiner, trace his steps by calculation, and arrive at a differential of less than one cent per gallon—even assuming that the opinions expressed by witnesses for the Commission be accepted in their entirety, insofar as they conflict with the expert opinions of Respondent's witnesses.

In this connection, the record shows, without contradiction, that the differential accorded by this Respondent to tank car customers is the lowest in the entire petroleum industry. (1515-16.) This fact lends additional credence to the rejected testimony of Respondent's expert witnesses.

543 As to the claim of the Trial Examiner that costs in the jobber channel are over-weighted, it is submitted that this conclusion is contrary to the great weight of the testimony. John W. Boatwright, Respondent's Economist, definitely testified that, in the interest of conservatism, his cost study "added a burden of cost to the jobber gallon to which it is not entitled" (4775), and that:

"Q. Is it definitely your judgment that the method you have used overburden the jobber gallon as contrasted with the reseller channel gallon?

"A. That is true." (4776).

The claim of the Trial Examiner that "costs * * * in the jobber channel are under-weighted" is answered by Dr. Boatwright in the following testimony:

"Q. Basing your answer on your knowledge of the Respondent's business, on your training and knowledge as an economist and accountant, do you believe that it actually costs the Respondent as much as 16/100 of a cent a gallon to sell gasoline to the Detroit jobbers?

"A. I know that is the outside top figure." (4778-9).

544 (m) To the Conclusions of Law of the Trial Examiner (Report, p. 43) in their entirety.

It appears to Respondent that, if it has not justified the differential in question, there never can be a case of this kind in which a differential justification can be established. This is for the reason that the justification depends, to a large extent, upon expert opinion testimony as to the propriety of allocation of costs as between various channels of distribution. It is a matter of common experience that experts often disagree. The Robinson-Patman Act requires only that price differentials make due allowance for differences in cost of sale and delivery—but if a Respondent is held to mathematical exactness, his analysis of costs is invariably subject to a variance of expert opinion, which fact renders the justification of a price differential onerous. (7967). It is, therefore, respectfully submitted that a reasonable administration of the Robinson-Patman Act suggests in this case that the Commission should carefully review the question of the propriety 545 of the rejection by the Trial Examiner of the economic views and opinions of Respondent's expert witness, which, as the record shows, were arrived at only after many months of investigation and study. (7922) (7966).

546

IV.

This question is presented by Paragraph VIII of the Trial Examiner's Report, on Pages 44 to 47 (inclusive) thereof. It involves the inquiry as to whether the 5¢ per gallon differential granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, from September 1, 1936 to March 1, 1938, on tank wagon deliveries of gasoline, under the price charged other reseller tank wagon customers in the Detroit area for gasoline of like grade and quality, was granted in good faith to meet an equally low (or lower) price of a competitor of Respondent.

Respondent takes no general exception to the Report of the Trial Examiner, as stated upon this question, nor to the Conclusion of Fact included on Page 47 of said Report; but makes specific exceptions thereto as follows:

(a) That the question presented by said Paragraph VIII is moot, and should have been so reported by the Trial Examiner.

547 (b) That the statement by the Trial Examiner on Page 44, to the effect that this question requires the separate findings, is erroneous, as a matter of law.

(c) That the Trial Examiner, in the Conclusion of Fact, reported on page 47, should have included, in addition to the finding reported therein, that the differential in question was granted in good faith by Respondent.

(Respondent notes, in this connection, that the Trial Examiner, under the heading "Conclusion of Law" (Report, p. 47) finds (with the qualification noted in the following paragraph) that the granting of such differential "was lawful", which finding doubtless implies that it was "granted in good faith by Respondent", as a matter of law).

(d) Respondent specifically excepts to that part of the Conclusion of Law, on Page 47 of said Report, insofar as it incorporates the proviso "Unless the granting of the .5¢ per gallon differential to Ned's Auto Supply Company constituted price discrimination, the effect of which was, is or may be substantially to lessen competition be-
548 tween Ned's Auto Supply Company's retail gasoline service stations and those operated by (other) customers of Respondent * * *". This specific exception is taken by Respondent upon the ground that, the Trial Examiner having expressly found that said differential "was made to meet an equally low or lower price of a competitor or competitors (of Respondent), for branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality, and to retain Ned's (Auto Supply) Company's business", as a matter of law, the question appended by the Trial Examiner as the last paragraph of "Fourth Question" (Page 44 of Report) is redundant and immaterial.

549 V.

To Paragraph IX on Pages 47 to 50 (inclusive) of said Report, Respondent takes no general exception, insofar as the Trial Examiner reports that the selection of the four dealers (Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company) and their recognition by Respondent as jobbers, were lawful.

Respondent does, however, specifically except to certain portions of said Paragraph IX, in the following respects and on the following grounds:

(a) To the statements incorporated in said Paragraph IX on Page 48 of said Report, to the effect Respondent disregarded the Federal Trade Commission definition of the term "jobber" and "adopted its own standard, which required a greater showing of financial stability but dispensed with any showing as to the manner or method of resale * * *"; also to the reference in the second paragraph on Page 48 of said Report, wherein it is 550 stated that Respondent's definition of a "jobber" is different than that promulgated by Federal Trade Commission.

Respondent contends that there is no testimony in the record to substantiate these findings.

(b) To the statements twice occurring in the Report of the Trial Examiner, on Page 49 thereof, to the effect that the recognition by Respondent of Ned's Auto Supply Company as a jobber was a "forced recognition". (In taking this specific exception, Respondent does not in any respect waive its claim that the recognition of Ned's Auto Supply Company as a jobber was done to meet competition; but Respondent excepts only to the finding that said recognition was "forced" or the result of coercion.)

There is no testimony in the record to substantiate such a finding.

(c) To the conclusion of law, on Page 49 of said Report, insofar only as it purports to qualify the finding that the selection by Respondent of the four jobber dealers in question, and their recognition by Respondent as jobbers 551 was bona fide; Respondent submitting, in that regard, that the qualification of the Trial Examiner's finding, as stated in said Conclusion of Law, is unwarranted and improper.

(d) That the Trial Examiner failed specifically to answer the Fifth Question, as to whether the selection of the four jobber dealers in question and their recognition by Respondent as jobbers was bona fide; the answer being that "their selection and recognition by Respondent as jobbers was lawful"; which conclusion doubtless implies, however, as a matter of law, that their selection and recognition by Respondent as jobbers was "bona fide."

552 VI.

To Paragraph X on Pages 50 to 55 (inclusive) of said Report, Respondent takes no general exception, insofar as the Trial Examiner answers "yes" to the Sixth Question, to-wit:

"Were the differentials in price accorded the four dealers, recognized by Respondent as jobbers, made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors, or the services or facilities furnished by competitors."

Respondent does, however, specifically except to certain portions of said Paragraph X, in the following respects and on the following grounds:

(a) To the statement on Page 50 of the Report, to the effect that during the period in which Ned's Auto Supply Company received the .5¢ differential, its gallonage increased from approximately 2,400,000 to approximately 4,800,000 gallons; the record showing that its gallonage of gasoline was as follows: 1936,—2,400,000; 1937,—4,240,000; 1938,—4,800,000; 1939,—4,200,000; 1940,—4,200,000 (3082); and that after it went on the tank car 553 delivery basis its gallonage decreased.

(b) To the failure of the Trial Examiner to report that, according to the uncontroverted testimony of the Respondent's witness, James E. Dyer, of Sinclair Refining Company, the universal practice of the oil industry throughout the United States is to grant a differential margin in price as between tank wagon and tank car deliveries of gasoline ranging from 1½¢ minimum to 3¢ maximum, with an average of more than 2¢,—the amount depending upon location, and population density, and that a differential of 1½¢ is about as low as the differential ever becomes. (Record,—pp. 1515-16).

(c) To the failure of the Trial Examiner to report that the competitive offers of National Refining Company made to Wayne Oil Company were also made to Stikeman Oil Company (1888) (1892); which competitive offer was to furnish its branded gasoline (1905) which it represented as of better quality than Standard Red Crown (1907) at a price more than .5¢ less per gallon than Respondent was charging for tank car deliveries (1892).

554 (d) To the failure of the Examiner to report that in 1935, Wayne Oil Company, while receiving gasoline from Respondent on a tank wagon delivery basis at regular tank wagon prices, operated one station in Detroit,—at the corner of Vinewood Avenue and Grand Boulevard,—at which gasoline was furnished by Highland Oil Company, distributors of Hi-Speed Gasoline, a major brand gasoline, by tank wagon delivery, at a price of one cent lower than Standard Oil Company's price (1893).

(e) To the Conclusion of Law, on Page 55 of said Report, insofar only as the same contains the proviso to the effect that:

"Unless the differentials granted the four dealers, above named, constitute price discriminations, the effect of which was, is or may be, substantially to lessen competition, or tend to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with said four dealers, or with the customers of either Respondent or said four dealers * * *:"

(f) To the failure of the Trial Examiner, in the Conclusion of Fact on Page 55 of said Report, specifically to answer in the affirmative, or at all, the question as to 555 Respondent's good faith, as propounded in the Sixth Question on Page 50 of said Report:

(Respondent notes, in this connection, that the Trial Examiner, under the heading "Conclusion of Law", on Page 55 of said Report, finds that "the granting of the differentials was lawful", which finding doubtless implies as a matter of law, that the differentials were "made in good faith".)

556 VII.

To Paragraph XI on Page 55 to 71 (inclusive) of said Report, wherein the Trial Examiner answers "yes" to the question identified as Seventh Question and appearing on Page 55 of said Report, in form as follows:

"Do the differentials in price accorded the four jobbers constitute price discrimination, the effect of which is, or may be, substantially to lessen competition, or tend to injure, destroy or prevent competition with said four dealers, or with the customers of either Respondent or the said four dealers."

Respondent further specifically excepts to said Paragraph XI of said Report on the following grounds:

(The following specific exceptions are not inclusive nor substitutional of the foregoing general exceptions to said Paragraph XI).

(a) That consideration of and answer to said Seventh

Question are unwarranted and improper, in view of the Trial Examiner's answers to the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Questions.

557 (b) That in view of the Trial Examiner's report relative to Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company (Report, pp. 58 and 59), Respondent is entitled to a forthwith dismissal of the complaint, insofar as it concerns said two jobbers.

(c) To the failure of the Examiner to report the uncontroverted testimony as to the reasons why Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and certain of its reseller customers, gave discounts of 2¢ per gallon on gasoline in 1938 or 1939, as referred to on Page 59 of the Report; also as to the reasons why it (Citrin-Kolb Oil Company) was able to "make money" on the Langer & Cohen contract, referred to on Page 59 of the Report; also as to the reasons why Citrin-Kolb Oil Company gave price and rent concessions to certain of its reseller customers in 1938, 1939 and 1940. (Reasons appear in the undisputed testimony of Max Biber, —record, pp. 3218),—(1384-1425).

(d) To the statement of the Trial Examiner in Paragraph 2, Page 60 of the Report, to the effect that Ned's Auto Supply Company, following granting by Respondent of both the .5¢ differential on September 1, 1936, and 558 the 1.5¢ differential on March 7, 1938, reduced its price on Red Crown gasoline to the public (Record, p. 240-2 and Commission's Exhibits 3 and 22).

(e) To the statement of the Trial Examiner, on Pages 61, 62 and 63 of the Report, to the effect that in 1938, 1939 and 1940, Ned's Auto Supply Company granted discounts and premiums on retail sales of gasoline, without stating with particularity the competitive conditions in the Detroit area which made such concessions necessary if Ned's Auto Supply Company was to maintain even a semblance of competition with nearby retail gasoline competitors (Record, pp. 3153-3189); also without stating the uncontroverted testimony that no other or different price concessions on retail sales were made by Ned's Auto Supply Company after it went on a tank car delivery and price basis than existed, or were made, before it went on said basis. (Record, p. 3154).

(f) To the statement of the Trial Examiner, on Page 64 of said Report, to the effect that the retail gasoline price war of 1937-8-9 was caused and contributed to by

Ned's Auto Supply Company, Langer's, Bright's,
559 Hickey's, and Firestone; without reporting the testimony of Paul A. Raupagh, Manager of the Detroit Division of Respondent, wherein, at great length, an analysis of the causes of the Detroit price war of 1937-1939 were discussed and analyzed, and whereby it was established that Ned's Auto Supply Company and Citrin-Kolb Oil Company were, neither one of them, even a contributing factor in such "price war",—which was the result of fundamental economic conditions prevailing in the entire industry (Record, pp. 3262-3274); and that in 1939 economic conditions in the gasoline industry became stabilized (Record, p. 3274).

(g) To the statement of the Trial Examiner in the Report to the effect that the price differentials accorded Citrin-Kolb Oil Company were in excess of its cost of sale and delivery (Paragraph 5, on p. 65, of Report); without, however, reporting that a detailed cost analysis of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company's sale and delivery costs showed a per gallon cost on gasoline sold and delivered at wholesale, as follows:

560 1937—1.30 cents per gallon
1938—1.41 cents per gallon
1939—1.69 cents per gallon
1940—1.53 cents per gallon

Average—1937-1940 (inclusive) 1.4825 cents per gallon. (Record, p. 3031).

And, whereas, in the case of Wayne Oil Company, the comparable cost figures, based on wholesale operations only (Record, p. 2042, 2046), were as follows:

1938—1.501 cents per gallon
1939—1.451 cents per gallon
1940—1.489 cents per gallon

Average—1938-1940 (inclusive) 1.480 cents per gallon. (Record, p. 2010.)

(Note: It should be stated that this testimony as to Wayne Oil Company was stricken by the Trial Examiner (2049). A motion made by Respondent to the Commission was denied on December 28, 1942. In view of 561 statements of the Trial Examiner, made in the Report, to the effect that the differentials accorded jobbers were in excess of cost of sale and delivery when considered from the standpoint of the jobbers' operations, it is respectfully submitted that this data as to sale and delivery costs of Wayne Oil Company should now be considered by the Commission, as well as the corresponding data as to the sale and delivery costs of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company).

(h) To the statement of the Trial Examiner in the Report, to the effect that "price cutting at Ned's stations has been almost continuous. It has been true over a long period", (Report, p. 62); whereas the testimony abundantly shows that Ned's Auto Supply Company was and is not a price-cutting marketer of gasoline (Record, p. 3472) (Record, p. 3187-93) (Record, p. 3217).

(i) To the statement of the Trial Examiner in the Report to the effect that "the cost to the Sun Oil Company of delivering gasoline from its bulk plants to its service stations in the Detroit area, including the cost of operating the bulk plants, is less than ½¢ a gallon (Report, p. 66, Paragraph 2); whereas, the Trial Examiner omits to 562 report the testimony to the effect that Sun Oil Company delivers only one grade of gasoline, instead of three grades, as in the case of Respondent (1381); that Sun Oil Company's figure included no administrative costs for executives' services (1382); that Sun's deliveries are made on route schedule (1382); that Sun's trucks operate 18 hours a day (1382); that Sun delivers a minimum of 2000 gallons of gasoline to a customer (1382), whereas Citrin-Kolb Oil Company's minimum is 250 to 400 gallons (1382) and Respondent's minimum by tank wagon is 200 gallons (26).

(The testimony of P. H. Harrison, of Sun Oil Company, relied upon by the Trial Examiner as the basis for the above statement, covers only hauling costs and not the additional costs of selling gasoline by the tank wagon method—whereas, the cost differential established by Respondent reflects the difference in the cost of both sale and delivery.)

(j) To the statement of the Trial Examiner (Record, p. 67), quoting with approval the testimony of Professor Herbert F. Taggart, relative to the average cost of sale of gasoline at retail in Detroit; which testimony, as the record discloses (Record, p. 1021; Comm. Ex. 76) 563 is unreliable,—being based upon a so-called "cost survey", compiled upon hearsay, and reflecting widely varying reported sales costs of retail station operators,

(k) To the statements of the Trial Examiner in the Report, (p. 68 thereof); to the effect that the practice of selling on a tank car delivery and price basis to jobbers who are also retailers causes a "difficult competitive condition" in the Detroit area, which ultimately forces other dealers to lower their price to the public; which statement indicates that the Trial Examiner erroneously bases his report and recommendations on the basis of injury to competitors, as distinguished from injury to competition. (Vide testimony of Professor Fred Emerson Clark, of the School of Commerce of Northwestern University,—wherein he distinguishes between "injury to competitors" and "injury to competition".) (Record, p. 1647-8).

The theory of the Trial Examiner is reflected in the testimony of Professor Clark, as follows:

564 "Q. Is there anything in that set-up as it has been outlined in the preceding question, which, in your judgment as an Economist, tends to create a monopoly, tends to restrict or injure competition, or tends to lessen competition or restrain trade in any particular?"

Trial Examiner Ballinger: "or injure a competitor?"

"A. Why, the answer to the first part of the question is definitely 'no'. That tends to increase competition, having these various methods of selling. Now, as to injuring a competitor, it depends upon what you mean by 'injure'. If a company in this way distributes more effectively than a competitor that distributes in some other way, probably they will outsell him on the market." (Record, p. 1648). (Italics ours.)

565

VIII.

Respondent excepts to the Conclusions of Fact (Report, pp. 71 to 74 inclusive), insofar only as Subdivisions 6, 8, 9, 10 and 11 thereof are concerned, upon the ground that the same are not substantiated by the testimony, and upon the further ground that there is no evidence in the entire record to show that competition was injured, destroyed or prevented as the result of the granting by Respondent of the differentials in price here complained of; there being no testimony that a single one of the competitors of Ned's Auto Supply Company or Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was forced to discontinue business, but only that they were, in some instances, required to reduce their prices to the public so as to be competitive, and thereby foster and increase competition in the public interest, without in any manner promoting or creating monopoly (396-8).

"It leads away from monopoly,—certainly not toward it". (Record, p. 1642).

This exception to the Trial Examiner's Report is 566 based upon consideration of the meaning of the word "competition", as used in the Robinson-Patman Act. Injury to "competitors", we submit, is one concept; injury to "competition" is another and wholly different concept. Testimony relied upon by the Trial Examiner to sustain the above Conclusion of Fact relates wholly to claimed injuries to competitors of Respondent's four jobber customers in the Detroit area.

Yet the Trial Examiner, at Pages 54-55 of his report, finds as a matter of absolute fact (which is uncontradicted upon the record) that the four jobbers "could purchase from many other sources, immediately, a gasoline of comparable quality and at a better (lower) price than they are paying at the present time." (Italics ours.)

The Trial Examiner also finds that the jobber customer market is subject to intense competition (Report, p. 54); that Respondent's jobber customers have no contracts and the continuance of their patronage is subject to competition from day to day. (Report, p. 54).

The Trial Examiner also quotes with approval (and 567 finds accordingly) that "all of the many jobbers or distributors operating in the Detroit Metropolitan Area and listed in Respondent's Exhibit 55-A and B, and 57-A and B, are comparable in their operations to the operations of one or more of the four jobbers of Respondent; and that all of them purchase their gasoline requirements substantially below the prevailing tank wagon price, and, as a matter of fact, that many of them purchase even below the prevailing tank car price. In addition, many of them are not required to maintain their own bulk storage and their own trucks to receive the benefit of such lower prices * * *". (3373) (Italics ours.)

The Trial Examiner also finds that Respondent is in competition with all the suppliers listed in Respondent's Exhibits 55-A and B and 57-A and B, quoting with approval the testimony to that effect of Paul A. Raupagh, Manager of Respondent's Detroit Division (3373).

It thus appears that the Trial Examiner's Conclusions of Fact as to injury to competition are effectually rebutted by his own findings. For, if Respondent should, for any reason, discontinue selling gasoline to its four jobber 568 customers in the Detroit area, according to the findings of fact above mentioned, such jobbers could and would immediately purchase comparable gasoline from the suppliers mentioned in said exhibits at a price either equal to or lower than they (the said jobbers) are paying to Respondent.

The evidence is uncontradicted in this proceeding that there are literally thousands of situations in the middle west, and in the entire United States, comparable to the operations of the four jobbers of Respondent in Detroit (1723). It is also established by the record (1764) that the system of price differentials in the gasoline industry is economically sound and fundamentally essential in the conduct of the business. If, in this proceeding, a cease and desist order were issued against Respondent, restraining it from selling gasoline by the tank car method and at regular tank car prices to the four Detroit jobbers, or any of them, the testimony is uncontradicted that they could and would secure their requirements of gasoline in tank cars (or transport trucks) at as favorable or possibly a more favorable price than they are securing today (1776). Respondent would, in that case, be pro- 569 hibited from selling on the same basis and to the same classes of trade as its competitors were permitted to do (1778). This would result in a restraint of competition (1782). It would result in bringing about a less economical system of distribution than now exists (1783).

Respondent, therefore, specifically excepts to the Conclusion of Fact, insofar as the Trial Examiner finds that, notwithstanding the lower prices offered by Respondent's competitors, its trade practices tend to injure, destroy or prevent competition. By the standard applied by the Trial Examiner, the alternate suppliers of gasoline mentioned in Exhibits 55-A and B and 57-A and B are the ones which are creating the conditions complained of by competitors of Respondent's jobber customers.

570

IX.

To the failure of the Trial Examiner to report on the following questions necessary to the decision of this case, to wit:

(a) Is the trade practice complained of in these proceedings one which is widespread throughout the whole oil trade or industry in the United States, as well as in the Detroit, Michigan, area?

This exception is made upon the ground that testimony was introduced to show that in the oil industry (1504, 1717, 1723, 2766, 2768, 2771), and in industry generally (1651), the dual type of merchandising operation here complained of is universal throughout the United States; thereby indicating the propriety of a Trade Practice Conference, in lieu of this proceeding.

(b) Is this proceeding prosecuted in the public interest?

This exception is made upon the grounds that Respondent contends this proceeding is not prosecuted in the public interest.

All of Respondent's Exhibits for Identification (Exhibits 77, 78, 79, 80, 87, 88, 89, 90 and 91 for Identification), relating to this issue, were ordered excluded by the Trial Examiner, with the statement that, "The Federal 571 Trade Commission acts only in the public interest" (3542), and "The Commission acts only in the interest of the public" (3623), and "The Examiner is of the opinion, and so rules, that the documents tendered are not relevant to this proceeding or any matter in issue herein * * *" (3681).

Respondent renews its motion that all of these Exhibits for Identification offered in evidence by Respondent and excluded by the Trial Examiner, be received in evidence and considered by the Commission upon submission of this case upon the merits; to the end that the Commission may be definitely advised as to the truth and validity of Respondent's contention that this proceeding is not prosecuted in the public interest, but is diametrically opposed to the public interest.

572

X.

To the statement of the Trial Examiner in Paragraph XII, Page 75 of the Report, wherein it is averred that a large amount of testimony and some exhibits were included in the record, upon being offered by defendant, which are, however, classified as "Informative Evidence," which "have no bearing upon any question of fact alleged in the complaint and which constitute no legal nor equitable defense to this proceeding". As to the balance of said Paragraph, Respondent takes no exception, inasmuch as it answers the question propounded in Subdivision (9) (a), supra.

573

XI.

To Paragraph XIII, on Pages 76 and 77 of the Report, which paragraph is headed "Recommendation as to Form of Order", and to Subdivision (a), (b) and (c) thereof, in their entirety.

This exception is made upon the grounds that:

Subdivision (a) of said Paragraph XIII proposes that the Commission legislate upon matters involving Respondent's trade practices, and that Respondent be deprived, without warrant of any existing law, of the right to select and classify its customers.

Subdivision (b) of said Paragraph XIII proposes that the Commission impose upon Respondent, without warrant of any existing law, the duty of policing its products after the same are sold to jobber customers, so as to restrict the manner in which the same shall be resold,—thereby, in effect, recommending that Respondent be deprived, without warrant of law, of its right to sell gasoline at competitive tank car prices to any jobber customer who may resell the same at retail direct to the public; there being no 574 existing law imposing such last mentioned restriction.

Subdivision (c) of said Paragraph XIII proposes that the Commission impose upon Respondent, without warrant of any existing law, the duty of policing its products, after the same are sold to jobber customers who are not retailers, so as unlawfully to control the price at which the same shall be sold by said jobber to its reseller customers.

Respondent respectfully requests that oral argument be permitted in support of the foregoing exceptions.

Respectfully submitted,
Standard Oil Company,
an Indiana corporation.
By Arthur J. Abbott,
Its Attorney.
Business Address:
2230 Buhl Building,
Detroit, Michigan.

---

219 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

At a regular session of the Federal Trade Commission, held at its office in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 9th day of October, A. D. 1945.

Commissioners:

Ewin L. Davis, Chairman,
Garland S. Ferguson,
William A. Ayres,
Robert E. Freer.

* * (Caption—4389) * * *

FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS AND CONCLUSION.

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 (Robinson-Patman Act), the Federal Trade Commission on November 29, 1940, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Standard Oil Company, a corporation, charging it with violation of the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of the said Clayton Act as amended. After the issuance of said complaint, the filing of respondent's answer thereto, and the taking of partial testimony and other evidence in support of the complaint, the Commission, on April 23, 1941, issued and subsequently served upon the respondent an order amending said complaint, which order further provided that the testimony and other evidence heretofore taken be adopted and considered as having been taken in support of the allegations of the complaint as amended and that the answer 220 of the respondent filed to the original complaint be adopted as respondent's answer to the complaint as amended. Thereafter, testimony and other evidence in support of and in opposition to the allegations of said complaint as amended were introduced before a trial examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and said testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. Thereafter, this proceeding regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission upon said complaint as amended, answer thereto, testimony and other evidence, report of the trial examiner upon the evidence and exceptions filed thereto, briefs filed in support of and in opposition to the complaint, and oral argument of counsel; and the Commission, having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises, makes this its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom:

Findings as to the Facts.

Paragraph One: The respondent, Standard Oil Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business located at 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Paragraph Two: The respondent is engaged in the business of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products among and between the various states of the United States. Respondent sells three brands of gasoline—"Solite with Ethyl," "Red Crown," and "Stanolind." Red Crown is respondent's regular house-brand gasoline and constitutes approximately 90 percent of its sales in the Detroit metropolitan area, while Solite with Ethyl constitutes 7 to 10 percent and Stanolind, 3 or 4 percent. Respondent has several refineries, one of which is located in Whiting, Indiana. Crude oil to supply its refineries is derived from various sources but principally from the so-called Mid-Continent fields in Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Wyoming. Respondent sells its products throughout a territory consisting of 14 states, principally located in the Middle West. This territory is divided into 27 divisions or fields; with a branch office in each 221 field in charge of a manager or superintendent.

One of such divisions or fields is known as the "Detroit Field," which embraces all or part of thirteen counties in southern Michigan, including the Cities of Detroit, Lansing, Pontiac, Jackson, and Ann Arbor. The "Detroit Area,"as distinguished from the "Detroit Field," includes only the City of Detroit and its suburbs, Hamtramck, Dearborn, and Highland Park in Wayne County, which is also referred to as the "Detroit Metropolitan Area."

The respondent has no refinery in the State of Michigan. Gasoline and other petroleum products sold and distributed by the respondent in the Detroit Field are transported from its refinery at Whiting, Indiana, by tankers through the Great Lakes to respondent's marine terminal at River Rouge in the outskirts of Detroit. This marine terminal has a storage capacity of about 1,500,000 barrels of 42 gallons each. During the summer months, deliveries are made from the Whiting refinery every week and sometimes twice a week. In the fall sufficient gasoline is delivered and stored to take care of estimated requirements during the winter months when navigation through the Great Lakes is closed.

During the years from 1936 to and including 1940 respondent supplied from 16.2 percent to 17.4 percent of all the branded and unbranded gasoline sold in the Detroit Metropolitan Area. The total sales made by respondent in said area during that period amounted to 62,198,750 gallons in 1936, 70,015,200 gallons in 1937, 60,448,200 gallons in 1938, 70,279,818 gallons in 1939, and 74,627,712 gallons in 1940.

During the periods of time herein mentioned respondent operated six bulk plants in the Detroit Metropolitan Area. Delivery of gasoline to these bulk plants was made from the River Rouge marine terminal by tank car or transport truck. Tank-car delivery by railroad was for the most part discontinued about February 1, 1940. Transportation of gasoline by transport truck was accomplished by transportation companies employed by the respondent. The capacity of a transport truck is approximately the same as a tank car. In some instances the respondent has shipped gasoline and other petroleum products from its refinery at Whiting, Indiana, directly to purchasers thereof located in the Detroit Metropolitan Area. Respondent maintains, and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a course of trade in said products in commerce among and between the various states of the United States.

222 Paragraph Three: Prior to September 10, 1936, respondent operated all retail service stations owned or leased by it in the Detroit metropolitan area, but on that date it discontinued all retail operations and leased or sublet all stations owned or leased by it to independent operators.

In the course and conduct of its business in the Detroit metropolitan area, the respondent, since September 10, 1936, has regularly supplied gasoline to approximately 358 retail service stations. Respondent owned approximately 200 and leased 8 of these stations. The remaining 150 stations which were supplied directly by the respondent were owned or operated by independent operators, with whom the respondent entered into written agreements known as "Dealer's Agreement, Form 461," by which agreements respondent agreed to sell, and the dealers agreed to purchase, all of their requirements of Solite with Ethyl, Standard Red Crown, and Stanolind gasoline for the period of time specified in said agreements. These latter stations were known as contract service stations as distinguished from the leased service stations hereinabove described.

Deliveries of gasoline to the leased and contract service stations in the Detroit metropolitan area were made from respondent's bulk plants by tank trucks owned by respondent and operated by its salaried employees. This method of delivery is known as "tank-wagon" delivery. The price at which respondent sold its gasoline to said leased and contract service stations was its "posted tank-wagon price," which was fixed from time to time by the general office of the respondent in Chicago.

In addition, the respondent also supplied gasoline to four dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area—Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, which were classified by respondent as jobbers and which, with the exception of Ned's Auto Supply Company, supplied respondent's gasoline to from 94 to 106 retail service stations. Deliveries to these dealers were generally made by tank car, and after February 1, 1940, by transport truck, direct from respondent's River Rouge terminal. During the periods of time hereinafter described, the 223 Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., and Wayne Oil Company sold a substantial portion of the gasoline purchased by them from the respondent direct to the public through retail service stations owned and operated by them. Ned's Auto Supply Company was engaged entirely in the retail sale of gasoline to the public through its own stations.

A third class of customer in the Detroit Metropolitan area to whom the respondent supplied gasoline was large commercial users of gasoline, who were usually sold on contracts made by the general office of the respondent in Chicago. The gasoline so purchased was usually delivered either direct from the Whiting refinery or the River Rouge terminal by tank car or transport truck.

Paragraph Four: In the course and conduct of its business, since June 19, 1936, respondent has discriminated in price by selling its gasoline for resale direct to the purchasing public to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., and Wayne Oil Company, and subsequent to March 7, 1938, to Ned's Auto Supply Company, at prices which were substantially lower than the prices charged by respondent to its other retailer-purchasers in the Detroit metropolitan area for gasoline of the same grade and quality. Each of the aforesaid purchasers has, since said date, owned or operated in the Detroit metropolitan area one or more gasoline stations where said respondent's gasoline so purchased has been resold at retail to consumers thereof in competition with other retailers of gasoline purchasing the same from the respondent or from other manufacturers. The respondent sold its largest selling brand, Red Crown gasoline, to said four jobbers at its tank-car price, which was 1½ cents per gallon lower than the prices charged by it for the same gasoline to its other retail dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Paragraph Five: In allowing jobber classification in the Detroit metropolitan area to the four jobbers hereinbefore named, the respondent required only that said jobbers purchase substantial quantities of gasoline, own or control bulk plants where gasoline in large quantities 224 could be delivered, and have sufficient financial standing or credit rating to warrant the extension of credit. There was no requirement that said jobbers should sell only at wholesale.

The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, although selling the respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public, was nevertheless classified by the respondent as a jobber in 1928 or 1929 and since that it has been allowed the tank-car price on gasoline purchased from respondent. It operated from 1 to 5 retail stations from 1936 to 1939, from 5 to 8 stations in 1940 and 1941, and is operating 5 retail service stations at the present time. During this time it purchased from the respondent in excess of 5,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually. The percentage of gasoline so purchased which was sold at retail by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company through its retail service stations was 29.4 percent in 1936, 15.4 percent in 1937, 7.3 percent in 1938, 10.1 percent in 1939, and 6.5 percent in 1940. During the period from January 1, 1938, to December 31, 1940, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company sold a million gallons of gasoline annually to Langer and Cohn, retail service station operators, at 1 cent per gallon off tank-wagon price and in addition sold another retail service station operator at ½ cent per gallon off tank-wagon price. For a short period of time Citrin-Kolb Oil Company issued "Special Savings Cards," which entitled the holders to a 2-cents-per-gallon discount on the purchase of gasoline from one of the retail service stations operated by it.

The Wayne Oil Company, although selling the respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public, was nevertheless classified by respondent as a jobber in 1935 and since that time it has been allowed the tank-car price on all gasoline purchased from respondent. Prior to September 8, 1939, the Wayne Oil Company operated no retail service stations but subsequent thereto has operated from 2 to 6 stations and is operating 2 stations at the present time. During this period its annual purchases of gasoline from respondent have ranged from 1,348,348 gallons in 1936, to 2,341,394 gallons in 1940. The percentage of gasoline so purchased which was sold at retail by the Wayne Oil Company through its retail service stations was 7.6 percent in 1939 and 14.2 percent in 1940. There is no evidence that the Wayne Oil Company ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than the posted tank-wagon price charged 225 by respondent to its dealers or that any discount was allowed to purchasers by any retail service station operated by it.

The Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., although selling the respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public was nevertheless classified by respondent as a jobber in 1932 and since that time it has been allowed the tank-car price on all gasoline purchased from respondent. In 1938 the Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., discontinued the operation of retail service stations. Since 1936 its annual purchases of gasoline from the respondent have ranged from 2,255,000 gallons in 1936 to 1,772,911 gallons in 1940. The percentage of gasoline so purchased which was sold at retail by the Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., through retail service stations operated by it was 27.8 percent in 1936, 9.1 percent in 1937, and 0.3 percent in 1938. There is no evidence that this company ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than posted tank-wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers or that any discount was allowed to purchasers by any retail service station operated by it.

Ned's Auto Supply Company was classified by respondent as a jobber on March 7, 1938, and since that time it has been allowed the tank-car price on all gasoline purchased from the respondent. Ned's Auto Supply Company does not sell other resellers of gasoline but has at all times sold the gasoline purchased from the respondent to the public through its own service stations. In 1938 Ned's Auto Supply Company operated 5 retail service stations, which was increased to 6 in 1940. In addition, Ned's Auto Supply Company operates a station known as "Charley's Service Station," which is owned by Ned's Auto Supply Company and operated by an individual on a salary-and-commission basis. At all times since March 7, 1938, it has been the practice of Ned's Auto Supply Company to sell its gasoline below the prevailing retail service-station price or to give premium and discounts from its posted price.

Paragraph Six: In addition to the discriminations in price hereinabove described, the respondent, in the course and conduct of its business during the period from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938, sold its gasoline to Ned's 226 Auto Supply Company at .5 cents per gallon less than the price that it was charging for the same gasoline to its other retail dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Since 1918 Ned's Auto Supply Company has been a customer of respondent and until March 7, 1938, received its gasoline from respondent by regular tank-wagon delivery. In 1936 Ned's Auto Supply Company purchased 2,401,600 gallons of gasoline from the respondent, which it resold to the public through its four retail outlets or service stations. On September 1, 1936, respondent allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company a price of .5 cents off regular tank-wagon price, which was allowed on all gasoline purchased from September 1, 1936, until March 7, 1938. When respondent allowed this price differential, it made no change in its form of delivery of gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company but continued to sell it on the regular tank-wagon basis, ~~making~~ delivery from respondent's bulk plants direct to Ned's Auto Supply Company service stations.

Paragraph Seven: Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., sell the respondent's gasoline at both wholesale and retail. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., although selling a substantial portion of respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public were nevertheless arbitrarily classified by the respondent as jobbers and as such received from the respondent a lower price on gasoline than the respondent charged its other retail customers in the metropolitan Detroit area who purchased gasoline of like grade and quality direct from the respondent.

Ned's Auto Supply Company, although selling all of its gasoline purchased from the respondent at retail direct to the consuming public was nevertheless arbitrarily classified by the respondent as a jobber and as such received from the respondent a lower price on gasoline than the respondent charged its other retail customers in the metropolitan Detroit area who purchased gasoline of like grade and quality direct from the respondent.

Paragraph Eight: The volume of gasoline sold in the Detroit metropolitan area through retail gasoline stations is more or less constant, and fluctuations that occur are chiefly due to variation in the number of cars in use from year to year. A lower price at one service station than at another is an important factor in the purchasing public's mind, particularly when the difference in price occurs in the major brands of gasoline. Any difference in price between two stations selling the same gasoline or major brands of gasoline is very important in influencing the flow of business.

227 The margin of profit of the retail service-station operator between the tank-wagon price which he pays and the prevailing retail service-station price on the regular brand of gasoline of major companies is small. The retailer's margin between respondent's posted tank-wagon price and prevailing retail selling price on its Red Crown gasoline has been only 3.3 cents a gallon in the metropolitan area of Detroit since November 19, 1939. Consequently, any reduction allowed to a retail service-station operator below the regular tank-wagon price gives such operator a material advantage over other retail operators who pay the full tank-wagon price.

In 1936 Ned's Auto Supply Company had four retail stations and its gasoline volume was 2,401,000 gallons. On September 1, 1936, respondent began to sell gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company at .5 cents per gallon below posted tank-wagon price by tank-wagon delivery. In 1937 Ned's Auto Supply Company was openly advertising cut prices, and its volume increased to 4,240,500 gallons.

On March 7, 1938, Ned's Auto Supply Company began to purchase from respondent in tank-car quantities at tank-car prices. Although the total volume of gasoline sold in the Detroit metropolitan area during the year 1938 was 10 percent less than the volume sold in 1937, the volume of gasoline sold by Ned's Auto Supply Company increased from 4,240,500 gallons in 1937 to 4,880,500 gallons in 1938.

In 1937 Ned's Auto Supply Company was selling respondent's Red Crown gasoline to the public at approximately 2 cents per gallon below the prevailing retail service-station price, which continued, with variations, until the latter part of 1939. In 1939 and 1940, when Ned's Auto Supply Company's posted price was approximately the same as the prevailing retail price, it gave various undercover discounts and premiums. It has from time to time given commercial discounts varying from 1 to 2 cents per gallon off the posted price. The classification as to who was regarded a commercial customer varied from time to time, depending upon the competitive situation. During August to November 1939 Ned's Auto Supply Company issued trading stamps of a value of 2 cents for each gallon purchased, which were redeemable in merchandise or in gasoline at Ned's Auto Supply Company's stores. Price cutting at Ned's Auto Supply Company's stations has been almost continuous; and this company has been responsible in starting most of the retail price cutting in major-brand gasoline in Detroit over a period of several years. This practice on the part of Ned's Auto Supply Company has caused substantial damage to other retail service-station operators selling respondent's Red Crown gasoline and also to retail service-station operators 228 selling other brands of gasoline, and the ability of Ned's Auto Supply Company to continue the price-cutting practice was greatly enhanced through the discriminations in price allowed it by the respondent while at the same time limiting other retailer-customers to a margin of profit of approximately 3.3 cents per gallon.

The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company annually sold at retail from 6.5 percent to 29.4 percent of the gasoline purchased from respondent, through service stations operated by it during the years 1936 to 1940. In 1938 or 1939 the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company gave discount cards to purchasers of gasoline at one of the stations operated by it entitling the holder to a discount of 2 cents a gallon on respondent's Red Crown gasoline.

The Commission finds that the price discriminations granted by the respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company, both prior to March 7, 1938, and subsequent thereto, and the price discriminations granted to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., on gasoline sold by them at retail have given a substantial competitive advantage to these favored dealers in their retail operations over other retailers of gasoline, including retailer-customers of the respondent. This competitive advantage is capable of being used, and by Ned's Auto Supply Company and to some extent by Citrin Kolb Oil Company has been used, to divert large amounts of business from other retailers of gasoline, including customers of the respondent, with resultant injury to them and to their ability to continue in business and successfully compete with said dealers in the retailing of gasoline.

The Commission further finds that the discriminations in price allowed to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company permitted this dealer to sell a million gallons of gasoline annually to one ailer-customer—Langer and Cohn—from January 1, 38, to December 31, 1940, at a delivered price of one cent

r gallon less than posted tank wagon price and to sell other customer at a discount of one half cent per gallon.
e Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, by passing on in part to nger and Cohn the benefits of the discriminatory prices allowed by respondent, enabled said Langer and 9 Cohn to sell said gasoline to the consuming public at discounts of as much as two cents per gallon, which t only gave said Langer and Cohn a competitive advan-ge over other retailers of gasoline, including retailerstomers of the respondent, but also had the effect of verting business from such retailers to said Langer and ohn and of substantially lessening competition and injur-g, destroying, and preventing competition between said nger and Cohn and other retailers of gasoline, including tailer-customers of the respondent.

The Commission further finds that the effect of the dis-iminations in price allowed by the respondent to the ur dealers as herein described has been, and may be, bstantially to lessen competition and to injure, destroy,
d prevent competition with each of said four dealers d with their respective customers in the resale of gasone.

Paragraph Nine: As a defense to this proceeding the spondent introduced a series of exhibits (Respondent's xhibits 31-A to Q), with supporting testimony, to show st justification for the price differentials allowed Ned's uto Supply Company for the period from September 1, 36, to March 7, 1938.

The Commission finds that the evidence submitted by e respondent fails to establish that the price differenal allowed by respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company
.5 cents per gallon during the period from September 1, 36, to March 7, 1938, made only due allowance for differ-nces in respondent's cost of sale and delivery, resulting om the differing methods and quantities in which it sold gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company during the riod involved. The following are a few of the features respondent's cost justification which warrant its com-ete rejection as defense in the proceeding:

a. Respondent has attempted to make a comparison tween the cost of doing business with Ned's Auto Supply ompany and the cost of doing business with all of its other reseller-customers as a group. This fails to take into consideration the fact that the respondent's reseller-customers fall into several groups, such as service stations owned by respondent and leased to operators, stations leased by respondent and sublet to operators, 230 and independently owned stations to which respondent supplied gasoline. The costs of doing business would vary between these various groups. Furthermore, there were independent stations, transactions of which with respondent were comparable to those of Ned's Auto Supply Company, and comparison of the costs of these stations and Ned's Auto Supply Company would necessarily show a different result than that shown through respondent's having combined all kinds and types of its reseller stations.

b. Respondent has attempted to make a comparison between the costs of single-dump and multiple-dump deliveries. This is based upon the assumption that all deliveries made to Ned's Auto Supply Company were by single-dump delivery and all deliveries to respondent's other reseller customers by multiple-dump delivery. However, the respondent did not make full-load or single-dump deliveries in all cases to Ned's Auto Supply Company during the period involved but, instead, made both single-and-multiple-dump deliveries. There were also a substantial number of retail service stations located in the Detroit metropolitan area with tank capacity sufficient to take single-load deliveries, and a substantial number of single-load deliveries were made to such stations at respondent's regular tank-wagon price during the period involved.

c. Respondent attempted to segregate certain items of sales expense as not being influenced by Ned's Auto Supply Company and allocated them among all of respondent's other reseller-customers, with no charge being made against Ned's Auto Supply Company; for example, it was contended that when an account, such as Ned's Auto Supply Company, has been established, no further promotional sales work is necessary and should not be charged to such account. Among such items which respondent did not charge to Ned's Auto Supply Company were certain sales promotional services, such as driveway training, which is furnished to reseller-customers but which was not desired by, or furnished to, Ned's Auto Supply Company.

1 addition to the fact that certain promotional advertising hould be charged to Ned's Auto Supply Company, it further appears from the evidence that there are other 31 reseller-customers of the respondent whose accounts have been established and who do not require drive-ay training.

d. Respondent attempted to segregate certain items of xpense of an overhead nature as not being influenced by ed's Auto Supply Company, on the theory that such xpenses would not be appreciably influenced by the acquiition or loss of a single account, such as Ned's Auto upply Company, and, consequently, that it is proper to harge no part of these expenses to the business of Ned's uto Supply Company. The reason for not charging any f such items to the business of Ned's Auto Supply Comany would apply equally to the business of any other ingle retail service station.

e. There were certain other items of cost on which it as claimed by respondent that no exact allocation could e made, and, as to such items, the respondent apporoned them among its retail customers, exclusive of Ned's uto Supply Company, instead of allocating these costs n the basis of gallonage, which would have afforded no ost differential.

f. Respondent has included in its cost items certain ems of expense in connection with stations owned or leased y the respondent which were leased or sublet to the staion operator. Many of these costs apply directly to the andlord activities of the respondent and are not properly hargeable to, or considered as, costs of sale or delivery.

g. In allocating the sales expense of certain salesmen ho called on Ned's Auto Supply Company and other reail service stations, respondent attempted to estimate the ime spent at Ned's Auto Supply Company and compare he costs so determined as against all salesmen's costs, inluding salesmen who did not confine their activities solely o the Detroit metropolitan area. Furthermore, in estiating the time of the particular salesmen who called on Ned's Auto Supply Company, no consideration was given o the time which such salesmen spent in calling on serice stations which were not customers of the respondent.

h. The respondent allocated advertising expense in 32 such a manner as to show an alleged savings of .213 cents per gallon, or better than 40 percent of the price lifferential. In doing this, the respondent allocated the items of point-of-sale advertising which were supplied to Ned's Auto Supply Company, such as service signs, globes, banners, gan[illegible]s, and displays, by charging the cost of some directly and assigning others on the basis of outlets and arrived at the cost per gallon of these particular items by relating it to gallonage sold at Ned's Auto Supply Company. All other advertising costs were allocated to the gallonage of all reseller-customers, exclusive of Ned's Auto Supply Company. The advertising so charged consisted principally of advertising issued by the respondent for the purpose of creating consumer acceptance and increasing the sale of gasoline at all Standard stations, such as newspaper advertising, printed and direct-mail advertising, motion pictures, and outdoor signs. Such advertising was for the benefit of Ned's Auto Supply Company, as well as all other customers, and should accordingly have been allocated to Ned's Auto Supply Company, as well as to other customers, on a gallonage basis, in which event there would have been no cost differential to such items.

Paragraph Ten: As a further defense to this proceeding, respondent contended that the differential between the price of 1½c per gallon off tank-wagon price charged Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company and the tank-wagon price charged respondent's other retail dealers made only due allowance for differences in respondent's costs of sale and delivery resulting from the differing methods and quantities in which gasoline was sold and delivered to said jobbers.

Respondent first attempted to show justification of differential of 1½ cents per gallon between the tank-car and tank-wagon price by introducing evidence as to a survey made in the Kansas-Oklahoma field to show cost of selling jobbers, the results of which were compared with the cost of sale and delivery of gasoline by tank-wagon in the entire Detroit division. There is no evidence that the costs of sale and delivery by tank car to jobbers in the Kansas-Oklahoma field were the same or were substantially the same as, or have any relation to, the costs of sale and delivery of gasoline by tank car to jobbers in the De-233 troit metropolitan area. In fact, the evidence indicates that the costs of the jobber operations in the Kansas-Oklahoma field were not comparable with the jobber operations in the Detroit field. The volume sold was not comparable with the Detroit sales and the total annual sales to obbers in the Kansas-Oklahoma field were less than the nnual sale to one jobber, Citrin-Kolb Company, in Detroit, nd several of these jobbers purchased less gasoline annually than is sold at an average service station in Detroit. The tabulation of jobber expense in the Kansas-Oklahoma eld includes no items of consumer acceptance advertising xpense charged to such jobber operations, which is substantial in the Detroit metropolitan area. Furthermore, the cost computations for the Kansas-Oklahoma field do not eflect the true conditions or give a factual result since the gallonage sold to two jobbers, Gibson Oil Company and Kramer Oil Company, that handled nearly one half the gallonage sold in that field, was excluded in computing accounting and credit costs and included in computing upervision and selling costs.

In determining the costs of tank-wagon deliveries in the Detroit metropolitan area for the purpose of comparison with jobber costs in Kansas and Oklahoma, respondent used the total marketing costs for the entire Detroit field which were allocated to the reseller channel and leased service stations in its "Comparative Statement of Expense," known as "Form 189." Respondent divided the total marketing costs so allocated by the total reseller gallonage to arrive at the cost per gallon of sale and delivery n tank-wagon deliveries. This Comparative Statement of Expense is an expense record for the Detroit field prepared from time to time in respondent's regular course of business. Said form represents a breakdown of marketing expense between the channels of distribution, which are reseller channel, consumer channel, leased service stations, and other methods. The consumer channel is also known as the "direct-shipment channel" and includes deliveries to large industrial users of gasoline made either direct from the Whiting refinery or the River Rouge terminal. Such shipments usually originate with sales contracts made by the general office of the respondent on a bid basis. Shipments to jobbers were included in the consumer or direct-shipment channel in respondent's usual ac-
234 counting procedure. The respondent did not consider it necessary for its purpose to isolate the cost of the direct-shipment channel, which included sales to jobbers. Consequently, none of the expense allocations made on Form 189 are charged to either the direct-shipment channel or to the business done with jobbers, but, instead, such expense is distributed or scattered over the various channels appearing on said form. While this Comparative Statement of Expense may be considered by the respondent as sufficient to reflect company operations, the figures taken therefrom cannot properly reflect the cost of tank-wagon sales as compared with jobber sales. There are numerous items of cost which have been allocated to the reseller channel, a substantial portion of which should have been charged to jobber gallonage and, if so charged, would have substantially reduced the cost of reseller operation and in turn reduced the differential in cost between tank-wagon and jobber costs.

The Commission find that the attempted comparison between cost of jobber operations in the Kansas-Oklahoma field with cost of sale and delivery to dealers in the Detroit field taken from its Comparative Statement of Expense has no probative value in determining the cost differential between tank-car sales to jobbers and tank-wagon sales to dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Paragraph Eleven: In a further effort to show cost justification for the price differential of 1½ cents off tank-wagon price allowed to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, the respondent attempted to segregate the cost appearing on its Comparative Statement of Expense and to reallocate such costs to the reseller and jobber channels. For this purpose respondent prepared a modified form of its regular Comparative Statement of Expense showing costs allocated to jobbers, as well as to tank-wagon resellers, which was introduced into evidence as Respondent's Exhibit 101, together with explanation as to methods used, which was introduced as Respondent's Exhibits 99 and 100.

After consideration of the modified form of re-235 spondent's Comparative Statement of Expense and other exhibits and testimony submitted in connection therewith, the Commission finds that the evidence submitted by the respondent fails to establish that the price differential allowed by respondent to the above-named jobbers of 1½ cents per gallon off tank-wagon price made due allowance for differences in respondent's costs of sale and delivery resulting from differing methods and quantities in which it sold its gasoline to said jobbers. The following are a few of the features of respondent's cost justification which warrants its complete rejection as a defense in this proceeding:

a. In making this cost study the respondent did not mit its survey to cost differences which resulted from iffering methods or quantities in which gasoline was sold r delivered to the two classes of customers nor was it mited to determining savings, if any, which accrued by eason of tank-car or transport-truck delivery as compared ith tank-wagon delivery, but, instead, the respondent atempted to compare the cost of doing business with the ne class as compared with the other by arbitrarily allo-ating all of respondent's costs of every nature which could e charged to the expense of doing business in the Detroit eld, including Chicago general office costs allocated to that eld.

b. Respondent has compared the cost of marketing to e four jobbers located in the Detroit metropolitan area, hose business was confined to that area, with the cost of arketing gasoline to all its other dealers in the Detroit eld. The Detroit metropolitan area includes the City of etroit and the suburbs of Dearborn, Hamtramck, and ighland Park. The Detroit field includes the rural section ocated outside the Detroit metropolitan area, including ansing, Pontiac, and Ann Arbor, where different methods f delivery are involved since the rural section is supplied y small bulk plants operated by commission agents known s "B" stations as distinguished from the large bulk lants used to serve the Detroit metropolitan area operated y salaried employees and known as "A" stations. No actual costs study or investigation was made to determine the relation of sale and delivery costs in the entire 36 Detroit metropolitan field to those in the restricted Detroit metropolitan area. In fact, there is substantial vidence indicating that respondent's cost of marketing asoline to service stations in the rural areas of the Detroit ield through commission agents is higher than its cost of arketing through it large bulk plants to service stations n the Detroit metropolitan area.

c. In allocating cost items to the tank-wagon reseller hannel and the jobber channel, the respondent charged to he tank-wagon reseller channel a number of items which hould not have been charged to that particular channel nd failed to charge to the jobber channel cost items proprly chargeable to that channel.

d. For the purpose of this cost study, respondent has letermined the expense on leased service stations which nvolve landlord operations only and has carried such expense, after deducting income from rentals, into the general tank-wagon delivery expense allocated to the tank-wagon reseller channel. In fact, the landlord expense incident to the operation of respondent's leased service stations was carried separately in respondent's regular accounting procedure, as this expense has no bearing on the cost of marketing gasoline through the regular reseller channel but represented cost of maintenance, taxes, etc., on company-owned or leased service stations less revenue received, without consideration of the sale of gasoline or the expenses incident thereto.

e. It further appears from respondent's cost study that direct-shipment expense has been allocated for the most part on the basis of effort, while the allocation to the tank-wagon reseller channel has been made for the most part on the basis of gallonage except in accounts where allocation was made on the basis of effort in respondent's regular accounting procedure. The use of these two methods of allocation appears to be inconsistent, and the comparative results obtained do not properly reflect the difference in cost of sale and delivery between the tank-wagon and jobber channel.

f. While advertising comprises the largest single item of expense, only a small proportion, consisting of point-of-sale advertising, has been allocated between the tank-
237 wagon and jobber channel. The remaining advertising expense, commonly known as "consumer advertising," such as newspaper and billboard advertising, was improperly allocated to the tank-wagon channel alone and no part charged to the jobber channel. Consumer advertising costs cannot properly be separated between gasoline resold through jobber-operated retail stations and gasoline sold through other retail stations except upon the basis of gallonage, which, if used, would afford no cost differential.

Paragraph Twelve: As a further defense the respondent contends that the differential of ½¢ off tank wagon price allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938, and the differential of 1½¢ off tank wagon price allowed Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company since June 19, 1936, and the differential of 1½¢ off tank wagon price allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company from March 7, 1938, were all made in good faith to meet equally low or lower prices of competitors.

In support of this defense the respondent introduced evidence of competitive offers received by the four dealers from distributors of both major and minor brands of gasoline. Some of these offers were made prior to June 19, 1936, and some were made subsequent to June 19, 1936. Of those offers made subsequent to June 19, 1936, some were made after the filing of the complaint herein. In further support of this defense the respondent contended that the lower prices allowed the four dealers were made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor for the reason that said four dealers could at any time herein involved have purchased gasoline of grade and quality comparable to that sold by the respondent at equally low or lower prices from other suppliers in Detroit.

Based on the record in this case the Commission concludes as a matter of law that it is not material whether 238 the discrimination in price granted by the respondent to the said four dealers were made to meet equally low prices of competitors. The Commission further concludes as a matter of law that it is unnecessary for the Commission to determine whether the alleged competitive prices were in fact available or involved gasoline of like grade or quality or of equal public acceptance. Accordingly the Commission does not attempt to find the facts regarding those matters because, even though the lower prices in question may have been made by respondent in good faith to meet the lower prices of competitors, this does not constitute a defense in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy and prevent competition with the retail stations operated by the said named dealers and with stations operated by their retailer-customers.

Prior to June 19, 1936, the effective date of the Robinson-Patman amendment, Section 2 of the Clayton Act declared discriminations in price to be unlawful when the effect of such discriminations may be substantially to lessen competition or create a monopoly, with provisos permitting, among other things, discriminations in price "in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition". Under that proviso a discrimination in price made in good faith to meet competition might under proper circumstances have been a complete defense to a charge of unlawful price discrimination.

In framing the Robinson-Patman Act Congress recognized that the provision in Section 2 of the Clayton Act permitting discriminations in good faith to meet competition was indefinite and uncertain and had the effect of weakening Section 2. Consequently Congress discarded the proviso in Section 2 which made the meeting of competition in good faith a complete or absolute justification and made price differences due to differences in cost, market changes and marketability of the goods the only absolute justifications now available to a respondent charged with unlawful price discrimination. Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act contains no reference to lower prices made in good faith to meet competition. That matter was covered by Congress through a proviso in Section 2 (b), and such proviso 239 was "intended to operate only as a rule of evidence in a proceeding before the Federal Trade Commission".*

A prima facie case of violation of Section 2(a) may be established by providing (1) jurisdiction, (2) goods of like grade and quality, and (3) discrimination in price. Discrimination in price here was shown by proving a difference in the prices charged competing customers. Based upon the prima facie case thus shown the Commission may draw from such prima facie case a rebuttable presumption that the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or to injure, destroy or prevent competition. The burden then shifts to the respondent.

In rebuttal of the prima facie case the respondent under Section 2(b) may show that the respondent's lower price was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor. However, such a showing is not an absolute defense to a charge of unlawful discrimination and proof of meeting a competitor's equally low price can be availed of only to the extent it may rebut the prima facie case. The meeting of an equally low price of a competitor in good faith is not a defense to a charge of price discrimination where competitive injury is affirmatively shown and so replaces the rebuttable presumption of the prima facie case. This results from the difference between such a case and the prima facie case referred to in Section 2(b). Section 2(b) defines a prima facie case as "* * * proof * * * that there has been discrimination in price * * *".

---

* Congressional Record, June 8, 1936, p. 9410.

This definition must be compared with the prohibitions of Section 2(a) which makes such a discrimination unlawful only in the event it injuriously affects competition. If proof of good faith in meeting an equally low price of a competitor is made, then Commission could no longer rely upon its prima facie case, but must show additional and affirmative evidence that the effect of the discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or to injure, destroy or prevent competition between respondent and its competitors or between customers of the respondent or with the customers of such customers. Where such injurious effect on competition is affirmatively proved, the proof made as to meeting an equally low price of a competitor under the proviso of Section 2(b) does not constitute a substantive justification or defense.

The respondent may also introduce evidence in support of its affirmative defense tending to establish that the effect of the differential in price is not to substantially 240 lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with customers of the person granting the discrimination or competition with persons knowingly receiving the benefit thereof. The respondent may also show in support of its justifications (1) that the differential proved makes only due allowances for differences in cost resulting from the differing methods or quantities sold or delivered; (2) that the differentials were the result of price changes in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned. The establishment of any such contentions would preclude any ~~conclusion~~ that the law had been violated.

The provision for a showing of good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor cannot be construed as a carte blanche exemption to a respondent to engage in discriminations in price which have the adverse effects on competition proscribed under Section 2(a). Such a construction would constitute recognition of the soundness of the principle that one competitor's violation of law justifies its violation by another. It would also justify discrimination by a chain organization to meet the equally low price of a single unit competitors who had not discriminated at all as well as discrimination to meet the price of any competitor whose discrimination is lawful because justified by cost differences. It would defeat the substantive purposes and requirements of Section 2(a) in such situations as well as in the present case, where discrimination to meet the equally low prices of a competitor has produced the adverse effects on competition which it was the main purpose of the section and of the Act to prevent.

Paragraph Thirteen: Since the record in this case affirmatively shows that the discriminations in price in favor of the named jobbers and in favor of Ned's Auto Supply Company as a tank-wagon purchaser from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938, and as a tank-wagon purchaser thereafter, have resulted in injuring, destroying, and preventing competition between said favored dealers and retail dealers in respondent's gasoline and other major brands of gasoline, the Commission is of the opinion, and so finds, that the defense of meeting an equally low price of a competitor as provided by subsection (b) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act is not available to the respondent on the basis of the present record.

Conclusion.

The aforesaid discriminations in price by the respondent, as herein found, constitute violations of subsection (a) of Section 2 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act 241 to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" approved October 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 (Robinson-Patman Act).

By the Commission.

Ewin L. Davis,
Chairman.

Dated this 9th day of October, A. D., 1945.

Attest:
Otis B. Johnson,
(Seal) Secretary.

242 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

At a regular session of the Federal Trade Commission, held at its office in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 9th day of October, A. D. 1945.

Commissioners:

Ewin L. Davis, Chairman,
Garland S. Ferguson,
William A. Ayres,
Robert E. Freer.

* * (Caption—4389) * * *

ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission as amended, answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint as amended and in opposition thereto taken before a trial examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, ~~report of~~ the trial examiner upon the evidence and exceptions filed thereto, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and oral argument of counsel; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that respondent has violated the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), as amended by Act approved June 19, 1936 (Robinson-Patman Act):

It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company, a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device in connection with the sale of gasoline in commerce as "commerce" is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of such gasoline of like grade and quality as among purchasers:

243 1. By selling such gasoline of like grade and quality to competing purchasers at different prices in the manner and under the circumstances found in Paragraph Four of the aforesaid findings as to the facts and conclusion.

2. By continuing or resuming the discriminations in price referred to and described in Paragraph Four of the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

3. By otherwise discriminating in price between purchasers of gasoline of like grade and quality in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to in Paragraph Four of the Commission's findings as to the facts herein, and in any other manner resulting in price discriminations substantially equal in amount to such discriminations.

4. By selling such gasoline to some retailers thereof at prices different from the prices charged other retailers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline; provided, however, that this shall not prevent price differences of less than .5 cents per gallon which do not tend to lessen, injure, or destroy competition among such retailers.

5. By allowing a lower price to any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler on gasoline sold by such dealer, jobber, or wholesaler at retail, than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers in their retailing activity; provided, however, that this shall not prevent price differences of less than .5 cents per gallon which do not tend to lessen, injure, or destroy competition with such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers in the sale of gasoline direct to the consuming public.

6. By selling such gasoline to any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-
244 customers of such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers;
where such dealers, jobbers or wholesalers resell such gasoline to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or who directly or indirectly grant to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer.

For the purpose of comparison the term "price" as used in this order takes into account discounts, rebates, allowances, and other terms and conditions of sale.

It Is Further Ordered that the respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

By the Commission.

Otis B. Johnson,
Secretary.

(Seal)

* * (Caption—4389) * *

MOTION TO MODIFY ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

Come Now W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, and Walter B. Wooden, Assistant Chief Counsel, of the Federal Trade Commission, and move that the order to cease and desist entered herein by the Commission on October 9, 1945 be modified so that it would read as follows:

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission as amended, answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint as amended and in opposition thereto taken before a trial examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, report of the trial examiner upon the evidence and exceptions filed thereto, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and oral argument of counsel; and the Commission having made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that respondent has violated the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), as amended by Act approved June 19, 1936 (Robinson-Patman Act);

It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company (Indiana), a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device in connection with the sale of gasoline in commerce as "commerce" is defined in th 249 aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desis from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the pric of branded gasoline of like grade and quality as amon purchasers:

1. By selling such gasoline to competing purchaser at different prices in the manner and under the circumstances stated in the findings as to the facts herein.

2. By continuing or resuming the discriminations i price of such gasoline referred to and described in th Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

3. By otherwise discriminating in price between purchasers of such gasoline in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

4. By selling such gasoline to some retailers thereof at prices different from the prices charged other retailers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline; provided, however, that this shall not prevent price differentials which make only allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered, and which do not tend to lessen, injure, or destroy competition among such retailers.

5. By allowing a price to any dealers, jobber, or wholesaler on such gasoline sold by such dealer, jobber, or wholesaler at retail lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers in their retailing capacity; provided, however, that this shall not prevent price differentials which make only due allowances for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gaso-250 line is to such purchasers sold or delivered and which do not tend to lessen, injure or destroy competition with such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers in the sale of gasoline direct to the consuming public.

6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler resells such gasoline to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer; provided, however, that nothing in this paragraph shall be construed as prohibiting differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

For the purpose of comparison the term "price" as used in this order includes discounts, rebates, allowances and other terms and conditions of sale.

It Is Further Ordered that the respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing, setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

Counsel for the Commission further move that the Commission issue an order on respondent to show cause, if any it has, by written brief to be filed with the Commission on or before February 11, 1946, why said motion should not be granted, and that a copy of this motion, together with a copy of the proposed order to show cause be served upon the attorneys of record for the respondent by registered mail.

W. T. Kelley,
Chief Counsel.
Walter B. Wooden,
Assistant Chief Counsel.

January 21, 1946.

251

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

At a regular session of the Federal Trade Commission, held at its office in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 23rd day of January, A. D. 1946.

Commissioners:

William A. Ayres, Chairman,
Garland S. Ferguson,
Ewin L. Davis,
Robert E. Freer,
Lowell B. Mason.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

W. T. Kelley, Chief Counsel, and Walter B. Wooden, Assistant Chief Counsel, of the Federal Trade Commission, having filed with the Commission a motion that the order to cease and desist entered herein on October 9, 1945 be modified in manner and form as fully set out in said motion, and that notice of such motion be given respondent by serving a copy thereof and a copy of this order to show cause by registered mail addressed to attorneys of record for respondent, and the Commission having duly considered the matter and being now fully advised in the premises,

It Is Ordered that a copy of said motion to modify the order to cease and desist herein, together with a copy of this order to show cause, be served by registered mail upon attorneys of record for the respondent.

It Is Further Ordered that respondent show cause, if any it has, by written brief to be filed with the Commission on or before February 11, 1946, why said motion should not be granted.

By the Commission.

Otis B. Johnson,
Secretary.

253 BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

MOTION FOR REHEARING AND FOR RECONSIDERATION OF ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

The Standard Oil Company, respondent herein, respectfully submits that the Cease and Desist Order heretofore entered in this cause on October 9, 1945 is not in the public interest; that while the Order may temporarily bolster retail prices of certain gasolines in Detroit and hence be of brief aid to a small group of service station operators, it will overall eliminate competition, seriously disturb jobber operations, cause many jobbers to go out of business, and result in higher prices to the public. Respondent respectfully asks the Commission to reconsider the effect of this Order on all aspects of the petroleum business, the changes and developements in the industry since 1940, and the findings of fact upon which the Order is predicated. In support of this motion for rehearing and for reconsideration of the Order, respondent respectfully submits the following:

254 (Figures in parentheses refer to pages of the Record unless otherwise indicated.)

I. Far-Reaching Effect of Order.

Application of the principles enunciated in the Order throughout the Industry will lead to economic changes probably far beyond those envisaged by the Federal Trade Commission. It will result in higher prices to the consumer, it will hurt the jobber and others in the Industry, and it will restrain competition. The Order is not in the public interest.

The Order, as we understand it,

1. prohibits a supplier from allowing more than .499¢ per gallon off the suppliers' posted tank wagon price on gasoline sold "in commerce" to a "dealer, jobber or wholesaler" who resells such gasoline at retail, regardless of whether the jobber, wholesaler or dealer who resells at retail buys in tank car lots, stores in its own bulk storage facilities, delivers by tank wagon, and otherwise performs the jobber function, and

2. prohibits a supplier from selling gasoline "in commerce" to a "dealer, jobber or wholesaler" at less than

supplier's tank wagon price unless the "dealer, jobber 255 or wholesaler" resells such gasoline to the "retailer-customers" at not less than the supplier's tank wagon price.

The Commission has, we believe, overlooked the far-reaching effect of this Order upon individuals and businesses other than the fifteen or more service station operators in Detroit who complained of the competition of respondent's tank car customers and their resellers. The consumer, the jobber, many retailers, and the supplier will all be seriously affected if this Order stands and becomes the pattern for the petroleum industry.

Effect On Consumer.

The Trial Examiner, whose recommendations the Commission has largely followed in this case, frankly stated in his report that the vice of the Detroit situation lay in the fact that the price differential complained of forced other dealers (competitors of respondent's customers and their customers) "to lower their price to the public." (Trial Examiner's Report, p. 68.)

The Order proposes to change this situation by compelling respondent's tank car customers to pay a much higher price for gasoline sold through their 256 own service stations and to charge their reseller customers not less than respondent's tank wagon price.

Thus, the Order's objective is higher service station prices, and there is no doubt that this objective will be achieved with resultant injury to customers. As we understand it, this objective is contrary to the announced policy of the Commission hereafter quoted and to the purpose of the Clayton Act, as amended.

Recently the Commission filed its Annual Report to Congress, in which it condemned the Miller Tydings Act and urged its repeal, and stated its understanding of our competitive system to be that "The consumer is not only entitled to competition between rival products but to competition between dealers of a single product."

It is hard to reconcile any part of the Order, and particularly subparagraph 6 which requires the jobber to resell at the supplier's tank wagon price, with this statement of the Commission's views on resale price maintenance and our competitive system. Seemingly, the Order and these views and policies are in direct conflict with each other, and those subject to the jurisdiction of the Commis-257 sion are obviously entitled to a restatement of such views and policies, or respondent is entitled to the vacation of this Order and a dismissal of the complaint herein.

These policies and views of the Commission cannot be effectuated unless the consumer obtains (a) the lowest possible price on every commodity in order that he may have the greatest purchasing power obtainable from a given income, and (b) the maximum of choice in the selection of goods either as to quality or quantity.

The Order does not assure the lowest possible price on gasoline. In fact, the Commission is admittedly striving to bring about a relative increaes in the price of gasoline moving through the tank car channel as compared with the tank wagon channel and thus increase the price to consumers. This is to be achieved by the following methods:

(1) By requiring suppliers to impose resale price maintenance upon jobbers, which will prohibit added economies achieved by jobbers from being passed on to dealers and by them to consumers. Thus, the average price to be paid by consumers will be raised.

(2) By depriving jobbers of the benefits of integra-258 tion and mass merchandising. The inevitable tendancy in petroleum distribution is to integrate operations, whether the distributor be a jobber or an original supplier. This action is taken to protect and insure economies incident to this course of action accruing to the distributor which are then frequently passed on to the consumer in the form of low prices to build increased volume. Both the mass merchandiser, representing various degrees of integration, and the unit neighborhood service station are desirable. Favoring one type against the other will injure a large segment of the consuming public and will force consumers to pay a higher price for gasoline.

Further, the Order fosters uneconomic methods of distribution which will ultimately increase prices to the public. This is so because:

(1) The jobber's intimate familiarity with (a) the people of his community and their wants and habits, (b)

the retail dealers, their methods of operation and their credit standing, and (c) a multitude of economic conditions which affect cost of distribution, such as real estate values, wages, and rent conditions, make him in many instances a low cost distributor. To eliminate or handicap this efficient distributor by arbitrary price disabilities will 259 introduce higher costs and hence higher prices.

(2) A strongly competitive system encourages improvements and technological advances in production and distribution. Where margins are low, as in the petroleum industry, every seller tries to improve his profits by reducing cost. In the long run, however, the new advances are disseminated throughout the industry and reduce costs to all operators. Obviously, an all round reduction in costs would tend to lower prices to the consumer. The guarantee of high margins by resale price maintenance reduces considerably the incentive and necessity for introduction of each possible economy and increased efficiency. The long run result of such a policy is low productivity of resources compared with that under unrestricted competition price-wise.

(3) Every method of distribution is always on trial. In the long run one method may prove more efficient than another under one set of circumstances while less efficient under different conditions. Every supplier must be given the full range of possibilities of distribution in order to insure the best mode of adaptation to changing conditions.

The Order of the Commission would result in stratifi-260 cation of the market into a stratum of suppliers selling through jobbers and another stratum selling direct to dealers. This element of rigidity in the operation of every supplier would limit severely the possibilities of a trial-and-error search for low cost methods of distribution and would result in higher prices to the consumer.

The Order will not only result in higher prices to the consumer but it also fails to provide freedom of choice by the consumer in the selection of quality of goods to be purchased. An unrestricted competitive system tends to operate according to the dictates of consumer's choice. At present, many jobbers sell well-established brands of gasoline because they know that the free choice of their customers runs in that direction. However, the Order of the Commission will so restrict the jobber in the handling of well-established brands of gasoline as to make the present marketing policies of many of them unprofitable and force them to sell other brands. The customers of these jobbers would then be forced to buy gasoline which is less satisfactory to them than the gasoline they are 261 now purchasing. Those who would transfer their patronage to continue to buy the gasoline of their choice, would do so at a sacrifice of convenience or price.

It is obvious that if a jobber can buy and handle gasoline in a manner which permits or encourages him to reduce the price to the public, the public is thereby benefited. If a dealer has the ambition to expand, grow, and eventually invest his capital in a bulk storage plant and delivery equipment and thereafter supply his own service stations from that bulk plant by means of his own equipment at a reduced price, is not the public entitled to the benefits flowing from that lower price? Some people are price buyers while others are willing to pay a little more for service and attention, either real or imaginary. Both groups are entitled to the best bargain they can obtain. If the man who has a bulk plant and delivery equipment can buy at tank car prices and does so buy and as a result sells at a cheaper price to the public, has the public in any sense been injured? We think not.

It is no answer to say that such a buyer can procure supplies from some refiner that is not engaged in marketing directly to dealers in the Detroit area and thus con-262 tinue selling at law prices to the public because, in addition to buying at the lowest price, the public is entitled to buy the kind or brand of product which it desires.

We can see no escape from the conclusion that the Order of the Commission is not in the public interest, is the result of a private dispute redressable in the courts, and will result in injury to the consumer in the form of higher prices and inability to secure the product of his choice.

Effect on Jobbers.

The future of thousands of petroleum jobbers throughout the United States will be jeopardized by this Order. Jobbers do not know or have any control over costs incurred by any supplier in distributing gasoline. Yet this Order imposes margins on the jobber which are determined by the cost and pricing policy of the suppliers in selling directly to retail outlets. The Commission has, we believe, overlooked many pertinent facts regarding the jobber's operations:

(a) A jobber may have so reduced his cost as to be in position to sell to his retail outlets at a cost which is less than the corresponding wholesale costs incurred by his supplier.

263 (b) The jobber may be willing to accept a lower margin for performing the wholesale function than is his supplier, preferring a narrow margin and increased sales to smaller sales at a higher margin.

(c) The jobber may be willing to sell at near cost, at cost, or even at less than cost in order to use gasoline as a leader, attracting consumers to his place of business for sale of other lines of merchandise.

(d) The jobber may be compelled to sell at prices which are lower than the tank wagon price of his supplier if he is to meet the competition of other outlets distributing products of other suppliers and of other jobbers. Even as there are traffic hubs in a large city, there are variations of intensity of competition in different sections of the city which may require recognition in prices adopted or the jobber may be forced to close his outlet.

(e) There is a tremendous difference in marketing costs in different geographical areas of the United States. Every state and urban and rural section within that state presents a myriad of variations in the methods and costs of distribution of individual companies or of the same company. The adherence to the policies set forth in 264 the Order of the Commission would, of necessity, require an inordinately large number of studies to fix and police literally thousands and thousands of prices in different communities.

(f) Even assuming that the Commission might be gifted with infallibility in determining costs for each of the different suppliers in each of the different communities, and thus impose "correct" margins for each jobber, its Order is bound to bring detrimental consequences in the long run. The jobbers in this country are operating in a dynamic economy which is changing continuously. Costs of distribution are also changing with volume of sales and changes of many other economic conditions, such as wages, transportation rates, real estate prices, and other similar factors bearing on cost of supplying the consumer. It is folly to try to fix prices on the basis of a base year in past experience to be applicable to any future extended period of time, especially when there has been a whole war and five years' time intervene. The concept of a price fixation predicated upon a "1940 parity" is thoroughly repugnant to and completely nonrepresentative of present marketing costs and conditions. Such fixed margins are 265 likely to be even less representative of future conditions beclouded with many changes resulting from increased volume (due to an expected increase in total consumption) and a possible decline in unit cost of distribution.

Some light may be thrown on the situation created by the Order with respect to its restraining effect on competition and trade if consideration is given to the circumstances under which the ordinary jobber became a jobber. Generally, he is one who started with a service station. He acquired one or more additional service stations either by lease or purchase. When he had arrived at the point where his total gasoline purchases for all stations justified an investment in bulk plant facilities and tank wagons, in order to secure the economies of integrated operations, he made the investment and acquired the necessary facilities. Having done so, he was in a position to bid for the business of other dealers, which he did by meeting the price of his competitor jobbers. His own retail outlets remained, however, as an assured outlet for a minimum quantity of gasoline. As his business grew with the acquisition of 266 dealer accounts, he began to lease out his own retail outlets to others. As and when a turnover in lessees of his retail outlets occurred, he took over the operation of them until new lessees could be secured.

Such has been the experience of many jobbers in the past. What will be the situation in the future under the present Order of the Commission? There is nothing in the Order which will prevent an individual from acquiring one or more service stations. But when that individual has acquired a sufficient gallonage to justify an investment in bulk plant and delivery facilities in order to secure the economies of integrated operations, he is met with the proposition that even though he is willing and ready to undertake the jobber function with respect to his own retail outlets and those of others, he may not purchase gasoline at the jobber or tank car price on gasoline which he retails, but must continue to pay the tank wagon price less a discount of not to exceed .499 cents per gallon. He is fully aware that such a narrow margin will not permit him to liquidate the investment required to engage in the jobber function and make a reasonable profit thereon. Consequently, he refrains from expanding further in 267 the direction of the transition from a retailer to a jobber.

But suppose he is willing to enter the jobber business on a margin of less than .5 cents per gallon on his retail business, in order to fully utilize his jobbing facilities he must acquire or normally would acquire other dealer accounts. This he can do in only one way. He must meet the price of his competitor jobber, who may be unrestricted under this Order. But he is faced with the necessity of agreeing with his supplier (if such supplier is one having dual distribution) that he will not resell to such other dealers at any price below the supplier's posted tank wagon price. Consequently, he is further discouraged in his desire to expand and either remains what he was in the beginning,—a retailer who must, regardless of the fact that he has become a mass merchandiser, pay the wholesale or posted tank wagon price and cannot take advantage of the economies in operation under the integrated jobber-dealer method of operation,—or seeks a supplier not having direct distribution in his area of operation, which would automatically exempt his operations from the price limitations imposed by this Order. Surely this is discrimination of the rankest sort against cer-268 tain suppliers and consumers who desire to purchase their products, and any order or regulation imposing such a discrimination ought not to be permitted to stand.

The same situation faces the individual who is not a retailer and who has a desire to become a jobber marketing gasoline supplied by a refiner having direct distribution. In order to perform the jobber function, he must first make an investment in bulk storage and delivery equipment. If he is to utilize his facilities to the fullest extent, he must not only secure dealer accounts to which he will resell on a wholesale basis, but he will undoubtedly wish to secure some retail outlets of his own to assure for himself a core of outlets through which he can dispose of a minimum gallonage which will insure a profitable operation on a tank car price basis. While the Order will not prevent him from securing his own retail outlets by purchase or lease, he cannot perform his jobber function with relation to those outlets on the narrow margin of less than .5 cents per gallon fixed by the Order. Further, the Order will prevent him from securing any dealer accounts, since he cannot be competitive, i. e., he cannot offer to resell at less than his supplier's posted tank 269 wagon price, while a jobber who is supplied by a refiner not having direct distribution will be in a position to underbid him for such business.

Presently, jobbers bargain among the various suppliers in any given market for the best purchase price considering brand preference. Under past conditions, the bargaining was conducted with those having direct distribution and those desiring to penertate a new market via distribution through jobbers. Under the present Order, the potential suppliers are limited actually to those having no direct distribution, which tends to create monopolistic bargaining power on behalf of this class of privileged suppliers.

Thus, the Order not only has the avowed purpose of raising the retail price of gasoline to the consumer and of protecting existing dealers from the effect of competition, as pointed out elsewhere herein, but it is clear that the Order is in restraint of competition and trade because (1) it limits the ability of a retailer to expand and become a jobber and (2) it limits the ability of any individual who is not a retailer to enter the jobbing business.

Another fact which must not be overlooked in de-270 termining the effect of the Order is that there are communities which are served only by suppliers having direct distribution as well as jobber distribution. In such cases, the jobber of a well-advertised brand must either retain his present supplier or accept an equally unsatisfactory arrangement with some other direct marketer or sell an unbranded gasoline. If he stays with his present supplier, he will be subject to resale price maintenance in spite of the Commission's public condemnation of such practice.

If a dealer can no longer invest in a bulk plant and delivery equipment and himself perform the jobber function and pass a part of all of such savings on to the public, or if a dealer or jobber cannot himself determine the price at which he will sell merchandise he has bought and paid for, then it is clear that the public, the jobber, and competition generally are adversely affected and to a very marked degree.

271 Effect on Suppliers.

Finally, we believe the Commission overlooked the fact that the Order would adversely effect the supplier in a way not intended by the Commission, because:

(1) The Order is vague, indefinite, and lacks clarity,—a fact apparently conceded by the Commission if news releases are to be believed,—and consequently the supplier remains in doubt as to whether any particular business practice or policy with respect to distribution of gasoline in a given market does or does not conform with the Order and the law. There is no standard in the Order by which a supplier can determine the propriety of his conduct. If the Order had been based on findings that price differentials had forced so many dealers out of business as to unreasonably restrain competition, it might have furnished an understandable criterion, but the Commission could make no such finding since not even a single dealer was forced out of business by the alleged discrimination. Hence the supplier has no means of ascertaining from the Order what practices the Commission would consider proper and what practices it condemns.

272 (2) The Findings and the Order criticize the accounting procedure of respondent but do not contain any formula or method which has the approval of the Commission. Thus, the supplier does not know which expense items are regarded by the Commission as contributing to a legitimate cost differential. He does not know the accounting procedure which would be acceptable in the treatment of the various items of expense, nor does he know what costs of distribution would be acceptable as contributing to a differential. Further, the supplier is uncertain about the frequency with which a cost justification should be prepared and an adjustment of price differentials introduced with varying changes of the differential. This imposes a tremendous burden of cost accounting on the supplier, introduces significant uncertainties concerning volume to be distributed, and utilization of terminal and marketing facilities. Price policies are subject to the vagaries of cost accounting, which in turn are dependent upon the volume of sales moving through the supplier's various facilities.

(3) Subparagraph 6 of the Order imposes on the supplier the obligation of policing resale prices of its jobbers.

This raises the following questions: (a) To what ex-273 tent will the supplier be obligated to follow and determine the practices of each of its jobbers? (b) Would there be any justifiable exception to the resale price maintenance provision when a jobber attempts to preserve and protect his distribution through a given outlet located in a highly competitive area? (c) When would the furnishing of "services" or "facilities" have the net effect of a reduction in price to the dealer? (d) How can the supplier insure resale price maintenance in states that have no Fair Trade law or the law in effect does not apply to a product like motor fuel, where agreements to maintain the resale price violate the Sherman Act?

(4) It limits diversification of selling methods by the supplier. Suppliers generally have carried the principle of diversification into their marketing activities. They endeavor to sell gasoline through several different channels, knowing that they cannot forecast accurately all future legal, economic and technological factors bearing on the profitability of the gasoline market. The exact portion of sales through the different channels is changing through time with the change of many economic conditions. It
274 is very likely that the future will require many additional adaptations to the changing circumstances which will manifest themselves in the varying importance of different distribution channels. It is obvious that diversified activities help a concern to cushion the brunt of most adverse change by orienting the concern to activities favored or unaffected by the change. The supplier will be put in a straight packet by the rigid distribution pattern imposed by this Order.

The Commission's recent Order is premised upon margins to jobbers and practices in effect five years ago and which have been continued in effect since then. If the margins and practices of which the Commission complains were adversely affecting competition, it would seem that long before now such adverse effect would be clearly apparent. A monopoly of some sort would be well on its way. The facts prove the opposite. Competition in Detroit among retailers of petroleum is as active and aggressive as ever. Ned's Auto Supply Company, which purchased at an allegedly discriminatory price, as referred to in the Findings and Order of the Commission, is actually selling far less gasoline today than it did in 1940.

275 Shortly before this Order was issued, the Commission revised its "Statement of Policy" in which it declared that "It is the policy of the Commission not to institute proceedings against alleged unfair methods of competition or unfair or deceptieve acts or practices where the alleged violation of law is a private controversy redressable in the courts, except where said practices tend to affect the public. In cases where the alleged injury is one to a competitor only and is redressable in the courts by an action by the aggrieved competitor and the interest of the public is not involved, the proceeding will not be entertained."

In other words, it is the adopted and publicized policy of the Commission not to act or institute proceedings except where they are in the public interest and also that the Commission will not lend its offices to the settlement of competitive disputes unless the public is adversely affected. These are eminently sound policies, but it is difficult to place the Complaint in this proceeding and the Order of the Commission within these boundaries.

The Commission further asserts that it refrains from publishing or divulging the identity of the complaining parties, if any, who set in motion the Commission's 276 proceedings. This is also sound policy, but in this particular proceeding (if press releases are to be believed), the complaining party or parties desire no secrecy. The local secretary of an association purporting to represent certain gasoline service station dealers in 1939 or 1940 is quoted therein as stating that he and his associates made the complaint and "prosecuted the case." It was done, he is quoted as saying, "to protect the dealers against cut prices." We have yet to find one word in the Detroit press, in the Findings of the Commission, or elsewhere, which would indicate that any consumer—much less the public—had any complaint or actually did make or file any complaint that he was adversely affected by the gasoline prices established or methods of distribution employed by respondent and all other suppliers in Detroit between 1936 and 1940 or at any later date. We submit that insuring higher prices and greater profits for these service station dealers while injuring motorists, jobbers, suppliers, and others, is not in the public interest, and therefore the Order should be vacated and the Complaint herein dismissed.

277

II. Jobber Function.

Whoever performs the jobber function is entitled to be classified as a jobber and buy at the jobber price; and no jobber should be restricted in the price at which he resells to his customers.

The Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, does not forbid the classification of customers according to their functions and does not forbid a lower price to jobbers than to retailers. Indeed, the Order in this case confirms this, since it places no restriction on the price which the supplier may charge a jobber and places a limitation only on the price which the jobber may charge its "retailer-customers". The jobber is not the agent of his supplier and frequently competes with his supplier for the business of service stations operators and other retailers. If the jobber is required to resell at not less than his supplier's tank wagon price (as stipulated in subparagraph 6 of the Order), the jobber will be unable to meet the competition of refiners, jobbers, dealers and others who are unrestricted in the price at which they may resell. Hence subparagraph 6 of the Order will not effectuate the purposes of the Clayton Act, but on the contrary will defeat those purposes and restrain competition.

278 Every gasoline jobber has a substantial investment in his bulk storage plant, tank wagons, and other equipment. He maintains a sales force, advertises, and runs all the risks that every other independent merchant runs. For these investments, expenses and risks in performing the jobber function, he must be compensated; otherwise he cannot continue in business.

Many jobbers operate no retail stations. They buy at the regular jobber price and through efficient operations are able to resell at less than their own and other suppliers' tank wagon prices. It is not only unjust and discriminatory to penalize these jobbers by restricting their resale prices, but it will restrain competition, resulting in higher prices to the service station operator and the consumer.

Jobbers who operate retail stations act in a dual capacity. This was recognized by the Federal Trade Commission itself when on June 19, 1931 it approved the following definition in the National Code of Practices for Marketing Refined Petroleum Products:

"C. Jobber, Distributor or Wholesaler. One who 279 carries a stock of petroleum products to sell to retail dealers or others for resale, but who may sell direct to consumers."

Such jobbers carry on the jobber function in receiving and storing the gasoline in their bulk plants and delivering it in their own equipment to service stations, whether operated by themselves or others. They carry on the retailer function in receiving and storing the gasoline in their service stations and vending it at the service station to the consuming public. Such jobbers have the same investment, incur the same risks and render the same economic service to society in carrying on the jobber function as all other jobbers. Hence they should be accorded the same treatment and should not be required to pay a higher price for their gasoline. The differential of less than one-half cent per gallon which the Commission has arbitrarily fixed by this Order is wholly inadequate to pay for performance of the jobber function. It is doubtful whether this differential will even pay the cost of delivery from the bulk station to the service station and clearly will not compensate the jobber for his investment, the expense of maintenance of his bulk station plant, his other expenses, and the risks he incurs in performing the jobber function.

280 III. The Order of the Commission Is, As A Matter of Law, Not Warranted by the Provisions of the Clayton Act, As Amended.

We respectfully submit that the Order of the Commission should be vacated and the Complaint dismissed for the following reasons:

(a) The Order of the Commission is not confined to the issues raised by the pleadings herein, and includes matters not regulated by the Clayton Act, as amended, and not within the jurisdiction of the Commission.

There is no allegation in the Amended Complaint which either directly or by implication charges any violation of the Clayton Act, as amended, arising out of or in connection with the resale of gasoline by the four customers of respondent named in the Complaint, or any other of its customers. Thus, to the extent that the Order prohibits the resale of such gasoline at other than respondent's posted tank wagon price, it is without the scope of the issues raised by the pleadings.

Subparagraph 6 of the Order provides that respondent cease and desist from discriminating, directly or in-281 directly, in connection with the sale of gasoline "in commerce" in the price of such gasoline of like grade and quality as among purchasers:

"6. By selling such gasoline to any dealer, jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers, where such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers resell such gasoline to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank wagon price, or who directly or indirectly grant to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer."

This part of the Order is subject to the following objections, to-wit:

(1) It relates ~~to~~ a matter not regulated by the statute, and therefore wholly outside the jurisdiction of the Commission.

(2) It relates to transactions between jobbers and their own reseller customers, which are, admittedly, not transactions in interstate commerce, and, therefore, wholly outside of the power of the Commission to control.

(3) It relates to transactions consummated, after respondent has sold such gasoline to its jobber customers, between the latter and their own reseller customers, as to which respondent has no privity nor control.

282 Cyrus Austin, attorney for the Commission, at the time of oral argument of this cause, in commenting upon the effect and implications of the case of Daly v. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, 53 F. Supp. 876, admitted that transactions between Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and its own vendees were and are not "in commerce".

The Commission by its Order now purports to regulate such transactions by compelling respondent to require its jobber-customers to maintain a minimum resale price at the level of respondent's posted tank wagon price or to discontinue business with them.

In the event such jobbers sell under such minimum or grant to their own customers any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer, then respondent is required to discontinue selling to such jobber at a price lower than the price which it charges its own retailer-customers.

This part of the Order is wholly unjustified either by the Complaint or by the statute; and it clearly relates to incidental matters admittedly not constituting interstate commerce. The Commission, therefore, in including 283 subparagraph 6 in its Order, acted without jurisdiction.
It is, of course, unlawful for the Commission to make any order in relation to any matter not within the purview of the statute.

(b) The Order of the Commission disregards the provisions of the Clayton Act, as amended, relative to the requirement that injury to "competition" must be established in order to justify the issuance of a cease and desist directive; said Order being unsupported by any testimony in the record relative to any deleterious effect of the practices complained of upon "competition" as such.

There is no evidence in this record to support the claim made in the Complaint that the effect of the price differential allowed respondent's jobber-customers, is or may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly or to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them.

The use of the words "may be" in the Clayton Act, as amended, was not intended by Congress to prohibit 284 the mere possibility of the consequences mentioned, but to prevent such practices as would probably lessen, injure, destroy or prevent competition.

Corn Products Refining Co. v. F. T. C., 89 Law Ed. 977.

The testimony adduced by the Commission on the subject of effect on competition of the practices complained of is fully analyzed at pp. 128-134 of respondent's brief. We do not repeat that analysis here, but refer to the printed brief, at the pages indicated. As we said there, however, we repeat here—that there is not a scintilla of testimony even tending to establish any probability of deleterious effect on competition attributable to the differential in price accorded to respondent's tank car customers. As a matter of law, the record does not support the Findings and Order of the Commission; and the Order should, therefore, be vacated and the complaint dismissed.

6

Respondent contends, and its contention is supported by the expert testimony of Professor Fred Emerson Clark of Northwestern University, that proof of injury to "competitors" of respondent's vendees is not tantamount to 285 proving injury to "competition", as that word is used in the statute. (Record pp. 1647-8) His testimony establishes the inescapable conclusion that the practices complained of, and their effect, as proved by the testimony of the Commission's witnesses, actually foster and promote competition; and that their discontinuance would have the effect of preventing and stifling competition, and thereby cause the public to pay higher retail prices for gasoline in the Detroit area. In fact, the Trial Examiner's Report, which the Commission has generally adopted in its Findings of Fact, in several places refers to the fact that the practices complained of operate to lower the price charged the public for gasoline, which is erroneously cited as a result which the statute was intended to prevent. The Trial Examiner's Report and the Commission's Order, therefore, are apparently based on testimony bearing on alleged injuries to the competitors of respondent's jobber customers who either sell at retail or to resellers at less than the tank wagon price. Such testimony as was adduced to this effect is analyzed in respondent's brief at pages 131-132.

"Competition" cannot be regarded as "one or more competitors", but must be considered as a social and 286 economic institution—the state or condition of striving, in which a competitor seeks to furnish merchandise or render service better or less expensively than his rivals. Incidental injury to competitors is a usual and necessary element of competition (1655).

It is difficult to conceive that injury to "competition", as such, resulted from the alleged discriminatory prices, during the years under consideration, when one considers that there continued to exist such a substantial growth of new and rebuilt gasoline filling stations in the Detroit metropolitan area. The records of the Department of Buildings and Safety Engineering of the City of Detroit show, for the years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, that permits for the following number of new service stations and additions and alterations to existing stations were issued.

Year	New Service Station Permits	Alterations and Additions
1936	47	87
1937	76	77
1938	45	47
1939	67	55
1940	134	60
1941	78	68

287 The improvement of old outlets and construction of new competitive outlets does not indicate a development of monopolistic tendencies during the period covered by this litigation, or the first year thereafter, when construction was still permitted. The building of new service stations was stopped the latter part of the year 1941, because of the war.

Nor does the marked increase in gasoline gallonage sold by Ned's Auto Supply Company after it went on a tank car delivery and price basis (as referred to in the Commission's Findings of Facts) prove or tend to show "injury to competition". The records of respondent's Detroit Division show that many gasoline service stations, purchasing their supplies at regular tank wagon prices from respondent, and selling at their own retail prices, achieved an even greater increase of sales volume. This is illustrated by statistics of the following service stations:

288

Service Station Respondent's Dealer Account Number	Volume in Gallons 1936	Volume in Gallons 1940	Percent Increase
43	30,760	65,512	112.6
92	34,703	84,090	142.3
5102	67,390	271,828	303.3
257	28,324	59,196	108.9
274	75,272	186,781	148.1
284	67,205	192,045	185.7
603	53,611	116,514	117.3
619	52,778	108,550	105.6
621	29,395	124,125	322.2

The above figures demonstrate that, during the years covered by the Complaint, the tank wagon purchaser's gallonage increased, as well as that of the jobber retailer who purchased on the tank car delivery and price basis.

To recapitulate, there is no evidence in this record to show that the public as a whole was injured, or was or is likely to be injured, by the practices complained of in the proceeding. On the contrary, the record shows that the effect of such practices was and is to enable the consumer to secure gasoline for a lower price. Absolutely the only testimony adduced by the Commission on this point 289 was to the effect that about fifteen so-called independent gasoline retailers, some of whom were reseller customers of respondent, found it necessary to reduce their gasoline prices to meet competition. (543, 560, 583, 624, 637, 651, 673, 724, 728, 750, 765, 778, 847, 859, and 878.)

As a matter of law, we respectfully maintain, therefore, that such testimony fails to establish any adverse effect on "competition", as that term is employed in the Clayton Act, as amended. It is, therefore, submitted that the Order of the Commission is unsupportable and should be reconsidered and vacated.

(c) The Order of the Commission is unwarranted in that it refuses to give effect to respondent's right to rebut a prima facie case by showing that its lower prices to its jobber customers were made in good faith to meet equally low or lower prices of its competitors.

The Commission, in its Order, holds that where an injurious effect on competition is affirmatively proved, then proof of meeting competition is immaterial; that the provision of the law allowing a respondent to show good faith in meeting equally low or lower prices of competitors 290 would recognize the principle "that one competitor's violation of law justifies its violation by another." This holding is based upon the unsound premise that the competitors in question are actually violating the law in offering such low or lower prices to respondent's jobber customers, which premise is valid only if such competitor is proved to be a law violator. It is entirely conceivable that such competitor's costs of sale and delivery would actually justify the competitive price differential offered by them to jobbers; and the law does not permit the Commission to presume otherwise in determining the rights and liabilities of respondent.

The Report of the Trial Examiner recites that:

"The differentials on its branded gasolines respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the Wayne Oil Company, at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality."

The Trial Examiner, at pp. 54-55 of his Report, finds as a matter of fact, uncontradicted upon the record, that the four jobbers "could purchase from many other sources, immediately, a gasoline of comparable quality and at a 291 better (lower) price than they are paying at the present time"; also that the jobber customer market is subject to intense competition; and that respondent's jobber customers have no contracts, and the continuance of their patronage is subject to competition from day to day.

Notwithstanding these findings of the Trial Examiner, the Commission holds that they are immaterial, saying:

"Based on the record in this case, the Commission concludes as a matter of law that it is not material whether the discriminations in price granted by the respondent to the said four dealers were made to meet equally low prices of competitors." (14)

The Commission bases this conclusion on two principal grounds:

(1) Because the Commission believed injurious effect on competition was affirmatively proved.

(2) Because the Commission believed the construction of the law claimed by respondent would constitute recognition of the scoundness of the principle that one competitor's violation of law justifies its violation by another.

The first of the above mentioned grounds represents an attempt on the part of the Commission to add a pro-292 viso to Section 2 (b) of the statute. Does the justification accorded respondent by said section, depend upon whether, by respondent's act, competition was destroyed, injured or prevented? The statutes does not say so, and it is submitted that it constitutes a strained and unreasonable construction to so interpret the words of the statute. Moreover, as heretofore pointed out, there is no substantial evidence in the record establishing any injury to competition as such, by reason of any act of respondent.

The Commission assumes, as the basis for the second ground mentioned, that the other oil companies which offerred respondent's jobber customers price differentials equal to or greater than those offered by respondent are, themselves, violators of the statute. This conclusion constitutes an invalid and unsupported presumption. For, every one of such competitors, as to which competitive price offers were proved, might conceivably be able to show that its price differential, so offered, is justified by its own savings in sales and delivery costs as between the tank car and tank wagon methods of delivery of gasoline, or that the customer to which the offer was made was its only 293 actual or prospective customer in the area and hence the offer could not be discriminatory.

The meeting of an equally low price of a competitor in good faith is available to respondent in rebutting any prima facie case established by the Commission, and, when such fact is established by uncontroverted evidence as in this case, it becomes a justification under the Act. In F. T. C. v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 89 L. Ed. 989, at page 991, the United States Supreme Court said:

"The principal question for decision is whether respondents, who adopted the discriminatory price system of their competitors, including the Corn Products Refining Company, have sustained the burden of justifying their price system under Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended, by showing that their prices were made 'in good faith' to meet the equally low prices of competitors."

In deciding this question, the Court said, at page 997:

"Section 2 (b) does not require the seller to justify price discriminations by showing that in fact they met a competitive price. But it does place on the seller the burden of showing that the price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's. The good faith of the discrimination must be shown in the face of the fact that the seller is aware 294 that his discrimination is unlawful, unless good faith is shown, and in circumstances which are peculiarly favorable to price discrimination abuses. We agree with the Commission that the statute at least requires the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor."

In the cited case, the Supreme Court sustained the Commission's finding that respondent, Staley Mfg. Co., had not met and satisfied this burden because it never in fact had a higher price than its competitor's. But the undisputed evidence in the instant case is that respondent did have higher prices than its competitors were offering, and further that its prices were established in the face of bona fide offers to said customers by respondent's competitors to sell them at lower prices.

In the Staley case, the Supreme Court also held that:

> "Congress has left to the Commission the determination of fact in each case whether the person, charged with making discriminatory prices, acted in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence is for the Commission." (Italics ours.) (Opinion p. 996.)

295 In the case at bar the Report of the Trial Examiner, as heretofore noted, expressly recites that the differentials in question were granted by respondent to its jobber customers "to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality."

The Commission, however, in its Findings of Fact, at page 14 thereof, concludes as a matter of law that "it is not material whether the discriminations in price granted by the respondent to the said four dealers were made to meet equally low prices of competitors"; and the Commission, therefore, makes no finding of fact on the question of meeting competition and of respondent's good faith in doing so, saying that "the Commission does not attempt to find the facts regarding those matters, because even though the lower prices in question may have been made by respondent in good faith to meet the lower prices of competitors, this does not constitute a defense, in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy and prevent competition with the retail stations operated by the said named dealers and with the stations operated by their retailer-customers."

296 (d) The Order of the Commission, in reducing the allowable differential on sales of gasoline to jobbers who engage in retail operations (to the extent of the gasoline so sold at retail) to less than one-half cent per gallon and basing such reduction wholly upon allowance for difference in respondent's cost of delivery, as between the tank car (or transport truck) and tank wagon delivery methods, wholly disregards Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, which recognizes a further allowable differential reflecting differences in the cost of sale as between such methods of marketing.

The difference in respondent's sales costs, as between said two methods of marketing, was wholly ignored by the Commission's Order, although many items thereof, as established by the testimony, were not even contested or drawn in question by the attorney for the Commission.

The Robinson-Patman amendment to the Clayton Act permits a respondent to justify differentials in price by showing that they "made only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered." (Sec. 2 (a).)

297 The less than one-half cent differential is apparently based upon testimony adduced by the Commission to the effect that the gasoline supplier saves one-half cent per gallon, by the tank car method of delivery, being the testimony of the witness Paul Harrison to the effect that it cost that amount per gallon to haul gasoline from a bulk plant to a gasoline filling station within the Detroit area. (Record pp. 915, 923, 924.)

That Mr. Harrison's testimony related solely to savings in cost of delivery, without reference to saving in cost of sale, is shown by the fact that the Trial Examiner limited the cross-examination of Mr. Harrison in the following words:

"I don't understand that during the direct examination there was any testimony adduced running to the cost of sale, and the testimony related solely to the cost of delivery. Therefore, the examiner rules that your cross-examination will be limited to the cost of delivery." (Record p. 931.)

Accordingly, the entire differential permitted by the Order of the Commission is based upon evidence adduced by the Commission as to the cost of hauling gasoline from bulk plant to retail outlet; no additional allowance having been made for the difference in selling cost as between the tank car and tank wagon method of distribution. This constitutes manifest error.

The Trial Examiner recognized in his Report on the evidence that there had been substantial proof of saving in selling cost as between such varying methods of marketing; the Report reciting that the allowable jobber differential per gallon proven was "less than one (1¢) cent." (Trial Examiner's Report, p. 42.)

And it is particularly significant that the 1.51c differential testified to by Dr. John W. Boatwright, respondent's expert on costs, was not disproved nor controverted by Mr. Warmack, the Commission's expert, who testified on cross-examination as follows:

> "Q. Are you just unable to say whether 1.51 cents is a correct figure or whether any other figure is a correct figure?
>
> A. I am unable to say."
>
> (Record p. 6518.)

Respondent respectfully submits that the Commission's Findings of Fact and Order not only disregard the overwhelming weight of the evidence on the subject of 299 differential justification, but also misinterpret the legislative intent of Congress in the use of the words "due allowance" in Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, by the Robinson-Patman Act.

It certainly was not the intent of Congress to require such justification to be made with that mathematical exactitude which the Commission requires, as evidenced by said Findings of Fact. If so, then no respondent will ever succeed in establishing a cost differential justification. For example, the Commission on page 12 of its Findings of Fact apparently rejects respondent's entire cost study on the ground that it is based on costs in the Detroit Division instead of those in the Detroit metropolitan area. To that criticism we say that respondent used as the basis for its cost analysis the smallest geographical area for which records had been regularly kept, and within which the complaint was lodged; and that nothing more was humanly possible. Moreover, there was testimony adduced as to comparison of costs in the Detroit Division outside the Detroit metropolitan area compared to those inside said area, indicating that the difference did not exceed 2/100 of a cent per gallon, this being the difference in mar-
300 keting costs between gallonage handled by respondent's commission employees in rural areas of the Detroit Division, on the one hand, and that handled by its salaried drivers in the Detroit metropolitan area, on the other.

In other respects, the criticisms directed at respondent's cost differential justification were shown by the testimony of Dr. John W. Boatwright, respondent's expert, to involve infinitesimal changes in the allowable differential. These criticisms are analyzed at length in respondent's brief at pages 92 to 108, inclusive, and the analysis will not be repeated here.

Writers on the subject of oil economics recognize that a differential or "spread" of approximately two cents per gallon between the tank car and tank wagon prices on gasoline is ordinarily necessary to enable a gasoline jobber to meet his cost of operation and realize a reasonable profit.

Ball on The Oil Business, p. 266.

The evidence in this case shows that respondent accords its tank car customers the smallest differential in price, as between the tank car and tank wagon method of sale 301 and delivery of gasoline, allowed in the entire oil industry; the minimum differential being one and one-half (1½¢) cents. (Record p. 1515-16.)

The average differential allowed by the entire industry is two (2¢) cents; and the maximum differential is three (3¢) cents. (Record p. 1516.) The generally prevailing differential allowed along the Atlantic Seaboard is two and one-quarter (2¼¢) cents. (Record p. 1516.) This was established by the uncontroverted testimony of John E. Dyer, of New York City, general sales manager of Sinclair Refining Company, who is so well recognized as a spokesman for the oil idustry that he had charge of the administration of codes for said industry under N. R. A. for the New York Division. (Record p. 1474.)

302 IV. The Interstate Commerce Question.

The Order of the Commission, and the Findings of Fact upon which the same is based, do not show that the transactions complained of were committed by respondent "in the course of commerce," or that either or any of the purchases involved in the alleged discriminations were "in commerce", as prescribed in the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

The statute, in Section 2 (a)* thereof, prescribes three criteria relative to the interstate character of a respondent's operations, and to the character of the transactions involved. These are:

---

* The following is the text of Section 2 (a), insofar as it relates hereto:

> "Sect. 2. (a) That is shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade or quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce * * *"

(a) That the respondent shall be "engaged in commerce". This is admitted by this respondent and is supported by the record.

(b) That the transactions complained of shall be 303 committed "in the course of such commerce". This is denied by respondent, and there is no finding thereon in said Order, nor would such a finding, if made, be supported by the record.

(c) That the transactions complained of and involved in the alleged discriminations are "in commerce". This is denied by respondent, and there is no finding thereon in said Order, nor would such a finding, if made, be supported by the record.

The Findings of Fact of the Commission in this case fall far short of showing that the transactions complained of were committed in the course of interstate commerce, and that the transactions involved in the alleged discriminations are or were "in commerce". In Paragraph Two of said Findings of Fact the Commission determines only that respondent was, at the times complained of, engaged in interstate commerce.

Further than as above indicated, however, there is no finding on the commerce issue which can be said to support the Order of the Commission; and if there were such a finding, it would not be supported by any substantial evidence in the record.

The facts as supported by the record establish that 304 the case at bar presents the same factual and legal situation as was presented in Lewis v. Shell Oil Company, 50 F. Supp. 547, decided in 1943 by the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois. At the time of the argument of this case, Cyrus Austin, the attorney who presented the case on behalf of the Commission, frankly stated that if the Lewis case was correctly decided, then the respondent herein was entitled to an order of dismissal.

In the case of Daly v. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, 53 F. Supp. 876, decided by the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Michigan, subsequent to the decision in the Lewis case, it was held that transactions involving the sale of gasoline by this respondent to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company (being one of the jobbers in the case at bar) and by the latter to its reseller and retail customers did not constitute interstate commerce, so as to bring such transactions within the purview of the Federal Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U. S. C. A., Secs. 206-207.)

In respondent's brief to the Commission, pages 75-87, there are cited and discussed other cases from which, we submit, it is perfectly clear that the "commerce" involved in respondent's transactions with its jobber customers 305 in Detroit is not "commerce" as defined in the Clayton Act, as amended. For reference purposes, those cases are as follows:

Schechter Corp. v. U. S., 295 U. S. 495, 79 L. Ed. 1570, 55 Sup. Ct. 837.

Atlantic Coast Line Ry. v. Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, 275 U. S. 257, 72 L. Ed. 270, 48 Sup. Ct. 107.

Higgins v. Carr Brothers Co., 317 U. S. 572, 87 L. Ed. 468, 63 Sup. Ct. 337.

Walling v. Sanders, 48 F. Supp. 9.

Loftler v. First National Bank of Chicago, 48 F. Supp. 692.

Ling v. Currier Lumber Company (Michigan), 50 F. Supp. 204.

Ouendag v. Gibson (Michigan), 49 F. Supp. 379.

Cron v. Goodyear Tire Company, 49 F. Supp. 1013.

Walling v. Goldblatt Brothers, 128 F. 2d 778.

Jewel Tea Company v. Williams, 118 F. 2d 202.

Gerdert v. Certified Poultry & Egg Co., 38 F. Supp. 964.

Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. Iowa, 233 U. S. 334, 34 Sup. Ct. 592, 58 L. Ed. 988.

Lipson v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Corporation, 87 F. 2d 265, 267.

Quincy Oil Co. v. Sylvester, et al., 238 Mass. 95, 130 N. E. 217, 14 A. L. R. 111.

306 Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Company, 317 U. S. 564, 87 L. Ed. 460, 63 Sup. Ct. 332.

To the same effect we cite a most recent case, decided since the filing of respondent's brief:

Kantar v. Carckell (1945), 150 F. 2d 47.

The fact that there were some isolated transactions in which emergency carload lot shipments of gasoline were shipped by rail from Whiting direct to jobbers in 1938 and 1939, but not subsequent to April, 1940 (Record pp. 180-181), is not, of itself, sufficient to satisfy the statute. They do not change the basic nature of the dealings with jobbers involved in these proceedings, because they are governed by the maxim "de minimis non curat lex." (Gold- berg v. Worman, 37 F. Supp. 778; Spier v. Gulf Coast Beverages, Inc., 50 F. Supp. 653; Daly v. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, supra.)

Respondent submits that the findings here in do not meet the requirements of the statute and are wholly insufficient to support the Order of the Commission; also that the evidence contained in the record herein (Record pp. 1-173) fails to present any substantial showing which would support any such findings, if they had been made by the Commission.

307 Conflict with Office of Price Administration.

The Order of the Commission cannot be complied with in connection with sales made by respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and Wayne Oil Company, without at the same time violating the provisions of Maximum Price Regulation 88 issued by the Office of Price Administration, thereby subjecting respondent to the penalties imposed by the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended.

The Office of Price Administration issued Revised Price Schedule 88 on February 2, 1942, and reissued and redesignated the same as Maximum Price Regulation 88 on February 14, 1944. At all times subsequent to the original issuance of said Regulation on February 2, 1942, there was included therein a provision under which respondent's maximum prices for gasoline sold in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan by tank car and truck transport, were not permitted to exceed the price charged at a given shipping or delivery point by respondent on the last sale of the same product to a purchaser of the same class made by respondent within sixty (60) days prior to October 15, 1941 said provision being designated in the present Regulation (Maximum Price Regulation 88) as Section 5.2 (c).

308 Respondent's maximum prices in tank car and truck transport lots delivered at destinations in Detroit to each of the four customers above named, established pursuant to said Regulation, are 8.4 cents per gallon for Standard Red Crown Gasoline, and 9.65 cents per gallon for Standard White Crown Gasoline (Solite with Ethyl). Respondent is not permitted to exceed either of said prices on sales to any of said four customers regardless of whether or not any of the gasoline so sold by respondent is resold by said customers at their own service stations or is resold by them by tank wagon to other service station operators (dealers).

Respondent's present posted tank wagon price to dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area, exclusive of taxes, is 9.6 cents per gallon for Standard Red Crown Gasoline, and 11.1 cents per gallon for Standard White Crown Gasoline (Solite with Ethyl). If respondent should comply with the Order of the Commission, and charge its said four customers the posted tank wagon price for gasoline sold to said customers in tank car and truck transport quantities, it would thereby exceed its permitted Office of Price Administration ceiling price on Standard Red Crown Gasoline
309 by the sum of 0.8 cents per gallon, and on Standard
White Crown Gasoline (Solite with Ethyl) by the sum of 1.45 cents per gallon.

The Office of Price Administration has recognized, through its issuance of Maximum Price Regulation 88, the various customer classifications of respondent and of others similarly engaged in the sale of petroleum products. Section 5.2 (c) of said Regulation defines the term "purchaser of the same class" and reads as follows:

> "'Purchaser of the same class', as used in sections 5.2 and 5.3, refers to the practice adopted by the seller in setting different prices for a commodity for sales to purchasers performing different functions (for example, refiner; jobber, distributor; commercial, industrial or private consumer; service station tank car dealer; divided or undivided tank wagon dealer; etc.), or for purchasers performing the same function but located in different area or buying in different quantities or grades or under different conditions of sale. Price is prima facie evidence but not conclusive evidence to be considered in determining if a purchaser belongs to a particular class; however, a lower price to a particular purchaser which was to meet competition and otherwise was inconsistent with the seller's practice in setting the same price to the particular purchaser and one or more other purchasers, shall neither result in placing the particular purchaser in a lower price class nor be considered in determining a seller's maximum price."

310 The Office of Price Administration has further recognized the propriety of respondent's classification of its four customers in the Detroit Metropolitan Area by making provision in Section 6.5 (c) of said regulation for prices on delivered-at-destination sales "at the tank car level" to certain tank wagon or service station resellers, including Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company.

While the regulations of the Office of Price Administration permit respondent to file an application for adjustment in price in a case of this kind, the Office of Price Administration has uniformly held, in passing upon applications for price adjustment, that, unless the applicant shows that continuance of his existing maximum price would result in an overall loss in all of the seller's business, the application would be denied. If the Office of Price Administration would apply the same ruling to respondent it would be obliged to deny any application respondent might file on account of the Commission's order in this case.

311 VI. Change in Economic Conditions.

Economic conditions, since the time of the filing of the complaint herein,and since the taking of the testimony, have so changed that the Order of the Commission does not accord with the presently existing situation.

(a) Since the filing of the Complaint, five (5) years have intervened, during which the United States has commenced and finished its participation in World War II, which war has caused economic repercussions and in particular, influenced the cost of doing business, of which the Commission will take judicial notice. The great increase in wages, in costs of material, and in other items, has caused a marked increase in the cost of sale and distribution of all kinds of merchandise, including gasoline, and a widening of the cost differential as between the tank car and tank wagon channels of distribution of gasoline.

It is, therefore, respectfully submitted that respondent should be permitted to adduce further evidence upon the question of the reasonableness and legality of the price differential, as between said differing methods of sale and delivery.

312 (b) It is the contention of the Commission herein that the effect of the price differential complained of in the proceeding (i.e., during the years 1936 to 1940) might in the future be to lessen, injure, destroy or prevent competition or tend to create a monopoly. After the lapse of five years, it is now possible to show by testimony, in retrospect, that this has not been the result of the price differential accorded respondent's jobber customers. For example, the evidence would disclose that no service station, dealer or other retailer of gasoline in the City of Detroit has been forced out of business as a result of the discriminations complained of in this proceeding; that Ned's Auto Supply Company's sales have substantially decreased in the years since the conclusion of the hearings in this proceeding, during which period respondent has continued to supply gasoline to it at the tank car price, so that today Ned's Auto Supply Company is selling far less gasoline than during the years 1936 to 1940 referred to in the Findings; that competition in the City of Detroit is today so aggressive that a substantial portion of the gasoline sold in the City of Detroit is sold at prices below the ceilings fixed therefor by the Office of Price Administration.

313 Section 11 of the Clayton Act provides that the Circuit Courts of Appeal have authority to order additional evidence to be taken "if either party shall apply to the Court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the Court that such additional evidence is material, and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the proceeding before the Commission," etc.

It would appear, therefore, to be reasonable for respondent to make this application to the Commission, for the purpose of showing changes in the factual situation which have occurred during the past five years, and also for the purpose of showing, in retrospect, that the price differential in question has not caused an injurious effect on competition or created monopolistic tendencies.

314 VII. Request for Clarification.

The Findings of Fact and Order to Cease and Desist issued by the Commission are, in many respects, ambiguous and uncertain and require clarification and revision by the Commission so as to render it possible for respondent, and others similarly situated, to understand the meaning and requirements thereof.

The following are the principal items which require such clarification and amendment:

(a) As to whether said Order applies to all transactions in which sales of gasoline are made to jobbers, or only to deliveries to jobbers across state lines, as mentioned in Paragraph Two of said Findings of Fact.

(b) As to whether said Order applies only to respondent's "Detroit area" marketing operations or to its operations, as well, in other areas and states in which it transacts business.

(c) As to whether said Order applies only to the sale of branded gasoline (i.e., gasoline marketed under the supplier's trade mark), or to all grades and types of gasoline —branded and unbranded.

(d) As to whether said Order establishes a pattern for the petroleum industry.

315 (e) As to whether said Order permits the granting of price differentials, without limitation as to amount, in the case of sales to jobbers who do not engage in retail operations, and who do not sell to resellers at less than respondent's posted tank wagon price.

(f) As to whether the less than one-half cent per gallon allowable differential mentioned in subparagraphs 4 and 5 of said Order applies to the sales mentioned in subparagraph 6 of said Order.

316

VIII. Conclusion—Relief.

(a) Respondent, for all the reasons stated, respectfully submits that the Order to Cease and Desist dated October 9, 1945, should be vacated, and an order be issued dismissing the Complaint.

(b) Respondent further moves in the event said Order is not vacated, that it be modified (1) by deleting subparagraph 6 of the Order, and (2) by amending subparagraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the Order to exclude therefrom those who perform the jobber function, i. e., maintain and operate their own bulk station facilities and deliver from such facilities by tank wagon to service stations, whether operated by themselves or by others.

(c) Respondent further moves, in the event the foregoing relief should be denied, that this proceeding be reopened for the taking of additional testimony and evidence.

(d) Respondent further moves, in the event none of the relief requested above is granted, that an order be entered by the Commission allowing respondent a reasonable additional period, but not less than sixty (60) days, after denial of such relief, within which to file with the Commission its written report concerning compliance with the Order 317 to Cease and Desist herein, as required by the final paragraph of said Order.

Respectfully submitted,
MacMahon, Abbott & Roberts,
By Arthur J. Abbott,
Attorneys for Respondent.
2230 Buhl Building,
Detroit (26), Michigan.

Buell F. Jones,
Albert L. Green,
Gordon E. Tappan,
Of Counsel for Respondent.
Standard Oil Building,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago (80), Illinois.

23. Before Federal Trade Commission.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

ANSWER AND BRIEF ON ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

(Stamped: Federal Trade Commission—Received Sept.
5, 1946—Secretary.)

Comes now Standard Oil Company (Indiana), respondent erein, and, in accordance with the Order to Show Cause ssued by Federal Trade Commission on January 23, 1946, ubmits the following as its answer and brief in reference o the Motion to Modify the original Order to Cease and esist dated October 9, 1945:

24 I.

The Commission filed its Complaint in this proeeding on November 30, 1940. The introduction of testiony and other evidence before the Trial Examiner was oncluded April 23, 1943, and the Order to Cease and Desist as entered October 9, 1945 and served upon respondent n October 26, 1945. Upon respondent's motion, the Com-ission granted respondent until January 26, 1946 to file a motion for rehearing and reconsideration of the Cease and Desist Order and until February 23, 1946 to file a report of compliance. On January 21, 1946, counsel for the Commission filed a Motion to Modify the Cease and Desist Order of October 9, 1945, and on January 23, 1946 an order was entered to show cause by February 11, 1946 why said motion should not be granted, such time being later extended to February 25, 1946. Respondent on January 25, 1946 filed its Motion for Rehearing and for Reconsideration of the Cease and Desist Order.

Thus, the status of the proceeding is that respondent's request for vacation of the original Cease and Desist Order or for the reopening of the proceeding for the taking 325 of additional testimony and evidence, and the Commission's counsel's motion to substitute a modified Order for the original Order are pending simultaneously.

With this preface, respondent hereby renews its objections to the original Cease and Desist Order for the reasons set forth in respondent's Motion for Rehearing and for Reconsideration of said Order. The relief sought and the points and arguments urged in said Motion are applicable to the proposed modified Order, and to avoid unnecessary repetition they are hereby urged with respect to said proposed modified Order as if repeated at length herein.

326

II.

Additionally, respondent respectfully maintains that the proposed modified Order to Cease and Desist, as submitted by counsel for the Commission under date of January 21, 1946, should not be adopted as the Order of the Commission herein, for the following reasons, to-wit:

(a) Neither the proposed modified Order nor the original Order is expressly limited as to its area of applicability. Since any order entered by the Commission must be based on the Findings of Fact, which Findings are based on and relate solely to evidence of respondent's transactions in the Detroit metropolitan area, it is submitted that such order should state expressly that it is limited to transactions of respondent in that area.

(b) Neither the proposed modified Order nor the original Order is expressly limited to the four customers of respondent named in the Complaint. For example, 327 subparagraphs 1 and 3 of the proposed modified Order prohibit respondent from discriminating in the price of branded gasoline by selling such gasoline "to competing purchasers" at different prices in the manner and under the circumstances stated in the Findings of Fact or by otherwise discriminating in price "between purchasers" of such gasoline in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Findings of Fact. Subparagraphs 4, 5 and 6 refer to "some retailers", "any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler", and "any jobber or wholesaler", respectively, and prohibit the sale by respondent to them in the manner described therein. Failure to limit the Order to the four customers named in the Complaint, is, respondent submits, erroneous and objectionable since the only transactions complained of in the Complaint, the evidence or the Findings were sales by respondent to these four customers. The Commission has no authority to issue a blanket order requiring respondent to obey the law. The Commission's jurisdiction and authority in cases of this kind is founded solely upon Section 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended, which gives to the Commission, if it shall be of the 328 opinion that any of the provisions of the Act have been or are being violated, authority to issue an order "requiring such person to cease and desist from such violations." Hence, the Commission is limited in its jurisdiction to the finding of specific violations and to the prohibition of such specific violations. It is not authorized to include in its order to cease and desist a prohibition of other violations as to which there has been no evidence submitted to it, nor to include in its order to cease and desist an injunction against any violation of the Act.

Thus, the proposed modified Order is objectionable and constitutes reversible error in that it attempts to prohibit respondent from selling to other customers in the Detroit metropolitan area than those named in the Complaint as to which the evidence in this case was taken. There is no finding that respondent discriminated in sales to any other customers than the four customers named in the Complaint. Hence, any order of the Commission in this case must be limited in its applicability to the four customers named in the Complaint.

329 The proposed modified Order is further objectionable since it is couched in the language of the Clayton Act, as amended, and purports to prohibit respondent from violating the Act as well as the Order. For example, sub-paragraph 3 of the proposed modified Order prohibits discriminations "in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein." No respondent should be subjected to this type of order. In the language of Justice Holmes, "the words quoted are a sweeping injunction to obey the law" and are open to the objection in cases of this kind that the respondent ought to be informed as accurately as the case permits as to what it is forbidden to do.

Swift & Co. v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 49 L. Ed. 518.

The Commission is bound by the same rules as those laid down by the United States Supreme Court for guidance of lower courts in the entry of injunctions. In National Labor Relations Board v. Express Publishing Co., 85 L. Ed. 937, at page 937, the Court said:

330 "But the mere fact that a court has found that a defendant has committed an act in violation of a statute does not justify an injunction broadly to obey the statute and thus subject the defendant to contempt proceedings if he shall at any time in the future commit some new violation unlike and unrelated to that with which he was originally charged." Citing,

New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 200 U. S. 364, 404, 50 L. Ed. 515, 526.

National Labor Relations Board v. Swift & Co., (CCA 7th) 108 F. 2d 988.

In New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission, supra, the United States Supreme Court disposed of this issue in the following unequivocal language:

"The contention, therefore, is that whenever a carrier has been adjudged to have violated the act to regulate commerce in any particular, it is the duty of the court, not only to enjoin the carrier from further like violations of the act, but to command it in general terms not to violate the act in the future in any particular. In other words, the proposition is that by the effect of a judgment against a carrier concerning a specific violation of the act, the carrier 331 ceases to be under the protection of the law of the land and must thereafter conduct all its business under the jeopardy of punishment for contempt for violating a general injunction. To state the proposition is, we think, to answer it. Swift & Company v. United States, 196 U. S. 375. The contention that the cited case is inapposite because it did not concern the act to regulate commerce, but involved a violation of the anti-trust act, we think is also answered by the mere statement of the proposition. The requirement of the act to regulate commerce that a court shall enforce an observance of the statute against a carrier who has been adjudged to have violated its provisions, in no way gives countenance to the assumption that Congress intended that a court should issue an injunction of such a general character as would be violative of the most elementary principles of justice. The injunction which was granted in the case of In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, was not open to such an objection, as its terms were no broader than the conspiracy which it was the purpose of the proceeding to restrain. To accede to the doctrine relied upon would compel us, under the guise of protecting freedom of commerce, to announce a rule which would be destructive of the fundamental liberties of the citizen."

See also,

> Federal Trade Commission v. Beechnut Packing Co., 257 U. S. 440, 66 L. Ed. 307.

332 We submit that no order of the Commission should include any language which is subject to the construction that it constitutes a prohibition against any violation of the Act or against anything other than the specific violations found by the Commission in its Findings of Fact.

(c) Subparagraphs 1 and 3 of said proposed modified Order do not inform respondent, and others similarly situated, with reasonable definiteness and accuracy, what specific acts are prohibited. Said paragraphs all refer to the "circumstances" and "discriminations" stated, referred to, and described in the Findings of Fact, which Findings consists of 16 typewritten pages. Subparagraph 3 forbids discrimination "in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings."

These two paragraphs are so vague and uncertain as to fail to afford an ascertainable standard or basis of conduct.

Similar language used by the Commission in its order 333 to cease and desist in re Milk and Ice Cream Can Institute, Docket No. 4551 was stricken by the circuit court of appeals on a petition to review the order. (F. 2d , January 7, 1946.)

(d) Subparagraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the proposed modified Order are inconsistent with subparagraphs 4, 5 and 6 thereof, in that subparagraphs 1, 2 and 3 do not incorporate the provisos which are annexed to subparagraphs 4, 5 and 6, which provisos (if properly revised, as hereinafter pointer out) are necessary in order to bring such directives within the purview of the Clayton Act, as amended.

(e) If we understand subparagraph 1 and the law correctly, it can relate only to retail activities of the four customers of respondent named in the Complaint. The "competing purchasers" there referred to are apparently the jobbers who have retail activities, the retailer customers of such jobbers, and the retailer customers of respondent in Detroit. The Commission found as a fact that respondent allowed a different price to its jobber customers in 334 Detroit who had retail activities than it did to its own retailer customers. The Commission found as a fact that these differing prices were discriminatory in that they had or might have the effect of substantially lessening, injuring or destroying competition between said retailer customers. Based on such findings, subparagraph 1 commands respondent to cease selling at different prices to such jobbers for resale at retail than it sells to its own retailer customers.

This subparagraph goes beyond the Clayton Act, as amended, as does subparagraph 1 of the original Order, in that it prohibits different prices without reference to their effect upon competition, without reference to the possibility that such differing prices may be justified on the basis of differences in the cost of sale or delivery to such purchasers, and without reference to the possibility that such differing prices may be made in good faith to meet equally low or lower prices offered to such purchasers by competitors of respondent. Differing prices are not unlawful per se, but they become so only when they have the effect on competition prohibited by the Clayton Act, as amended, and 335 then only when they cannot be justified on the basis of differences in cost of sale or delivery to different purchasers or on the basis of a bona fide meeting of competition.

(f) Subparagraph 2 of the proposed modified Order directs respondent to cease and desist from "continuing or resuming the discriminations * * * referred to and described in the Commission's Findings." This language is vague and indefinite and does not sufficiently advise respondent what it may do or may not do under the Order. The Findings, for example, state that the Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., one of the four jobber customers of respondent involved in this proceeding, has carried on no retail activities since 1938 and that "there is no evidence that the company (Stikeman) ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than the posted tank wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers." Hence, respondent's sales to Stikeman could not have constituted a violation of the Clayton Act, as amended, since it was impossible for those sales or Stikeman's resales to have had the adverse effect on competition that is a necessary element of any discrimina-336 tion under said Act. However, it cannot be determined from the language of subparagraph 2 whether respondent may continue to sell the Stikeman Oil Company, Inc. in tank car lots at the tank car price or whether the proposed order prohibits such sales.

Similarly, the Findings state that there is no evidence that the Wayne Oil Company, another of the four jobber customers of respondent involved in this proceeding, "ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than the posted tank wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers." The Wayne Oil Company is today carrying on no retail operations. Yet, it cannot be determined from the language of subparagraph 2 whether the proposed modified Order is designed to prohibit respondent from selling the Wayne Oil Company in tank car lots at the tank car price, or whether under the Order respondent may continue to make such sales.

The Findings also state that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, the third of the four jobber customers of respondent involved in this proceeding, sold, during the two-year period ending December 31, 1940, less than 20% of its gaso-337 line to its retail service station dealer customers at prices below respondent's posted tank wagon price, and during this period operated a few service stations. Today, the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company operates no service stations, carries on no retail activities, and resells only at respondent's posted tank wagon price. Again, it cannot be determined from the language of subparagraph 2 whether the proposed modified Order, if entered, will prohibit respondent from continuing to sell the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in tank car lots at the tank car price.

Ned's Auto Supply Company is the only one of the four customers of respondent involved in this proceeding which, according to the Findings, resold gasoline exclusively or principally through its own service stations. If the proposed modified Order is designed to prohibit respondent from continuing to sell Ned's in tank car lots at tank car prices, but as we assume, is not intended to prohibit such sales to Stikeman and the other jobbers who carry on no retail activities, then respondent submits that sales to Stikeman and other jobbers who carry on no retail activi-338 ties should be expressly excepted from subparagraph
2 of the proposed modified Order so that respondent will know it may continue to make such sales without violating the Order.

(g) Not only should any Cease and Desist Order entered in this proceeding contain appropriate language permitting respondent to sell to its jobber customers in tank car lots at the tank car price, as set forth in the preceding subparagraph (f) of this brief, but such Order should, respondent submits, include Ned's Auto Supply Company in the category of jobber customers and permit respondent to sell Ned's in like manner at such price. As pointed out by the United States Supreme Court in Phillips v. Walling, 89 L. Ed. Adv. Opinions 705, businesses such as Ned's "possess the essential characteristics of both the retailer and wholesaler. Their wholesale functions, which are integrated with but are physically distinct from their retail functions, are performed through their warehouses and central offices. That fact is the essential key to the problem presented by the case." Applying Justice Murphy's language in the above case, Ned's "is composed of 339 (six) retail establishments and a single wholesale establishment." Delivaries to Ned's bulk plant, its "wholesale establishment," are in exactly the same category as deliveries to the bulk plant of any other jobber customer of respondent, and respondent should not be prohibited from making such deliveries at the same price as to its other jobber customers, viz., in tank car lots at the tank car price.

(h) The provisos with respect to allowable differentials based on cost differences in subparagraphs 4 and 5 are qualified in the proposed modified Order by language making them inapplicable where such allowable differentials adversely affect competition. It is submitted that differentials based on cost differences are permitted by the law even though they may have an adverse effect on competition.

Both subparagraphs 4 and 5 prohibit differences in the selling price to competing purchasers without reference to the effect of such differing prices on competition, whereas as a matter of law such differing prices are not unlawful per se but become so only when they have the adverse effect upon competition prohibited by the Clayton Act, 340 as amended.

(i) Subparagraph 6 of the proposed modified Order does not give effect to the provisions of the statute which make unlawful only differences in price having the effect upon competition prohibited by the statute. Further, it is not clear from the language of the proviso whether the differences in cost there referred to are those of the supplier or of the jobber.

(j) Subparagraph 6 is further objectionable because it would impose an extra-legal obligation upon respondent. Under it, respondent may legally sell to a jobber who has no retail activities, in tank car quantities at the tank car price. If, after such wholly legal sale is consummated, the purchaser, having complete title to and possession of the product sold, undertakes to resell it at a price which the Commission conceives to be harmful to competition, the original legal sale in retrospect becomes unlawful and respondent is charged with liability therefor as a violation of the Commission's Order and is subjected to the penalty for such violation. It is submitted that there
341 is nothing in the Clayton Act, as amended, or in the pleadings, that affords a legal basis for such a provision in any order of the Commission.

(k) Respondent further states that the above objections to such proposed modified Order to Cease and Desist are made for the consideration of the Commission, without in any manner conceding that any order should be issued, except as outlined and stated at page 64 of its Motion for Rehearing and for Reconsideration heretofore filed.

342

III.

Respondent believes it has demonstrated in its Motion for Rehearing and for Reconsideration of the Cease and Desist Order of October 9, 1945 that said Order should be vacated and the Complaint dismissed; that neither said Order of October 9, 1945 nor the proposed modified Order is in the public interest; that under either Order competition would be restrained, lessened and injured, jobbers would be forced out of business, motorists and other consumers would pay more for gasoline; that neither Order is based on transactions in interstate commerce; that neither Order is supported by the pleadings or the evidence in this case. Respondent trusts, therefore, that the Commission will enter an order of dismissal.

If, however, the Commission will not dismiss the Complaint, respondent respectfully urges that it is the duty of the Commission to reopen the proceedings for the introduction of up-to-date evidence. As set forth in United Corporation v. Federal Trade Commission, 110 F. 2d 473, orders of the Federal Trade Commission, like decrees in equity, should be based on the situation that exists when the Order is entered, not on a situation that existed 343 when the complaint was filed or at some other date.

But the only evidence in this case depicts the situation that existed in 1936 to 1940, inclusive. For example, the Findings, which are dated October 9, 1945, state that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company "is operating five retail service stations at the present time," that the Wayne Oil Company "is operating two services stations at the present time," that "Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc. sell the respondent's gasoline at both wholesale and retail." These may have been the facts in 1940, but they are not the facts today, nor were they the facts on October 9, 1945, the date of the Findings. Ten years have elapsed since the first of the transactions shown in evidence, more than five years since the last. A world war has since intervened, prices and costs have risen in an inflationary spiral. It is now necessary to conjecture whether the alleged discriminations might or might not have the detrimental effect on competition that is a prerequisite to a cease and desist order under the Clayton Act, as amended; sufficient time has elapsed so that the facts with respect to the effect on competition 344 of the practices complained of are now readily ascer-tainable. We submit that the evidence is too stale to support a cease and desist order in this proceeding.

345 ## IV.

It is, therefore, respectfully submitted by respondent that:

(1) The original Order to Cease and Desist herein should be vacated, and, in lieu thereof, an order should be issued by the Commission dismissing the Complaint.

(2) The proposed modified Order to Cease and Desist should not be issued by the Commission, but in lieu thereof an order should be entered dismissing the Complaint.

(3) In the event the relief asked for in (1) and (2) above should not be granted, the original Order to Cease and Desist or the proposed modified Order, if substituted for said original Order, should be modified by deleting subparagraph 6 thereof and by amending subparagraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 thereof so as to exclude from the operation thereof all those who perform the jobber function, i. e., who maintain and operate their own bulk station facilities and deliver gasoline from such facilities by tank wagon to service stations, whether operated by themselves or by others.

346 (4) In the event the relief prayed for in (1), (2) and (3) should not be granted, this proceeding should be reopened for the taking of additional and supplemental testimony and evidence.

(5) In the event none of the relief requested above is granted, an order should be entered by the Commission allowing respondent a reasonable additional period, but not less than sixty (60) days, after denial of such relief, within which to file with the Commission its written report concerning compliance with the Order to Cease and Desist heretofore entered herein or any modification thereof.

Chicago, Illinois, February 14, 1946.

Respectfully submitted,
MacMahon, Abbott & Roberts,
By Arthur J. Abbott,
Attorneys for Respondent.
2230 Buhl Building,
Detroit (26), Michigan.

Buell F. Jones,
Albert L. Green,
Gordon E. Tappan,
Of Counsel for Respondent.
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago (80), Illinois.

349 BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

RESPONDENT'S ANSWER AND BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO SECOND PROPOSED MODIFICATION OF ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

Comes now Standard Oil Company (Indiana), respondent herein, and submits the following as its Answer and Brief in opposition to the second proposed modification of the Order to Cease and Desist dated October 9, 1945, as set forth in the letter of Counsel for the Commission dated February 15, 1946:

350 I.

The Commission filed its Complaint in this proceeding on November 30, 1940. The introduction of testimony and other evidence before the Trial Examiner was concluded April 23, 1943. An Order to Cease and Desist was entered October 9, 1945 and served upon respondent October 26, 1945. Since then three motions have been filed, all of which are now pending:

(1) Motion of respondent for rehearing and reconsideration of the Cease and Desist Order or for the reopening of the proceeding for the taking of additional evidence. This motion was filed by respondent January 25, 1946.

(2) Motion filed by Counsel for the Commission on January 21, 1946 to modify the Cease and Desist Order. Respondent filed its Answer and Brief in opposition to said motion, under date of February 14, 1946.

(3) Motion proposing a further modification of said Order to Cease and Desist as set forth in a letter from Counsel for the Commission dated February 15, 1946. By stipulation, the Commission on February 25, 1946 entered an Order providing that "respondent may have to and 351 including April 1, 1946 within which to prepare and file its Answer and Brief in response to the proposed modification of Order to Cease and Desist as submitted to respondent by letter of February 15, 1946, * * * and that all further proceedings herein be stayed until April 1, 1946." This Answer and Brief is submitted in accordance with the foregoing order.

Thus, the status of the proceeding is that respondent's request for a vacation of the original Cease and Desist Order, or for the reopening of the proceeding for the taking of additional evidence, and the two motions to substitute a modified order for the original Cease and Desist Order are pending simultaneously.

Inasmuch as respondent filed (1) its Motion for rehearing and for reconsideration of the Cease and Desist Order on January 25, 1946 and (2) its Answer and Brief in reference to the Motion to modify the original Order to Cease and Desist under date of February 14, 1946, and set forth at length in these documents its objections to the original Order to Cease and Desist and to the first proposed modification thereof, respondent (in order to avoid repetition) has set forth herein only additional objections to the 352 second proposed modification of the Commission's Order, but again renews its objections (a) to the original Cease and Desist Order for the reasons set forth in respondent's motion for rehearing and reconsideration of said Order, and (b) to the first proposed modification thereof for the reasons set forth in respondent's Answer and Brief in reference thereto and urges the points and arguments urged in said Motion and said Answer and Brief as if set forth at length herein.

353

II.

In addition to the reasons set forth in respondent's Answer and Brief in reference to the first proposed modification of the original Cease and Desist Order, respondent objects to the second proposed modification of the said Order, as set forth in the letter of Counsel for the Commission dated February 15, 1946, for the following reasons:

(a) The original Order to Cease and Desist entered October 9, 1945, by its terms, applied to the sales by respondent of "gasoline of like grade and quality." The first proposed modification of that Order, as set forth in the Motion to Modify filed by Counsel for the Commission, by its terms, applied only to the sale by respondent of "branded gasoline." The second proposed modification of that Order, as set forth in said letter of February 15, 1946, purports to apply to the sale by respondent of "gasoline of like grade and quality," as did the original Order. We assume that the addition of the word "branded" by Counsel for the Commission in their first proposed modification of the Order, as set forth in their Motion to Modify, was made 354 for the reason that the evidence taken in this proceeding dealt only with "branded" gasoline, and that accordingly Counsel for the Commission felt compelled to make any proposed modification of the Order conform with the evidence and the Findings of Fact. We are at a loss, therefore, to understand why, in the second proposed modification of the Order, Counsel for the Commission has seen fit to eliminate the word "branded" in describing the gasoline to which the Order shall apply.

Section 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended, vests the Commission only with authority to issue an order requiring a respondent to cease and desist from the violations included in the Complaint, covered by the evidence, and incorporated in the Findings of Fact. The only gasolines referred to therein are respondent's "branded" gasolines, known as "Solite with Ethyl", "Red Crown", and "Stanolind". (Findings of Fact, p. 2)

The Trial Examiner in his report on the evidence recognized that the only kinds of gasoline involved in the case are "branded" gasolines. For example, on the question of meeting competition; the Trial Examiner found as follows:

> "The differentials on its branded gasolines respond-> 355 ent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times > subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the Wayne Oil Company, at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality." (underlining ours) (Trial Examiner's Report, p. 55)

Many other examples could be cited to show that only branded gasolines are involved in this case.

Therefore, it is respectfully submitted by respondent that any Order to Cease and Desist issued or permitted to remain in effect in this proceeding should be expressly limited to "branded" gasolines marketed by respondent.

(b) As indicated in respondent's Brief in answer to the first proposed modification of the Cease and Desist Order, if up-to-date evidence were taken by the Commission it would show that three of the four customers named in the Complaint are not now engaged in retail activities and that none of them resell to their dealers at less than respondent's posted tank wagon price. It was there pointed out that one of said customers had, according to the evidence and Findings of Fact, discontinued its retail activities 356 in 1938; that "there is no evidence that the company (Stikeman Oil Company, Inc.) ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than the posted tank wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers" (Findings, p. 5); that as to the second of said customers, there is no evidence that the company (Wayne Oil Company) "ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than the posted tank wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers" (Findings, p. 5); and that the third of said customers (Citrin-Kolb Oil Company) resells only at respondent's posted tank wagon price. Under these circumstances, it would be impossible for respondent's sales to these customers to result in discriminations under the Clayton Act, as amended.

In other words, the Commission could not have produced evidence valid as of the date of said Order or as of today which would support any order affecting respondent's transactions with Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, or Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

We repeat what was said in our Answer and Brief on Order to Show Cause: An order of the Federal Trade Commission, like decrees in equity, should be based on evidence with respect to the situation which exists when the order is entered; not on evidence of a situation which existed some five years prior thereto.
357 United Corporation v. F. T. C., 110 F. 2d 473.

We respectfully submit, therefore, that as of October 9, 1945, or as of today, the Commission is not authorized to enter any order affecting respondent's transactions with Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, or Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. Hencee, any Cease and Desist Order issued or permitted to remain in effect herein should expressly exclude from the prohibitions thereof transactions of respondent with said three customers.

(c) Stripped of everything but their essentials, subparagraphs 5 and 6 of the original Order and of the proposed modifications thereof are price-fixing in nature and result. Their effect is to fix directly the price at which respondent's jobber-customers who have no retail activities may resell to their dealer accounts, and to fix indirectly the price at which the retailer-customers of such jobbers may sell to the public.

The question arises as to whether it is within the power of the Commission so to do. It has been held that the Commission "has no general authority to compel competitors to a common level, to interfere with ordinary 358 business methods, or to prescribe arbitrary standards for those engaged in the conflict for advantage called competition." The purpose of both the Federal Trade Commission Act and the Clayton Act, as amended, "was to advance the public interest by securing fair opportunity for the play of the contending forces ordinarily engendered by an honest desire for gain. And to this end, it is essential that those who adventure their time, skill and capital should have large freedom of action in the conduct of their own affairs." F. T. C. v. Sinclair Refining Co., (1923), 261 U. S. 463, 67 L. Ed. 746.

Congress did not intend the Federal Trade Commission to control or impede competition, "to judge what is too fast a pace for some and to compel others to slow up. * * * It is not illegal for one competitor to do that which is beyond the financial power of the other; nor do we find anything that authorized the Federal Trade Commission to regulate competition for that reason." Sinclair Refining Co. v. F. T. C., 276 F. 686.

Since the right to fix prices was never given to the Federal Trade Commission, subparagraphs 5 and 6 of the original Order and of the proposed modifications thereof, which are admittedly designed to fix respondent's job-359 ber-customers' resale price and to stabilize the retail price of gasoline, are not only economically unsound for the reasons set forth in respondent's Answer and Motion heretofore filed, but are an attempt to exercise a power not granted to the Commission by Congress.

Subparagraph 6 is further without the scope of the authority of the Commission, because:

(1) It is not based upon any allegation of the Complaint.

(2) There is nothing in the Clayton Act, as amended, which authorizes the Federal Trade Commission to make a supplier liable for the acts of its customers.

(3) It requires respondent to police sales made by its jobber-customers, which sales are admittedly in interstate commerce.

(4) It would operate to compel a supplier to inspect the books and records of its jobber-customers and to supervise the operations of the jobber.

Respondent submits, therefore, that said subparagraphs

5 and 6 should be eliminated from any order entered by the Commission.

360 (d) If we understand the second proposed modification of the Commission's Order correctly, proviso (a) thereof limits the applicability of the prohibitions of the Order to transactions between respondent and its four customers named in the Complaint in this proceeding. If such is not the correct construction of said proviso (a), then we submit that any Order issued or permitted to remain in effect by the Commission in this proceeding should be expressly so limited in its application, inasmuch as there is nothing in the Complaint, the evidence, or the Findings that refers in any way to discriminatory prices allowed by respondent to other customers in the Detroit metropolitan area, or any other area, nor is there anything in the Complaint, the evidence, or the Findings from which an inference of the allowance of any such discriminatory prices could be drawn.

(e) There is no allegation in the Complaint with respect to jobbers who have no retail activities, and proviso (c) may have been included in the second proposed modification for the purpose of excluding sales to such jobbers from the prohibitions of the Cease and Desist Order 361 and thereby making the Order conform to the allegations of the Complaint. Yet, standing alone, proviso (c) seems to express the theory that respondent may not sell to a jobber at any different price than to a retailer, except where such differing price makes only due allowance for respondent's differences in cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered. Other provisions of said proposed modification do not prohibit a different price to jobbers, as such, than to retailers. Indeed, all of the various Orders entered or proposed clearly contemplate the classification of customers by respondent and the establishment of prices to such customers based on quantity and method of delivery and on the function being performed by them. The statute contains no prohibition against such practice, which is universally followed in all trades and businesses in the country. So far as we know, there has never been any contrary contention advanced heretofore.

As indicated below, the constant demand of jobbers is that the margin between tank car and tank wagon prices be widened. These demands are based upon the increased costs of the jobber and have no relationship to the costs 362 of the supplier. While the Commission did not indicate what an appropriate method of cost accounting would be, it did criticize respondent's regular and customary methods. No matter what method of accounting is used, in order for the jobber to operate at a profit there must be an element of profit in the computation of the jobber price in addition to his costs, which costs have a tendency to be the same as the supplier's. Thus, assuming the supplier's and jobber's actual costs of sale and delivery by tank wagon to be the same, the differential allowable to jobbers on tank car sales under the Commission's theory would be measured by the difference between such costs and the supplier's costs of sale and delivery by tank car. This obviously eliminates any element of profit to the jobber. Indeed, in this proceeding, the Commission found that respondent's allocation of a return on its investment in facilities to the tank wagon cost of operation was not allowable, thus further restricting the allowable margin to jobbers.

Certainly under the theory of Counsel for the Commission, as expressed in proviso (c), it would be impossible for any supplier to grant a wider margin to jobbers as demanded in the resolution of the Illinois Petroleum Marketers Association, to which reference is hereinafter made.

363 Respondent would not be so concerned about proviso
(c) if it were not for the fact that proviso (b) covers the same ground without the specification of the classes of customers to which it applies. Such a proviso, in general terms, followed by the same proviso in specific terms designating the particular classes of customers to which it applies, impresses the latter with considerably more significance than would otherwise accrue to the general proviso standing alone.

We cannot escape the conclusion that Counsel for the Commission is expressing the theory that a supplier may not classify his customers on the basis of the quantity sold and the method of delivery to them and establish a price differential allowable to such customers based on such factors plus the function performed by them, that all purchasers, whether or not they are in competition with each other in the resale of the product purchased, must have the same price except for differentials justified solely by differences in supplier's costs of sale and delivery. If that is the theory of Counsel for the Commission in incorporating proviso (c) in the second proposed modification of the Order, it would seem that, in all fairness, before it is adopted by the Commission, trade generally should be advised by a wide publicity of the theory, so that it may 364 properly and promptly express its opposition thereto, if any. It is obvious, of course, that the imposition by enforcement proceedings of such a theory on trade generally in this country would put the jobber out of business and cause an upheaval in business practices.

Neither the Clayton Act, nor the Robinson-Patman amendment thereto, has changed the rule that a supplier of merchandise may classify his customers. Thus, in Mennen v. Federal Trade Commission, 288 F. 774 (certiorari denied, 67 L. Ed. 1219), it was held that the supplier was under no obligation to sell to retailers at the same price as it sold to wholesalers, the Court saying:

> "It did not discriminate as between retailers, but sold to all retailers on one and the same scale of prices. There is nothing unfair in declining to sell to retailers on the same scale of prices that it sold to wholesalers, even though the retailers bought, or sought to buy, the same quantity the wholesalers bought. * * * Whether a buyer is a wholesaler or not does not depend upon the quantity he buys. It is not the character of his buying, but the character of his selling, which marks him as a wholesaler, as the court pointed out in Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company v. Cream of Wheat Company, supra." (227 F. 46)

We submit that the legality of a differential between 365 jobbers' and retailers' purchasing prices is not affected at all by the Clayton Act, as amended, and that, therefore, if any Order to Cease and Desist is issued or permitted to remain in effect in this proceeding, it should expressly exclude from the prohibition thereof all sales to jobbers who have no retail activities.

(f) Proviso (d) of the second proposed modification of the Order is unwarranted by the provisions of the statute. It states:

> "That none of the provisions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that reflect differences in the grades and qualities of such gasoline." (underlining ours)

The Robinson-Patman Act forbids, in Section 2 (a), that any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, shall "discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality * * *." The statute does not provide that price differential shall be allowable if they "reflect differences" in the grades and qualities of such commodities.

There is, therefore, no warrant for the language used 366 in proviso (d). If respondent desired to do so, it might conceivably sell gasoline of superior grade and quality for a lesser price than that charged for gasoline of lower grade and quality, so long as there existed no discrimination as between purchasers of gasoline of the same grade and quality. The proviso, however, purports to require that gasoline be priced in proportion to its grade and quality; that gasoline of a superior grade and quality be priced proportionately higher than that of a lower grade and quality, regardless of the fact that, as between purchasers of the same grade and quality, no discrimination in price, as against the purchaser, is made by the supplier. It is, therefore, respectfully submitted that this proviso is technically incorrect and does not effectuate its apparent purpose; and that it should be drafted so as to state that the order is not to be taken as prohibiting price differentials by respondent, as between gasolines of different grades and qualities.

367. (g) The second proposed modification of the Commission's Order, by the addition of provisos (a), (b), (c) and (d), purports to give effect to those provisions of the statute permitting differences in price to different purchasers when such different prices have no tendency to substantially lessen, injure or destroy competition, or when they can be justified on the basis of differences in cost, or when different grades or qualities of gasoline are involved. Counsel for the Commission failed to include in said provisos any recognition of the right of respondent in good faith to meet competition. Such failure completely overlooks the effect of the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, 274 U. S. 1, 71 L. Ed. 893, in which it was held that a state statute prohibiting the purchase of products at a higher price in one locality than in another was unconstitutional and void because it failed to preserve the right in good faith to meet competition.

Congress saved the Clayton Act and the Robinson-Patman Act from the stigma of unconstitutionality by expressly providing that the meeting of a competitor's lower price in good faith constituted a defense to a charge of discriminatory conduct. Accordingly, any order entered 368 by the Commission herein should include a proviso expressly permitting respondent to establish prices in good faith to meet lower prices offered by its competitors.

There have been some important decisions rendered since his case was submitted to the Commission which indicate hat respondent is entitled to the incorporation of such a proviso. In fact, these decisions, in our opinion, require hat the Complaint be dismissed, in view of the recommendations of the Trial Examiner, who expressly found:

"The differentials on its branded gasolines respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the Wayne Oil Company, at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality." (underlining ours) (Trial Examiner's Report, p. 55)

The Commission, in its Findings of Fact, took the position that these facts were immaterial. It is now respectfully maintained that this position of the Commission is untenable, in view of the decision in the Moss case, in which the Supreme Court of the United States denied certiorari on October 8, 1945, one day prior to the issuance of the Commission's original Order to Cease and Desist herein.

369 In substantiation of this point, we present the following comments on and quotations from the Moss case, and also from other cases decided since the instant case was submitted to the Commission.

In Moss v. Federal Trade Commission, 148 F. 2d 378, 90 L. Ed. 41, 66 S. Ct. 44 (certiorari denied, October, 8, 1945), the Second Circuit Court of Appeals, in a per curiam opinion held:

"* * * Section 2 (a) makes price discrimination unlawful only in case it lessens, or tends to prevent, competition with the merchant who engaged in the practice; and that, no doubt, means that the lower price must prevent, or tend to prevent, competitors from taking business away from the merchant which they might have got, had the merchant not lowered his price below what he was charging elsewhere. * * * Congress adopted the common device in such cases of shifting the burden of proof to anyone who sets two prices, and who probably knows why he has done so, and what has been the result? If he can prove that the lower price did not prevent or tend to prevent anyone from taking away the business he will succeed, for the accuser will not then have brought him within the statute at all. Nevertheless, he may succeed even though he fails to establish such a negative; for, although it will then appear that he has lessened, or prevented, competition, the proviso of Sect. 2 (b) will still excuse him, if he can show that his lower price did not undercut his competitors, but merely 'met' their 'equally low price.' In short, that is a 370 defense to the violation of Sect. 2 (a). * * *

The Commission appears to believe that, in order to prove the affirmative defense, anyone who sells at two prices must prove that he knew what was his competitor's price, must mean not to undercut it, and must offer to sell at what he knows to be no lower than his competitor's price. We agree that he must not undercut his competitor's price; but whether it is a condition upon the defense that he must know what that price is, is another question which we reserve. If in fact he does not undercut his competitor's price, he may escape, even though he does not know what the price is, though it is only by chance that he has not undercut it. That is to say, we need not now decide whether the phrase, 'in good faith', means more than that the offer shall be made with actual intent to sell at the price named. That question does not arise here, for the petitioner did not prove that in any of the instances its price was no lower than that of its competitors. For these reasons, we hold that the findings were supported by the evidence.'' (underlining ours)

In the instant case, the uncontroverted testimony shows that respondent, in order to meet the competitive offers made by other suppliers of branded gasoline of like grade and quality to the four jobbers named in the Complaint, granted to said four jobbers a price differential of one and one-half cents per gallon for tank car deliveries to the jobbers' own bulk storage plants, and that this price 371 allowance is the smallest differential allowed in the Detroit metropolitan area, the customary price differential being two cents. It was testified by James E. Dyer, General Sales Manager of Sinclair Refining Company, of New York City, that gasoline jobbers throughout the United States purchase gasoline by tank car delivery at price differentials ranging from one and one-half cents to two and one-half cents off the tank wagon price, the former differential being the minimum (1515-16).

Therefore, to use the language of the court in the Moss case, supra, respondent, in allowing the one and one-half cent differential to it four named jobber-customers, did not "undercut" its competitors' price, but merely "met" the minimum differential; and several large oil suppliers sold (and now sell) comparable gasolines in the Detroit metropolitan area to tank car customers at a margin or differential more than one and one-half cents off their posted tank wagon price. (53-4)

The Court held, in Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Manufacturing Co., 89 L. Ed. 989, that Congress has left to the Federal Trade Commission the determination of fact in each case whether the person charged with making discriminatory prices acted in good faith to meet a competitor's 372 equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence is for the Commission, and it was held that a respondent is entitled, as a matter of right, to a finding of the Commission as to the fact.

Citing:

Federal Trade Comm. v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assoc., 273 U. S. 52, 71 L. Ed. 534, 47 S. Ct. 255.

Federal Trade Comm. v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U. S. 67, 78 L. Ed. 655, 54 S. Ct. 315.

Quoting further from the Staley case, supra, the Court said:

> "The Commission's conclusion seems inescapable that respondent's discriminations, such as those between purchasers in Chicago and Decatur, were established not to meet equally low Chicago prices of competitors there, but in order to establish elsewhere the artificially high prices whose discriminatory effect permeates respondent's entire pricing system. The systematic adoption of a competitor's prices by including unearned freight in respondent's delivery price, or, what amounts to the same thing, the maintenance of a discriminatory and artificially high F. O. B. factory price in order to take advantage of the correspondingly high prices of a competitor, based on its higher costs of delivery, is not sufficient to justify the discrimination, for respondent fails to show, as the statute requires, the establishment of a 'lower price' made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor.'' (underlining ours)

373 In the case of Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 89 L. Ed. 977, the Commission charged violation of Section 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act, in that, inter alia, petitioners favored certain tank wagon customers by permitting them to book orders at the lower prices charged for tank car deliveries, and to take deliveries by tank wagon over extended periods of time. The Commission found, upon evidence held by the Supreme Court to be ample, that these discriminations were in fact made by petitioners.

Petitioners contended that these sales to favored customers were made to meet the competition of other sellers of glucose and were, therefore, excepted from the prohibition of Section 2 (a) by the proviso of subsection (b) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended, which provides:

''Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price * * * was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.''

Said the Supreme Court:

''The only evidence said to rebut the prima facie case made by proof of the price discriminations was given by witnesses who had no personal knowledge of the transactions, and was limited to statements of each wit-
374 ness's, assumption or conclusion that the price discriminations were justified by competition. Examination of the testimony satisfies us, as it did the court below, that it was insufficient to sustain a finding that the lower prices sustain a finding that the lower prices allowed to favored customers were in fact made to meet competition. Hence, petitioners failed to sustain the burden of showing that the price discriminations were granted for the purpose of meeting competition.'' (987) (underlining ours)

Moreover, it is respondent's claim that the right to meet the lower prices offered by its competitors is an inherent right which exists even independent of express statute. In other words, the right of self-defense is in the category of inherent, inalienable rights, and protected against deprivation by the Constitution of the United States.

To this point we cite Fairmont Creamery Co. v. Minnesota, supra, in which the Supreme Court of the United States held that a denial by state statute of the right to meet competition was unconstitutional, by reason of the provisions of he Fourteenth Amendment. The same principle would apply to acts of Congress, in view of analogous provisions of the Fifth Amendment.

If, therefore, the amendment to the Clayton Act has (as the Commission's Findings of Fact herein state) rendered respondent's proof immaterial upon the question of 375 meeting the tank car gasoline prices of competitors, it is submitted that the amendment, in that respect, is invalid. However, the decision in the Moss case indicates that the 1936 amendment to the Clayton Act has not had that effect.

(h) All of the evidence taken in this proceeding and the Findings of Fact support the conclusion that the regular course of respondent's business in the Detroit metropolitan area involved only deliveries from its marine terminal at River Rouge, Michigan, where such gasoline has come to rest at the end of its interstate shipment, to its four jobber-customers in Detroit; that "in some instances the respondent has shipped gasoline and other petroleum products from its refinery at Whiting, Indiana, directly to purchasers thereof located in the Detroit Metropolitan Area." (Findings of Fact, p. 3) With respect to these incidental shipments across state lines to purchasers in Detroit, respondent has consistently asserted the applicability of the maxim of "de minimis non curat lex."

In addition to the cases cited on this point in respondent's Motion and Answer heretofore filed, reference to which is made, the United States Supreme Court, in the 376 case of Mabee v. White Plains Publishing Co., 90 L. Ed. Adv. Op. 455, involving a construction and application of the Fair Labor Standards Act (an "in commerce" statute), held on February 11, 1946 that the trial court's application of the "de minimis" maxim to the facts in that case was error. It there appeared that one-half of one per cent of the newspapers printed by respondent were regularly shipped in interstate commerce. That Act prohibited the shipment in commerce of "any goods" in the production of which any employee was employed in violation of the the Act.

Justice Douglas, speaking for the Court, said:

"Though we may assume that sporadic or occasional shipments of insubstantial amounts of goods were not intended to be included in that prohibition, there is no warrant for assuming that regular shipments in commerce are to be included or excluded dependent on their size." (underlining ours)

Again, relying upon the authorities cited herein and in respondent's Motion and Answer heretofore filed, we assert the inescapable conclusion that the original Order of the Commission should be vacated and an order should be entered dismissing the Complaint, for the reason that there is no evidence and no Finding of Fact in this proceeding that the transactions complained of were "in commerce" as defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, which will support any Order to Cease and Desist.

377 (i) The Findings of Fact and the Commission's Order and the proposed modifications thereof in this proceeding are purportedly premised on the conclusion that with respect to the period from 1936-1940 respondent could not justify its difference in prices to its tank car and tank wagon customers in Detroit of one and one-half cents on its house brand gasoline on the basis of its differences in cost of sale and delivery. We have heretofore asserted that the jobbers' margin ought not to be fixed or regulated on the basis of their supplier's costs. Evidence of the conflict which arises when any such attempt is made is to be found in a resolution recently adopted by the Illinois Petroleum Marketers Association—a jobber organization—which reads, in part, as follows:

"Be it further resolved that this association again reaffirms its support of the 'small business man' who has been such a tremendously large factor in making petroleum products readily available at every cross roads in the United States and has demonstrated most clearly his economic essentiality. The Association asserts its readiness and desire to submit facts and figures supporting its contention that the normal operating margin between tank car and tank wagon market be increased from 2 to 2.5c per gallon." (See: National Petroleum News, Feb. 20, 1946, p. 16.)

378 This action on the part of a jobber organization is also supportive of respondent's request for a reopening of this proceeding to admit up-to-date evidence of costs and competitive conditions. It will be noted that the jobbers are asking for an increased margin between the tank car and tank wagon prices, undoubtedly due to increases in their cost of operation which have occurred since the taking of evidence in this proceeding. It may be stated without fear of successful contradiction that similar increases in costs have been imposed upon or incurred by suppliers generally, so that present differentials allowed as between these two methods of distribution may be fully justified on the basis of evidence relating to the situation as it exists today as opposed to evidence upon which the Cease and Desist Order dated October 9, 1945 was based, namely, evidence relating to a situation which purportedly existed between 1936-1940.

379

III.

Respondent has heretofore pointed out that the Cease and Desist Order of October 9, 1945 and the proposed modifications of it are not in the public interest; that, on the contrary, the effect of any such order would be to restrain, lessen and injure competition, force jobbers out of business, and compel motorists and other consumers to pay higher prices for gasoline; that any such order would not be based on transactions in interstate commerce; that any such order cannot be supported by the pleadings or the evidence in this proceeding. Hence, the Commission should enter an order of dismissal in this case.

Respondent has also pointed out that if the Commission will not dismiss the Complaint, it is the duty of the Commission to reopen the proceedings for the introduction of up-to-date evidence, in view of the many changes in conditions that have occurred since the years 1936-1940, to which the evidence alone relates, and the rule of law that orders of the Federal Trade Commission, like decrees in equity, should be based on the situation that exists when the order is entered.

Hence, for the reasons stated in respondent's Motion
380 for rehearing and reconsideration of the Cease and Desist Order, in respondent's Answer and Brief in opposition to the first proposed modification of said Order, and in this Answer and Brief, it is respectfully submitted by respondent that:

(1) The original Order to Cease and Desist herein should be vacated, and, in lieu thereof, an order should be entered by the Commission dismissing the Complaint.

(2) The first proposed modification of said Cease and Desist Order should not be entered by the Commission, but, in lieu thereof, an order should be entered dismissing the Complaint.

(3) The second proposed modification of said Cease and Desist Order, as set forth in said letter of February 15, 1946, should not be entered by the Commission, but, in lieu thereof, an order should be entered dismissing the Complaint.

(4) In the event the relief asked for in (1), (2) and (3) above should not be granted, then the original Order to Cease and Desist, or either of the proposed modifications thereof, if substituted for said original Order, should be modified by deleting subparagraph 6 thereof and by amending subparagraphs 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 thereof so as to exclude 381 from the operation thereof all those who perform the jobber function, i. e., who maintain and operate their own bulk station facilities and deliver gasoline from such facilities by tank wagon to service stations, whether operated by themselves or others.

(5) In the event the relief prayed for in (1), (2), (3) and (4) should not be granted, then this proceeding should be reopened for the taking of additional and supplemental testimony and evidence.

(6) In the event none of the relief requested is granted, then an order should be entered by the Commission allowing respondent a reasonable additional period, but not less than sixty (60) days, after denial of such relief, within which to file with the Commission its written report concerning compliance with the Order to Cease and Desist heretofore entered herein or any modification thereof.

Dated March 27, 1946.

Respectfully submitted,

MacMahon, Abbott & Roberts,
By Arthur J. Abbott,
Attorneys for Respondent.
2230 Buhl Building,
Detroit (26), Michigan.

Buell F. Jones,
Albert L. Green,
Gordon E. Tappan,
Of Counsel for Respondent.
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago (80), Illinois.

382 BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

(Stamped: Federal Trade Commission—Received Apr. 8, 1946—Secretary.)

PETITION OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF INDEPENDENT PETROLEUM ASSOCIATIONS FOR LEAVE TO INTERVENE.

Comes now your Petitioner, an unincorporated association consisting of duly elected officers of the various state organizations of independent petroleum jobbers throughout the United States who, in turn, represent a large majority of the individuals and companies engaged in the wholesale distribution of refined petroleum products in the United States, and states that it and those whom it represents, and for whom it is authorized to speak, have a substantial interest in the matters at issue in the above entitled proceeding and asks Leave to Intervene therein and, in support of its Petition, says:

I.

That approximately twelve thousand individuals and companies in the United States are engaged in the business of purchasing gasoline and other refined petroleum products from refiners thereof and jobbing or selling such products at wholesale to independent dealers and operators of 383 service stations and other retail outlets at which such products are purchased by consumers; that, in addition thereto, many such jobbers or wholesalers, whom your Petitioner represents, and other jobbers or wholesalers of such products similarly situated, own, or lease, numerous service stations and similar outlets at which they sell at retail to consumers thereof gasoline and other refined petroleum products purchased by them from refiners.

II.

That in the above entitled proceeding the Federal Trade Commission has had under consideration the prices at which a large refiner of petroleum products may lawfully sell gasoline to jobbers or wholesalers thereof in the city of Detroit, Michigan, who, in addition to selling such gasoline to retailers, also operate service stations at which they sell gasoline at retail to consumers in competition with retailers thereof who purchase gasoline of like grade and quality from the refiner from whom such jobbers or wholesalers also purchase their supplies of gasoline.

III.

That jobbers or wholesalers of gasoline customarily operate bulk storage facilities and plants to which gasoline is delivered by means of tank cars or similar transportation agencies from the refineries of those from whom such gasoline is purchased and that such jobbers customarily sell and deliver such gasoline in smaller quantities by tank wagon from such bulk storage tanks to the service stations operated by retailers who purchase supplies from such jobbers and also to service stations owned, or leased, 384 and operated by such jobbers; that such jobbers, in addition to performing the function of making tank wagon deliveries of such gasoline to such retail outlets of both classes or types, perform various other services of recognized value to the retail outlets thus supplied by them, all of which services are furnished and rendered at a material cost to such jobbers.

IV.

That it has long been the recognized and accepted practice in the petroleum industry for refiners to sell gasoline to jobbers at tank car prices; and for both refiners who sell direct to retailers and for jobbers to sell and deliver gasoline to retailers thereof operating service stations at tank wagon prices, such tank wagon prices being from one and one-half to two and one-half cents per gallon above the current tank car price, the amount depending upon operating conditions; and that no distinction has been made in the price charged by refiners to jobbers for gasoline sold and delivered by tank cars, or other transportation agencies, at the jobbers' bulk plants dependent upon whether such gasoline is to be resold to retailers operating service stations or is to be resold through service stations operated by such jobbers, since it has been recognized in the petroleum industry that the functions performed by the jobber, and the cost thereof to the jobber, are the same in each instance.

V.

That under the terms of the Cease and Desist Order entered by the Federal Trade Commission on the 9th day of October, 1945, in the above entitled proceeding, the 385 respondent therein is prohibited from selling to jobbers at tank car prices any gasoline to be sold by the jobber at service stations owned and operated by him and said respondent is directed to cease selling to jobbers at less than tank wagon prices any gasoline to be sold by such jobbers at their own service stations in competition with the proprietors of service stations in the same marketing area to whom the respondent sells and delivers gasoline of like grade and quality at tank wagon prices, all in spite of the functions performed and the expenses incurred by the jobber in connection with supplying service stations owned or operated by him. That, furthermore, under the terms of such Cease and Desist Order, the respondent is required to guarantee that the jobber to whom gasoline is sold at tank car prices shall not resell any such gasoline to retailers thereof at less than the respondent's current tank wagon price at which gasoline of like grade and quality is sold by respondent to other retailers thereof competing in the same marketing area.

VI.

That counsel for the Federal Trade Commission has filed a motion with the Commission asking that said Cease and Desist Order entered herein on October 9th, 1945, be modified in certain respects, but that said modification, if granted, does not in any material respect alter the provisions of said original Cease and Desist Order with reference to the matters above outlined.

VII.

That although the Cease and Desist Order of the Commission entered in this proceeding relates only to the operations of the respondent herein and relates only to those 386 operations in the marketing area of Detroit, Michigan, the fact is that unquestionably whatever order may be finally entered in this proceeding may become the guide and pattern which will govern the marketing relations between refiners and jobbers of petroleum products throughout the United States in all areas where such jobbers resell to retailers who compete with other retailers to whom such refiners sell gasoline of like grade and quality, to the great and irreparable injury of thousands of established jobbers of petroleum products in whose behalf your Petitioner is authorized to present this petition.

Wherefore, your Petitioner, the National Council of Independent Petroleum Association, respectfully requests that it be permitted to intervene in the within proceeding; that oral argument be granted upon the motion of counsel for the Commission for modification of the aforesaid Cease and Desist Order of October 9, 1945, and that this Petitioner be permitted to participate by counsel of its selection in such oral argument.

Your Petitioner further respectfully requests the Commission to set aside the aforesaid Cease and Desist Order hereinbefore entered on October 9, 1945, and order the within proceeding reopened for further hearings and the taking of further testimony, including testimony as to jobbers' operations and costs, and that at such further hearing or hearings this Petitioner be permitted to present witnesses and testimony material to the issues raised in this proceeding and, by counsel, to cross-examine witnesses 387 presented by the Commission and by the respondent and that it further be permitted, by counsel, to file appropriate briefs and exceptions and to participate in oral argument thereon.

Dated at Chattanooga, Tennessee, this 5th day of April, 1946.

The National Council of Independent Petroleum Associations,
By H. L. Thatcher,
Chairman.

Hubert B. Fuller,
602 Union Commerce Building,
Cleveland 14, Ohio,
Attorney for Petitioners.

397 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Before Federal Trade Commission

At a regular session of the Federal Trade Commission, held at its office in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 9th day of August, A. D. 1946.

Commissioners:

William A. Ayres, Chairman.
Garland S. Ferguson.
Ewin L. Davis.
Robert E. Freer.
Lowell B. Mason.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

ORDER MODIFYING ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST ISSUED OCTOBER 9, 1945, AND DENYING CERTAIN OTHER MOTIONS.

This matter coming on to be heard upon motion of counsel for the Commission dated January 21, 1946, and supplemental motion dated February 15, 1946, to modify the order to cease and desist entered herein by the Commission on October 9, 1945, and answers and briefs of the respondent in opposition thereto; motion of the respondent filed January 28, 1946, for rehearing and reconsideration of the order to cease and desist; petition of the National Council of Independent Petroleum Associations for leave to intervene and to set aside the order to cease and desist and reopen the proceeding for further hearings and the taking of further testimony; and upon oral argument of counsel in support of and in opposition to said motions; and the Commission having duly considered the various motions, answers, briefs, and oral argument of counsel and the record herein and being now fully advised in the premises:

It Is Ordered that the motion of respondent for rehearing and reconsideration of the order to cease and desist be, and the same hereby is, denied;

It Is Further Ordered that the petition of National Council of Independent Petroleum Associations for leave to intervene and to set aside the order to cease and desist and reopen the proceeding for further hearings and the taking of further testimony be, and the same hereby is, denied.

It Is Further Ordered that the motions of counsel for the Commission dated January 21, 1946, and February 15, 1946, to modify the order to cease and desist issued October 9, 1945, be, and the same hereby are, granted, and that said order to cease and desist be modified substantially in the manner and to the extent as set out in the supplemental motion of counsel for the Commission dated February 15, 1946;

It Is Further Ordered that a modified order to cease and desist incorporating the modifications provided for in the supplemental motion of counsel for the Commission be issued and served upon the respondent.

By the Commission.

OTIS B. JOHNSON, Secretary.

399 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Before Federal Trade Commission

At a regular session of the Federal Trade Commission, held at its office in the City of Washington, D. C., on the 9th day of August, A. D. 1946.

Commissioners:

William A. Ayres, Chairman.
Garland S. Ferguson.
Ewin L. Davis.
Robert E. Freer.
Lowell B. Mason.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission as amended, answer of the respondent, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint as amended and in opposition thereto taken before a trial examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, report of the trial examiner upon the evidence and exceptions filed thereto, briefs in support of the complaint and in opposition thereto, and oral argument of counsel; and the Commission having made and entered its findings as to the facts and its conclusion that respondent has violated the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of an Act of Congress entitled, "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), as amended by Act approved June 19, 1936, (Robinson-Patman Act) issued its order to cease and desist on October 9, 1945. Thereafter, this matter came on for hearing before the Commission upon motion and supplemental motion by counsel for the Commission, to modify said order to cease and desist issued on October 9, 1945, 400 answers and briefs of respondent in opposition thereto, motion of respondent for rehearing and reconsideration of said order and motion of National Council of Independent Petroleum Associations for leave to intervene and to set aside said order to cease and desist and reopen the proceedings for further hearings and the taking of further testimony, and the Commission having considered said motions, answers, briefs, and oral argument of counsel and the record herein, and being of the opinion that a modified order to cease and desist should be issued in this cause, and having entered its order modifying said order to cease and desist to the extent set out in said supplemental motion of counsel for the Commission, issues this its modified order to cease and desist:

It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company (Indiana), a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device in connection with the sale of gasoline in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of such gasoline of like grade and quality as among purchasers:

1. By selling such gasoline to competing purchasers at different prices in the manner and under the circumstances stated in the findings as to the facts herein.

2. By continuing or resuming the discrimination in price of such gasoline referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

3. By otherwise discriminating in price between purchasers of such gasoline in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

401 4. By selling such gasoline to some retailers thereof at prices lower than the prices charged other retailers who in fact compete with them in the sale and distribution of such gasoline.

5. By allowing a price to any dealer, jobber or wholesaler on such gasoline sold by such dealer, jobber or wholesaler at retail lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers in their retailing capacity.

6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler resells such gasoline to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer.

For the purpose of comparison the term "price" as used in this order includes discounts, rebates, allowances and other terms and conditions of sale.

The above specified requirements of this order are subject, however, to the following provisos:

(a) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that were not found under the facts herein to have a tendency to injure, destroy or prevent competition with respondent's customers receiving the benefit of such differentials or with their customers.

402 (b) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as preventing any price differentials by respondent which make only due allowance for differences in respondent's cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

(c) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting a lower price to jobbers than to retailers where respondent thereby makes only due allowance for its differences in cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

(d) That none of the provisions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that reflect differences in the grades and qualities of such gasoline.

It Is Further Ordered that the respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

By the Commission.

Otis B. Johnson, Secretary.

A dissenting opinion by Commissioner Mason is attached.

403 Before Federal Trade Commission.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

DISSENTING OPINION OF COMMISSIONER LOWELL B. MASON TO MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

There are four reasons for this dissent:

1. The modified order is too indefinite and obscure to be followed;
2. The failure of the Commission to consider the evidence offered under the proviso of Section 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act;
3. The failure to prove injury to competition; and
4. The failure to establish jurisdiction.

First, in my judgment, the order is too indefinite and obscure to be followed. The first half merely says, "Look at what Standard did and don't do that." I refer specifically to those portions of the order which state that the respondent is ordered to cease and desist from discriminating

"1. By selling such gasoline * * * in the manner * * * stated in the findings * * *.

"2. By continuing or resuming the discriminations * * * described in the Commission's findings * * *.

404 "3. By otherwise discriminating * * * in a manner * * * similar to * * * the discriminations * * * referred to * * * in the Commission's findings * * *."

An order is a command to do or refrain from doing certain things, and thus should interpret the Robinson-Patman Act ideals into completely understandable, explicit directions.

To rely on the finding of facts to determine the command of an order is bad. How can business men determine the standard at which they must aim if the Commission will not set down in words and figures in the order what is illegal?

The order of the Commission, being of a negative quality, that is to say, an order to cease and desist, should ban specific acts and thus by a series of quasi-judicial exclusions, direct all men of enterprise toward the best practices of their trade.

The last half of the order is a paraphrasing of the general terms of the statute and thus in effect commands nothing specifically but counsels perfection generally.

I believe the primary burden rests on the Commission to present an understandable order so it can be obeyed. Otherwise, first the business man must guess what the law requires him to do, and then he must guess what the Commission requires he must do, to obey its order entered because he guessed wrong the first time.

405 In my opinion, the Federal Trade Commission should not swell that area of the law which cannot be known until litigated. A law that cannot be applied with certainty to the current affairs of everyday business is ex post facto in effect.

It simply means, instead of living in a country where a king declares today that what a citizen did yesterday should be a crime, the Federal Trade Commission declares what the business man did five years ago is interpreted as a violation of law today.

We have made a fetish out of "litigation to determine the law." And by obscure and unintelligible orders which rely on extraneous references to indicate their meaning, we will make a fetish out of "litigation to determine the litigation."

This may not be such a fault that our superior courts feel empowered to interdict. If so, there lies all the more reason for our diligence in protecting against it.

There is a parallel in Gulliver's Travels between the directions the tailors of Laputa use to measure Gulliver for a suit of clothes and the directions given by the Commission for the defendant to clothe itself with legality in this case.

Gulliver's tailors, immersed in the abstractions of life, used quadrants, angles and complicated formulae to determine a simple sleeve length. The result was a most ill-fitting suit.

Gulliver took some comfort out of the fact that at 406 least everyone else was as poorly dressed. But even this satisfaction is denied the defendant in this case, for here, only the defendant is subject to the obscurities of higher dialectics whilst his competitors roam the fields of competition secure in the knowledge that they don't have to guess how to carry out the order because it does not apply to them.

I shall exemplify what I consider the law and facts on the second and third points by illustrations, using fictitious characters and episodes.

This method is at odds with common legalistic austerity, but it suits the purpose of those who would care to know why there is a dissent in this case.

The case is about one distributor getting gas for less than another distributor.

There are many kinds of distributors—brokers, wholesalers, jobbers, retailers, etc., but in the gas business, two are most common:

The retailer who operates the corner filling station—the essential tools of his trade consist of a gas pump, rest-rooms, air for tires, and water for radiators.

The jobber—ordinarily has a railroad siding or delivery trucks that carry as much as a tank car, big storage tanks, a fat credit and enough retail distributors as customers to make the use of these facilities profitable.

These two types of distributors pay different prices for the gas they sell. The jobber—a cent and a half 407 less. It is easier to sell jobbers—they buy millions of gallons. The corner station buys thousands. The credit risks, the delivery costs, the storage costs, the sales costs are either less or entirely absent when selling to a jobber. Besides the saving of money, there are many other valid reasons which invite a producer to dispose of his stock at a lesser price to a jobber than to a retailer. In fine, it seems there is no quarrel over this generally accepted economic fact.

It is true the statute makes no references to classes of purchasers.[1] It bans any discrimination between purchasers without regard to class or function, provided competition is or tends to be injured. The point is, that competition is non-existent between different functions. The respondent claims that there is nothing in the Robinson-Patman Act to prevent different price scales based on the different functions of distributors. This claim is sound only because the function of a jobber is not in competition with the function of a retailer. To hold otherwise would be to ordain that the profit motive could no longer be legal in the distribution field except at two points, distribution 408 by the manufacturer and distribution by the retailer. All other intermediaries would be out of business unless they were willing to operate sans profit. If they should be out of business, that's up to Congress, not the Federal Trade Commission.

The trouble comes when the retailer function and the jobber function become joined—then we have a controversy such as in this instant case.

For the purpose of illustrating this point, let us assume:

You are a producer of gasoline. You sell gas to Jerry. Jerry pumps it out to the folks who drive up and say, "Fill 'er up." Jerry does a nice retail business. You sell him gas at the same price you sell all the other retailers in town. You are obeying the Robinson-Patman Act which says you mustn't give a cheaper price to one than another.

You also sell gas to Harold. Folks can't drive up to Harold's place and get five gallons. Harold won't mess around with the public—wiping windshields, putting water in radiators, etc. He buys from you in big batches and then resells it in smaller lots to retailers who have corner filling stations just like Jerry. Harold is a jobber. You sell him your gas at the same price you sell all the other jobbers in town, and that's O.K., too. Naturally, Harold's price is less than what you charge Jerry. In fact, it is one

---

[1] The Senate and House bills originally contained references to classes of distribution. These were struck out before passage. See Senate Report 1502, page 5, 74th Cong., 2nd Session; see also House Report 2287 74th Cong., 2nd Session.

and a half cents less, because Harold takes the job of 409 distributing your gasoline off your hands. This is worth something besides just the money you save.

Now nobody is in hot water yet because each person is being treated "Even Stephen" according to the line of work he is in. But take a look at Bill across the street. Bill has a retail gas station. Folks drive up and use Bill's washroom while he puts five gallons in their tank. That makes Bill a retailer. So you tell Bill you'll let him have your gas at your retailer's price.

Bill says, "Come with me."

He takes you around back and, lo and behold, Bill owns a side track for tank cars, delivery trucks for gas, and gigantic storage tanks. Then Bill takes you into his office. He shows you his books. Bill has plenty of money. He buys a million—two million gallons a year, not in little truck wagon loads, but in big batches. Bill can do this because he sells to a lot of other retail stations besides using some himself.

Then there is Martin. Martin has just as big a layout as Bill but he doesn't even bother to sell to other retailers. Martin has so many retail outlets of his own that he operates a wholesale establishment just for his own filling stations.

Are Bill and Martin retailers or wholesalers?

To tell the truth, they are like Pooh Bah in Gilbert and Sullivan's opera, the Mikado. It all depends on whether you look at them front or back.

But, being a big gasoline company, you can't afford 410 to take any chances on Uncle Sam suing you for price discrimination.

So you say, "Bill and Martin, I'm sorry, old fellows, but you look like retailers to me. I'm going to have to charge you a cent and a half higher price than what I charge Harold, the jobber, who doesn't do any retail business of his own."

Bill and Martin, being vigorous American business men, resent this very much. Bill and Martin buy just as much as Harold buys. Their equipment is just as good. They take as much work off your hands as Harold does, and their money looks just as good as Harold's any day. They want the same treatment.

Now some folks think that because you are a big gasoline company, you can tell Bill and Martin to "take it or leave it." That's the way it used to be in the old days.

You used to be the big frog in the puddle. Nowadays the puddle is bigger, the frogs are bigger, and there are lots more of them.

Tell Bill he is a retailer and entitled only to a retailer's discount, and five seconds later all the other frogs put on their glasses and say, "Why, Bill, you look exactly like a jobber to me. We'll give you the jobber price!"

So you lose Bill to a competitor whose price you wouldn't meet, and maybe you lose a couple of more customers for the same reasons, about the same time.

This all makes life very complicated.

Million gallons customers don't grow on trees, and tomorrow Martin is going to be around to see you about 411 his cent and a half discount. Treat Martin like a retailer, you're out of business (at least, as far as Martin is concerned). Treat Martin as a jobber, Uncle Sam will sue you as a price discriminator (just as the Federal Trade Commission has done in this case).

When passing the Robinson-Patman Act, Congress had just such a dilemma in mind. So it added a proviso to the law (in Sec. 2 [b], Robinson-Patman Act) which said in effect: "If somebody else is offering Martin or Bill gas for a cent and a half less, then you can, too, and show as a defense in a suit by the Federal Trade Commission that you were only meeting your competitor's price."

That's what Congress says, and on the 26th day of February of this year, the Federal Trade Commission agreed with Congress.[1]

But that's not what the Commission says in the instant case.

Now the Commission says you can't offer such a defense, regardless of the statute, and if by chance such a defense is admitted into the testimony, and if by chance it is proven by a greater weight of the evidence, and if in fact no testimony is offered in opposition, still the Commission will disregard such a defense.

412 If you apply the order in this instant case to the example I have just given, you will have to give Martin and Bill the lower jobber's price on all gas that they sell to other retail stations, but charge them the higher retailer's price on all gas they use in their own stations. In other words, they pay two different prices for the same gas in the same barrel, depending on what they use the stuff for.

---

[1] In the Ferro case, Docket 5155, the Commission provided that the order to cease and desist "shall not prevent the respondent manufacturers from showing that any lower price to any purchaser was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor."

That is what is known as "determining price by use."

This is foreign to the free enterprise system observed in our country. For the Commission to administer prices by determining which users shall be required to pay higher prices for a commodity than other users, tends to divide the distributive functions of our economy into hostile groups, each striving for government favoritism rather than for consumer acceptance.

It is time we moved the area of competition back into the open marts of trade where service and price to the consumer are the arbiters of success.

It is of interest to note that the social economic ideology of "determining price by use" embodied in the Commission's order was once considered and flatly rejected by Congress. "Pricing by use" was included in the House Committee (Judiciary) Report 2287 of March 31, 1936, 74th Cong. 2nd Session. This is what it said:

> "For the purpose of such classification of customers as wholesalers or jobbers or retailers, the character of the > 413 selling of the purchasers and not the buying shall determine the classification, and any purchaser who * * * does both a wholesale and retail business shall, irrespective of quantity purchased, be classified as a wholesaler on purchases for sale to retailers only * * * and as a retailer on purchases for sale to consumers."

This ideology Congress refused to adopt and before final passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, all such language was stricken from the bill.

There are those who feel this country requires such a channeling of a business man's field of activity. This is strong medicine for a free economy to swallow. If needed, it is up to Congress and not this Commission to write the prescription. As yet, Congress has not seen fit to pass such bills that have been introduced to accomplish this end. Nor has Congress enacted any law preventing one from meeting his competitor's price. The competitive system still contemplates that the seller will get as much as he can and that the buyer will pay no more than he has to.

I cannot subscribe to an order that embraces what Congress specifically rejected.

Not only did Congress reject the ideology of "pricing by use," but obviously contemplating just such a situation as the instant case presents, embodied in the Act a proviso in Section 2 (b) as follows:[1]

> "Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie > 414 case thus made by showing that his lower price * * * to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor * * *."

These words cannot be denied, and it is difficult to see how they can be ignored, but the decision in this case waives them aside, and the findings of facts and order have completely evaded any discussion of what the respondent proved by greater weight of the evidence (in fact, I find the testimony uncontroverted). The respondent proved that it had granted a lower price in good faith to meet a competitor's price. The trial examiner who heard the case so held, and I as a Commissioner would so find.

The Commission concludes as a matter of law that it is unnecessary for it to determine this fact. In my opinion, this is not sound. So far as the Federal Trade Commission is concerned, I believe deliberate and intentional matching of a competitor's lower price is legitimate as long as the proviso on Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act stays on the statute books.

It is lawful for a seller to meet a competitor's price, unless there is a showing that the meeting and matching is a planned, common course of action, resulting in a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

In the instant case, the respondent, having lost two customers because it would not meet the prices of its competitors, made up its corporate mind to hang on to what business it had left, and in good faith, and what appears to me only ordinary common sense, lowered its price to that of its competitors.

In my opinion, the rejection of this defense by the Commission is fatal to the validity of the order.

So much for the second point.

Let us next consider the findings of the Commission that "the effect of the discrimination * * * has been * * * substantially to lessen competition and to injure, destroy and prevent competition * * * in the resale of gasoline."

I take it, an injury to a competitor must be illegal before it can be banned. We mouth the phrase "injury to competition" so often that we confuse it with "injury to a competitor."

---

[1] 49 Stat. 1526 (1936); 15 U. S. C. A. 13.

When you meet your competitor's lower price so as to keep a customer he sought to take away from you, he feels he has been injured. Of course he has, but that does not mean that competition has been injured. On the contrary, it may have improved.

In theory, it would be nice if one could do business without having people come along and meet his price. But in a free economy people are always trying to do that very thing; inveigling customers away by better services or cheaper prices. That's the customers' protection. The well established companies refer to these people as "chiselers." Those who are not well established, and who are trying to secure a foothold in the market place, refer to the well established companies who meet their lower 416 prices as "monopolists" or "price discriminators."
It all depends on which foot the shoe is on.

The man who sells a customer something for less is entitled to his patronage, but he must not expect a monopoly on that patronage. As long as the proviso in Section 2 (b) stands, others are free to come in and take a shot at the goose, too.

In my opinion, the testimony showing injury to competitors in this case is in reality a demonstration of the existence of competition.

There is another phase of this order bearing on the question of competition which warrants scrutiny.

As long as a buyer can get goods of like grade and quality at the same price or even less, he cannot claim competition has been injured because you refuse to sell him your goods at the price he wants to pay. This prohibition against discrimination is specifically limited by the statute to the grade and quality of the products sold, and has nothing to do with the popularity of the merchant or his brand, or the public acceptance of trade names.

The Act makes no mention of "major brands" or "off brand" commodities. Its sole criterion, so far as the words of the statute are concerned, has to do with the physical properties of the commodity. The reason for this is obvious. Congress realized the impracticality of weighing the mercurial popularities of name acceptance in 417 determining discrimination. Hence, it set the standard of discrimination on a factual rather than on a beauty contest basis.

Grade and quality are stable things, determinable with mathematical certainty. There is no danger in empowering a commission to ascertain grade or quality—but "public acceptance!" How are we to determine what is a major or a minor brand, and how much differential shall be justified from one to the other? When Congress gives us that power, there will be time enough to worry about the many possibilities of abuses which can grow out of such authority.

As the law now stands, a discriminatory price is lower than what others have to pay to obtain goods of "like grade and quality." It has nothing to do with the relative popularity of brand names.

To illustrate: Let's suppose you are producing a gasoline that is sold on name acceptance but which is of the same grade and quality as many other gasolines which have no trade names. The unbranded gas sells for from two to six cents under what you sell your branded gas for.

You call your product Kelley's Kreem Gas (fictitious name, of course). It is accepted everywhere; everybody knows the name. You sell it for twelve cents to Bill. That is one and a half cents under the retailer price Jerry pays.

Jerry runs to the Federal Trade Commission and complains he is being discriminated against.

"Does it hurt?" asks the Commission.

418 "Of course it hurts," says Jerry. "I want Kelley's Kreem Gas at the same price Bill, the jobber, pays."

The Federal Trade Commission looks at the law. "It doesn't say anything here in the statute about Kelley's Kreem Gas. In fact, the statute doesn't even mention brand names; it just says that discrimination in price of goods of 'like grade and quality,' if it tends to prevent competition, shall be unlawful.

"Now, can you get gas just as good in grade and quality as Kelley's Kreem from other folks for a lot less?"

"Sure," says Jerry. "There is plenty of competition willing to sell me gas of like grade and quality for even less than Kelley sells to Bill. But I want Kelley Kreem Gas."

"All right, all right," says the Federal Trade Commission. "Congress used the words, 'of like grade and quality.' I'll interpret it to read, 'of like grade, quality or brands.'

"Then I'll enter an order against Kelley's Kreem saying he mustn't sell such gas at different prices. This will let everybody else sell unbranded, but just as good, gas for any price you want."

Let us take a careful look at the order in the instant case to see if I have paralleled my example with the facts at hand.

The report of the Federal Trade Commission trial 419 examiner in the instant case lists nine "major" companies in the Detroit area. He lists three companies as "doubtful," using as his yardstick the fact that some witness did not list them as "major" and then he describes ten other companies as secondary. This cataloging has nothing to do with the quality of the gas sold but relates to the relative importance of the companies.

These secondary companies who merchandise relatively unknown brands, plus the unbranded gas sold by the "doubtful" major companies, amount to about twelve per cent of the total Detroit business. This gas is sold for as much as six cents off the branded price and always at least two cents off.

The sole difference, so far as the record indicates, is that 88 per cent of the gasoline sold in the Detroit area carries a ~~brand name,~~ while twelve per cent is unbranded. There is no distinction as to quality or grade. This would indicate that at no time were there any competitors shut out from buying gasoline of like grade and quality at prices ranging from two to six cents less than they were paying, and at a price always less than the respondent's so-called discriminatory price.

As long as the other gas of like grade and quality was offered for sale at a lower price, where could there be injury to competition except on a plane that was not contemplated by Congress, namely, on a plane between names and not qualities or grades?

420 In the Corn Products case,[1] the discriminations were in "feed and meal," not in "Joe Blow's Feed" or "Blue Plate Meal." In the Corn Products case there was no effort to add words to the statute so that the Commission could hold a popularity contest on public acceptance. There the determination only had to be that the feed and meal were of the same grade and quality. In the instant case, the facts are that at all times there were plenty of competitors offering gas of as good a grade ~~and~~ quality as the respondent at prices lower than respondent's so-called discriminatory prices.

---

[1] 65 Sup. Ct. 961.

I point this out because in the case under consideration, neither the respondent nor the trial attorney has seen fit to stress the point. Perhaps the respondent doesn't like to admit there is unbranded gas of the same grade and quality as its own product, and the trial attorney would find it difficult to prove injury to competition in like grades and qualities if it were shown that there was plenty of gas of like grade and quality available at much less than the alleged discriminatory price of the respondent.

The instant case has important public aspects and the Commission is entitled to consider all the facts involved before entering an order. There were two orders entered in this case, an original, entered prior to my membership on the Commission, and a modified order being considered. Let ~~us~~ look at them.

421 The original order referred to gasoline "of like grade and quality." This was subsequently changed so as to refer to only the gas described in the findings, namely, three brands—"Solite with Ethyl," "Red Crown" and "Stanolind," and all reference to the statutory language "of like grade and quality" was stricken.

There might be a moral if not a legal justification for this tinkering with an act of Congress if one considers that without such an amendment the unknown producers would be at a great disadvantage, but perhaps the reason for the change lies deeper. If the order were left in the words of the statute, it would be impossible to deny that there was plenty of gas of like grade and quality available at much less than the alleged discriminatory price of Standard. This being true, the charge of injury, or even potential injury, flies out the window—for no one was injured by being shut out from buying gas of like grade and quality.

Now let us consider the fourth reason for this dissent.

The findings do not disclose facts sufficient to warrant the Commission assuming jurisdiction. If the Commission felt the evidence supported a conclusion that the purchases involving discriminatory prices were in interstate commerce, it should have so found. The Commission did not so find. It found that the respondent was engaged in interstate commerce. It avoided any reference to the 422 actual purchases which under the statute I believe must be shown to have been in interstate commerce. This is not enough. The statute is explicit that the "purchases involved, in such discriminations" must be in interstate commerce.

The inhibition does not include every action by a company engaged in interstate commerce, but is limited to those acts which themselves are in interstate commerce.

In my opinion, the Commission in this case has dealt with the facts and the law just as Procrustes dealt with the unfortunate guests who slept in his bed. The Commission has cut off the facts of the case that do not fit in with the order, and it has stretched out the statute until it is no longer the law Congress passed but becomes the law that the Commission would like to enforce. It requires private policing of one man's business by another. It freezes the avenues of the trade to set patterns. It eliminates the profit for one type of distributor and guarantees the profit to another. It subjects branded goods to restrictions not applied to unbranded goods. It attempts to settle a private struggle between enterprisers by opening a Pandora's box of governmental directives on a minutia of accounting and distributing practices that bear scant relation to what Congress sought to inhibit.

I am against it.

Lowell B. Mason,
Commissioner.

August 9, 1946.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit.

Standard Oil Company, Petitioner, vs. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent.	No. 9215.

PETITION TO REVIEW AND SET ASIDE MODIFIED ORDER OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION TO CEASE AND DESIST ENTERED AUGUST 9, 1946, AND STATEMENT OF POINTS.

(Filed Oct. 4, 1946. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.)

To the Honorable Judges of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit:

Your petitioner, Standard Oil Company, brings this action under the provisions of Section 11 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. A. Section 21) to review and set aside the order of the Federal Trade Commission and respectfully shows:

I.

The petitioner is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business located at 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. The petitioner is engaged, among other things, in the business of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products, among and within various states, and intrastate distribution of such products within the Detroit, Michigan, metropolitan area.

II.

The respondent, Federal Trade Commission, is a federal administrative tribunal created by Act of Congress.

III.

This action is brought by the petitioner under the aforesaid Section 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended, and venue is based upon the provision of said statute permitting any person required by the order of the Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist from an alleged violation of said Act, to obtain a review of said Commission's order by filing a written petition, praying that the order of the Commission be set aside, with the Circuit Court of Appeals within the Circuit wherein such person resides or carries on business, or within the Circuit wherein the alleged violation is claimed to have been or is being committed. The petitioner's corporate domicile and its principal business office are both within the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, and it carries on business within said Circuit.

IV.

On November 29, 1940, the Federal Trade Commission in a proceeding entitled "In the Matter of: Standard Oil Company, Docket 4389", issued its complaint charging that it had reason to believe that the petition has violated and is violating the provisions of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. A. Section 13). Thereafter said complaint was amended and as amended charged in paragraph three, in effect, that since June 19, 1936, the petitioner sold and is selling its gasoline to four Detroit jobbers (referred to in the complaint as dealers), which paragraph reads as follows:

> "Paragraph Three: Since June 19, 1936, in the course and conduct of its business above described, respondent has sold, and now sells, its gasoline to four Detroit dealers engaged in reselling said gasoline at retail, at prices substantially lower than the prices charged by respondent to its other Detroit retailer purchasers for gasoline of the same grade and quality. Said four dealers are: Citrin-Kolb Oil Company; Stikeman Oil Company, Inc.; Wayne Oil Company; and Ned's Auto Supply Company. Each of said dealers has, since said date, owned or operated in the Detroit area one or more gasoline stations where said gas> oline so purchased has been resold (and, except as to Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., is now resold) at retail to consumers thereof, in competition with other retailers of gasoline purchasing the same from respondent or from other manufacturers. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., and Wayne Oil Company, respectively, are also engaged in the business of reselling at wholesale, a large part of the gasoline so purchased by them from respondent, to other gasoline dealers in the Detroit area who are likewise competitively engaged in the resale thereof at retail. Said three named wholesalers have knowingly received the benefit of said lower prices. The prices at which respondent has sold its gasoline to the four dealers above named, from time to time since June 19, 1936, have ranged from one-half cent to one and three-quarters cents per gallon lower than the prices charged by it to other Detroit retailers for the same gasoline. Under normal merchandising conditions, during the greater part of that period, respondent's price to said four dealers for its 'Red Crown' gasoline (its largest selling brand) has been one and one-half cents below its price therefor to other retailers." (as amended)

Said complaint further charged in paragraph four:

> "Paragraph Four: The effect of the discrimination in price described in the preceding paragraph hereof has been and may be to injure, destroy and prevent competition with each of the four dealers named in said Paragraph, and with their respective customers, in the resale of gasoline." (as amended)

V.

Thereafter the petitioner, on January 14, 1941, filed its answer to said complaint denying any violation of the aforesaid Act or statutes, denying the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission and setting forth its defenses to said alleged violations. Thereafter, upon the amendment of said complaint, this answer was allowed to stand as the petitioner's answer to the amended complaint.

VI.

Thereafter (from March 10, 1941 to August 4, 1942) Federal Trade Commission hearings were held before Webster Ballinger, the Trial Examiner appointed by said Commission in said proceedings, and evidence introduced by both parties is recorded and on file in the Commission's office. On September 22, 1942, the petitioner filed its separate motions before the Commission to dismiss the complaint, to strike portions of the record and to amplify the record. On June 25, 1943, said Trial Examiner issued his report upon the evidence, a copy of which was served upon petitioner, to which exceptions were filed by petitioner.

VII.

Thereafter briefs were filed by both parties with the Commission, oral argument was had on January 19, 1944, and on October 9, 1945, said Commission issued its "Findings as to the Facts and Conclusion" and also issued, under the same date, its original Order to Cease and Desist.

VIII.

Thereafter this matter came on for further hearing before the Commission upon motion and supplemental motion by the Commission's counsel to modify said Order to Cease and Desist issued on October 9, 1945, answers and briefs of petitioner in opposition thereto and motion of petitioner for rehearing and reconsideration and for leave to adduce additional testimony. Said Commission, without in any manner changing its Findings as to the Facts and Conclusion, denied the petitioner's motion and issued on August 9, 1946, its Modified Order to Cease and Desist, which modified order provides in part as follows:

> It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company (Indiana) a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents, and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device in connection with the sale of gasoline in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of such gasoline of like grade and quality as among purchasers:
>
> 1. By selling such gasoline to competing purchasers at different prices in the manner and under the circumstances stated in the findings as to the facts herein.

2. By continuing or resuming the discriminations in price of such gasoline referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

3. By otherwise discriminating in price between purchasers of such gasoline in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

4. By selling such gasoline to some retailers thereof at prices lower than the prices charged other retailers who in fact compete with them in the sale and distribution of such gasoline.

5. By allowing a price to any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler on such gasoline sold by such dealer, jobber or wholesaler at retail lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with such dealers, jobbers, or wholesalers in their retailing capacity.

6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler resells such gasoline to any of its said retailer customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer.

For the purpose of comparison the term "price" as used in this order includes discounts, rebates, allowances and other terms and conditions of sale.

The above specified requirements of this order are subject, however, to the following provisos:

(a) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that were not found under the facts herein to have a tendency to injure, destroy or prevent competition with respondent's customers receiving the benefit of such differentials or with their customers.

(b) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as preventing any price differentials by respondent which make only due allowance for differences in respondent's cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

(c) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting a lower price to jobbers than to retailers where respondent thereby makes only due allowance for its differences in cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

(d) That none of the provisions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that reflect differences in the grades and qualities of such gasoline.

Said modified order further provides that the petitioner shall, within sixty days after service of said order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with said order. No statement of compliance has been filed by this petitioner.

IX.

The said "Findings as to the Facts and Conclusion" of said Commission are, in material and controlling respects, without substantial support in the evidence received by said Commission in said proceeding, but are contrary to such evidence; that said "Conclusion" of said Commission in said proceeding is not supported by the findings nor by the evidence received by said Commission; that the order entitled "Modified Order to Cease and Desist", so made by the said Commission against your petitioner, is not supported by the record before said Commission in said proceeding and is beyond the authority and jurisdiction of said Commission.

X.

The said Commission erred in taking or purporting to take jurisdiction over your petitioner by the issuance of its complaint and that the said "Modified Order to Cease and Desist" is erroneous, contrary to law, and wholly void, all as is more particularly set forth in the following Statement of Points:

Statement of Points.

The Commission erred in the following respects:

1. In taking or purporting to take jurisdiction over petitioner by the service and filing of its complaint and by the issuance of its Modified Order to Cease and Desist in said proceeding; because

    (a) no finding was made by said Commission that any of the transactions complained of were "in commerce" as defined in the Clayton Act, as amended, and

    (b) there is no evidence in the record, nor was any evidence available, to support any such finding, if one had been made.

2. In failing to make a finding that the prices alleged in the complaint to be discriminatory were in fact made by petitioner in good faith to meet lower prices offered to its customers by competitors of petitioner, notwithstanding the fact that the Trial Examiner so found on uncontroverted evidence.

3. In erroneously concluding, as a matter of law, that uncontroverted proof of "the meeting of an equally low price of a competitor in good faith is not a defense to a charge of price discrimination where competitive injury is affirmatively shown."

4. In that the Commission's construction of Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended, if upheld, would constitute an arbitrary and unreasonable infringement of petitioner's inherent and inalienable rights guaranteed by the Federal Constitution and would deprive it of liberty of contract and property in violation of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Furthermore, if contrary to the petitioner's contention, the transactions complained of are held to be "in commerce" as defined in said Clayton Act, then said Commission's construction of Section 2 (b), if upheld, further creates an unreasonable and discriminatory burden upon interstate commerce in violation of Article I, Section 8, Clause 3, of the Constitution of the United States.

5. In finding, without any substantial evidence in the record to support such finding, that the effect of the transactions complained of "has been, and may be, substantially to lessen competition and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition with each of said four dealers" (jobbers) "and with their respective customers in the resale of gasoline."

6. In failing to confine its Modified Order to Cease and Desist to the issues joined by the complaint and answer in said proceeding, i. e., by attempting to regulate and control the prices at which petitioner's jobber customers, to whom petitioner sells and delivers branded gasolines, shall resell such gasolines.

7. In finding, without any substantial evidence in the record to support such finding, that petitioner "arbitrarily classified" its said customers in Detroit as jobbers for the purpose of allowing them the usual and customary functional discount allowed to jobbers in the industry and trade, and in failing to find upon the uncontroverted evidence in said record that "each of the four dealers were at the time of their recognition, ever since have been, and are now, under industry practice and contemplation, bona fide jobbers," which was the finding of the Trial Examiner upon such uncontroverted evidence.

8. In finding that "the evidence submitted by the respondent" (petitioner herein) "fails to establish that the price differential allowed by respondent to the above-named jobbers of 1½ cents per gallon off tank-wagon price made due allowance for differences in respondent's costs of sale and delivery resulting from differing methods and quantities in which it sold its gasoline to said jobbers" and in completely rejecting petitioner's evidence of cost justification.

9. In requiring petitioner, by its Modified Order to Cease and Desist, to regulate, police and control the prices at which its jobber customers shall resell gasoline (a) to retailer purchasers, and (b) at retail through their own retail outlets.

10. In failing expressly to limit the applicability of its Modified Order to Cease and Desist to

(a) sales by petitioner to its jobber customers in Detroit of its branded gasolines, there being no issue joined in the pleadings in said proceeding and no evidence in the record with respect to any sales of other grades or qualities of gasoline by petitioner, and

(b) sales by petitioner to the four jobbers named in the complaint, there being no issue joined in the pleadings in said proceeding with respect to any alleged discriminations in connection with petitioner's sales of gasoline to any other jobbers in Detroit or elsewhere.

11. In attempting, by its Modified Order to Cease and Desist, to maintain high and non-competitive retail prices for the sale of branded gasolines, contrary to the public interest.

12. In attempting, by its Modified Order to Cease and Desist, to regulate and control the terms and conditions of purely intrastate sales, to-wit, sales of branded gasolines by jobbers located and doing business wholly and exclusively within the State of Michigan to retailer-purchasers (service station dealers) located and doing business wholly and exclusively within the State of Michigan.

13. In denying petitioner's motion for rehearing and reconsideration and for the taking of supplemental testimony herein, upon the several grounds stated in said motion.

14. In that said Modified Order to Cease and Desist is not based upon facts existing at the time of the issuance thereof, but upon a finding of facts which related to a period of time approximately five years prior thereto.

15. In that said Modified Order to Cease and Desist is vague, indefinite and uncertain in the following particulars:

(a) It is couched in the language of the statute, and, without any specificity, purports to prohibit petitioner from violating the law.

(b) It purports to prohibit discriminations "in a manner and degree substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein".

(c) It fails to inform petitioner, and others similarly situated, with reasonable certainty as to what specific act or acts are prohibited and, therefore, does not conform to the legal requirement of affording an ascertainable standard or basis of conduct.

(d) Proviso (d) of said order purports to require that price differentials shall "reflect" differences in grade and qualities of commodities sold.

Wherefore the petitioner prays that the court exercise its jurisdiction over the parties and subject matter herein and that the court review the aforesaid Findings as to Facts and Conclusion and the Commission's Modified Order to Cease and Desist and enter a decree setting aside said Modified Order of the Commission issued August 9, 1946, and dismissing the complaint against the petitioner and that such other and further decrees be made by this court as may be deemed just.

Dated: October 3rd, 1946.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner.

By Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
W. H. Van Oosterhoat,
of
Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle Street,
Chicago 2, Illinois,

Arthur J. Abbott
of MacMahon, Abbott and Roberts,
2230 Buhl Building,
Detroit 26, Michigan,
Its Attorneys.

Buell F. Jones,
Albert L. Green,
Gordon E. Tappan,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 80, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

* * (Caption—9215) * *

CROSS PETITION OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

To the Honorable United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit:

Comes now the Federal Trade Commission, respondent, and files this its cross petition against Standard Oil Company, petitioner, and respectfully shows unto the Court that:

1. On October 4, 1946, petitioner filed herein its petition praying this Court to review and set aside a certain modified order to cease and desist issued by respondent on August 9, 1946, in the matter of Standard Oil Company, Federal Trade Commission Docket No. 4389. Said order required petitioner to cease and desist from engaging in certain conduct and practices, therein specified, found by respondent to be in violation of the provisions of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (49 Stat. 1526; 15 U. S. C. A. Section 13(a)).

2. Said modified order to cease and desist was duly served upon petitioner on August 12, 1946, and since said date has been and now is in full force and effect.

3. Respondent has certified and filed with the Court herein a transcript of the entire record of the proceeding in which said modified order to cease and desist was entered. Such proceeding was had in compliance with and in due conformity to all provisions of the law, and the findings as to the facts and conclusion and modified order to cease and desist made and entered therein by respondent are valid.

4. By virtue of the provisions of Section 11 of the Clayton Act (38 Stat. 734, 735-736; 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 21), this Court has jurisdiction and power to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony and proceedings herein a decree affirming said modified order to cease and desist and commanding petitioner to obey the same and comply therewith.

Wherefore, the Federal Trade Commission, respondent, prays that petitioner's petition to review be dismissed, and that the Court do make and enter herein a decree affirming the respondent's order to cease and desist and commanding Standard Oil Company, petitioner, to obey the same and comply therewith.

Respectfully submitted,
Federal Trade Commission,
By Walter B. Wooden,
Associate General Counsel,
Attorney for Federal Trade Commission.

Endorsed: In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. * * (Caption—9215) * *. Cross Petition of Federal Trade Commission. Filed Nov. 18, 1946. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

* * (Caption—9215) * *

STIPULATION.

1. It Is Hereby Stipulated And Agreed by and between the parties hereto, by their respective attorneys of record, that, subject to the approval of the court, the following exhibits filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission as a part of the transcript in these proceedings, and heretofore received in evidence by said Federal Trade Commission as original exhibits, shall be physical exhibits and as such they shall constitute, for all purposes, a part of the record, both upon review in this court and upon any petition for certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States that may hereafter be filed in this cause and it shall not be necessary for either party to have copies of said exhibits printed or included in the printed record and such exhibits may be referred to by counsel in their respective briefs and may be presented to the court upon argument of this cause:

Respondent's Exhibits (Petitioner herein)

18-K, 18-S, 18-T, 18-V, 18-W, 18-X, 18-Y, 18-Z, 18-Z-7, 18-Z-8, 18-Z-9, 18-Z-12, 18-Z-13, 18-Z-14, 18-Z-15, 18-Z-16, 18-Z-18, 18-Z-20, 18-Z-22, 18-Z-23, 18-Z-24, 18-Z-25, 18-Z-28, 18-Z-29, 18-Z-31, 18-Z-32, 18-Z-33, 18-Z-34, 18-Z-35, 18-Z-36, 18-Z-37, 18-Z-39, 18-Z-41, 18-Z-42, 18-Z-43, 18-Z-44, 18-Z-46, 18-Z-47, 18-Z-50,

62
64-A to H, inclusive
65-A to H, inclusive
66-A to H, inclusive
67-A to H, inclusive

68 filed separately as $\frac{2\text{-}1}{4389\text{-}1}$

69 filed separately as $\frac{2\text{-}2}{4389\text{-}1}$

70 filed separately as $\frac{2\text{-}3}{4389\text{-}1}$

71 filed separately as $\frac{2\text{-}4}{4389\text{-}1}$

76

2. It Is Further Stipulated And Agreed that the following pleadings contained in Part 1, Pleadings (11-29-40 to 10-9-45), and in Part 2, Pleadings (10-10-45 to 8-9-46), of the transcript, filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission with the court herein, are not material to the consideration of this cause and that the same may be omitted from the printed record:

(1) Order extending time for filing answer, dated December 26, 1940, Part 1, page 52.

(2) Letter of H. R. Hanley dated April 14, 1941, Part 1, pages 56 to 58.

(3) Order for further hearing dated May 23, 1941, Part 1, page 59.

(4) Order fixing time and place for taking testimony, dated September 18, 1941, Part 1, page 60.

(5) Order setting further hearings dated January 17, 1942, Part 1, page 61.

(6) Order resetting case for hearing, dated March 21, 1942, Part 1, page 62.

(7) Motion of Respondent for suspension of proceedings, dated March 23, 1942, Part 1, pages 63 to 65.

(8) Affidavit of H. R. Hanley in support of Respondent's motion for suspension of proceedings, dated March 23, 1942, Part 1, pages 66 to 69.

(9) Affidavit of C. T. Bergeson in support of Respondent's motion for suspension of proceedings dated March 23, 1942, Part 1, pages 70 to 95.

(10) Supplemental affidavit of C. T. Bergeson on motion for suspension of proceedings, dated April 3, 1942, Part 1, pages 96 to 107.

(11) Order cancelling hearing dated April 17, 1942, Part 1, page 109.

(12) Order denying motion dated June 17, 1942, Part 1, page 110.

(13) Order setting case for further hearings, dated June 22, 1942, Part 1, page 111.

(14) Respondent's motion for time within which to submit statement of facts, dated September 22, 1942, Part 1, pages 185 to 187.

(15) Affidavit of H. R. Hanley in support of motion for time to submit statement of facts, Part 1, pages 188 to 192.

(16) Order providing for argument of interlocutory motions dated October 10, 1942, Part 1, page 195.

(17) Order extending time within which to file statement of facts, dated December 28, 1942, Part 1, page 200.

(18) Order further extending time within which to file statement of facts dated February 20, 1943, Part 1, page 201.

(19) Order extending time for filing Trial Examiner's report upon the evidence, dated May 8, 1943, Part 1, page 205.

(20) Order further extending time for filing Trial Examiner's report upon the evidence, dated June 9, 1943, Part 1, page 206.

(21) Order further extending time for filing Trial Examiner's report upon the evidence, dated June 30, 1943, Part 1, page 207.

(22) Order extending Respondent's time for filing exceptions to Trial Examiner's report, dated July 17, 1943, Part 1, page 208.

(23) Order extending time for filing brief in support of the complaint, dated July 17, 1943, Part 1, page 209.

(24) Motion for extension of time to file Respondent's brief, dated September 28, 1943, Part 1, pages 210 and 211.

(25) Affidavit of Arthur J. Abbott in support of motion dated September 30, 1943, Part 1, pages 212 to 214.

(26) Order extending time for filing Respondent's brief, dated October 9, 1943, Part 1, page 215.

(27) Order further extending time for filing Respondent's brief, dated November 22, 1943, Part 1, page 216.

(28) Notices re final argument dated December 17, 1943, Part 1, pages 217 and 218.

(29) Order extending time for filing Respondent's brief, etc., dated December 23, 1943, Part 1, page 219.

(30) Motion for extension of time, dated November 29, 1945, Part 2, pages 220 and 221.

(31) Order extending time for filing report of compliance dated December 11, 1945, Part 2, page 222.

(32) Stipulation for extension of time to answer order to show cause, dated February 4, 1946, Part 2, page 292.

(33) Order granting extension of time to answer order to show cause, dated February 7, 1946, Part 2, page 293.

(34) Stipulation dated February 19, 1946, Part 2, pages 294 to 296.

(35) Order extending time for further proceedings, dated February 25, 1946, Part 2, page 321.

(36) Order granting oral argument on motions dated April 8, 1946, Part 2, pages 361 and 362.

(37) Notices of change of time dated April 11, 1946, Part 2, pages 363 to 368.

(38) Order deferring decision on petition for leave to intervene, dated April 11, 1946, Part 2, page 369.

All portions of Part 1 and Part 2, designated Pleadings, and filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission as a part of the transcript in these proceedings, other than those specifically set forth above, shall be included within the printed record.

Dated December 27th, 1946.

W. T. Kelley,
Walter B. Wooden,
Counsel for Respondent, Federal Trade Commission.

Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
W. H. VanOosterhout,
Arthur J. Abbott,
Counsel for Petitioner, Standard Oil Company.

Approved & ordered
12-27-46
William M. Sparks, J.

Endorsed: In the United States Circuit Court of Appeals * * (Caption—9215) * * Stipulation Filed Dec 27 1946 Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

* * (Caption—9215) * *

DESIGNATION OF STANDARD OIL COMPANY, PETITIONER, OF PORTIONS OF THE TRANSCRIPT TO BE CONTAINED IN THE PRINTED RECORD.

Standard Oil Company, petitioner herein, designates the following portions of the transcript, filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission in this cause, to be contained in the printed record to be printed by the Clerk of this court pursuant to Rule 14 (c) of this court:

1. Certificate of Otis B. Johnson, Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, concerning the transcript of proceedings had before the Federal Trade Commission, said certificate being dated November 5, 1946.
2. Complaint dated November 29, 1940.
3. Answer of Standard Oil Company dated January 14, 1941.
4. Order appointing Trial Examiner dated February 25, 1941.
5. Motion to amend complaint dated April 9, 1941.
6. Order amending complaint dated April 23, 1941.
7. Motion to dismiss complaint dated September 22, 1942.
8. Motion to Federal Trade Commission to strike portions of the record dated September 22, 1942.
9. Motion of Standard Oil Company to Federal Trade Commission to amplify record, dated September 22, 1942, with the exhibits attached thereto.
10. Order denying motion to dismiss complaint, dated October 10, 1942.
11. Order denying motion to strike portions of the record, dated December 28, 1942.
12. Order denying in part and granting in part Respondent's motion to amplify the record, dated December 28, 1942.

13. Order directing inclusion of certain documents in the record dated March 17, 1943.

(Evidence & Exhibits go here.)

14. Trial Examiner's report dated June 25, 1943.

15. Exceptions to Trial Examiner's report dated August 3, 1943.

16. Findings as to the facts and conclusion dated October 9, 1945.

17. Order to cease and desist dated October 9, 1945.

18. Motion to modify order to cease and desist dated January 21, 1946.

19. Order to show cause dated January 23, 1946.

20. Motion for rehearing and reconsideration of order to cease and desist filed January 28, 1946.

21. Answer and brief on order to show cause, dated February 14, 1946.

22. Respondent's answer and brief in opposition to second proposed modification of order to cease and desist, dated March 27, 1946.

23. Petition of the National Council of Independent Petroleum Associations for leave to intervene, dated April 5, 1946.

24. Order modifying order to cease and desist and denying certain other motions, dated August 9, 1946.

25. Modified order to cease and desist dated August 9, 1946.

26. Dissenting opinion of Commissioner Lowell B. Mason to modified order to cease and desist, dated August 9, 1946.

27. All of the transcript of the oral testimony, being pages 1 to 8,057, inclusive, contained in Parts 3 to 11, inclusive, of the transcript filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission.

28. The following numbered Commission exhibits contained in Part 12 of the aforesaid transcript:

1-A, B, C and D, 2, 3-A and B, 29, 30, 54, 87, 128-A and B.

29. The following numbered Respondent exhibits contained in Part 13 of the aforesaid transcript:

3, 5, 6, 7 to 17, inclusive, 18-A; 18-I, 18-J, 18-L, 18-O, 18-Q, 18-R, 18-U, 18-Z-1, 18-Z-3, 18-Z-4, 18-Z-5, 18-Z-10, 18-Z-11, 18-Z-17, 18-Z-21, 18-Z-27, 18-Z-30, 19, 20, 23, 24, 25-A and B, 27, 28, 29-A, B and C, 30, 31-A to Q, inclusive, 33-A to E, inclusive, 36-B, C and D, 37-A to D, inclusive, 38-A to E, inclusive, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49-A and B, 52-B, 53, 54, 55-A and B, 57-A and B, 58, 59, 60-A to D, inclusive, 63-A, B and C, 98, 99, 100, 101, 103-A, B and C.

Petitioner further designates the following documents to be contained in the aforesaid printed record:

30. Petition to review and set aside modified order of Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist and statement of points, dated October 3, 1946.

31. Cross petition of Federal Trade Commission, filed November 18, 1946.

32. Stipulation dated December 27th, 1946.

33. This designation.

34. Any order entered on Stipulation referred to in No. 32 above.

Dated: December 27th, 1946.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner,
By Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Arthur J. Abbott,
Its Attorneys.

Filed Dec. 27, 1946. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

IN THE UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

* * (Caption—9215) * *

DESIGNATION BY RESPONDENT FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION OF PORTIONS OF THE TRANSCRIPT TO BE CONTAINED IN THE PRINTED RECORD.

Comes now the Federal Trade Commission, respondent herein, and after taking into account the portions of the transcript designated for printing by the petitioner, hereby designates the following portions of the transcript filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission in this cause to be contained in the printed record to be printed by the Clerk of this Court pursuant to Rule 14(c) of this Court:

Commission Exhibits.

4
5 A-J
22
25 27
31
32 A, B, C
33 A, B
34 35
36
90
91
100
109 B
38
50 51
55
56 57 58 59 60
61
62
116 119
120
129
63
64
74 76 80
81
82 A, B
83
84 A, B, C
88 89
130
131 A, B, C
132
133

Exhibits Offered by Respondent before the Commission as follows:

96 A, B, C, D.

Respectfully,

Federal Trade Commission,
By Walter B. Wooden,
Associate General Counsel, and Attorney for Respondent.

Washington, D. C.
January 6, 1947.

Filed Jan. 8, 1947. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

VOLUME VIII

TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

OCTOBER TERM, [redacted] 1957

No. [redacted] 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER
vs.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

PETITION FOR CERTIORARI FILED SEPTEMBER 28, 1956
CERTIORARI GRANTED DECEMBER 17, 1956

In the

United States Court of Appeals

For the Seventh Circuit

No. 11409

STANDARD OIL COMPANY,
Petitioner,

vs.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Respondent.

Petition for Review of Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

INDEX.

Certificate of Secretary........................5289
Court of Appeals Opinion, dated Mar. 11, 1949........5290
Judgment of Court of Appeals, dated Mar. 11, 1949....5302
Final Decree, dated Apr. 29, 1949....................5303
Supreme Court Opinion, dated Jan. 8, 1951............5307
  Dissenting Opinion by Justice Reed.................5321
Mandate of Supreme Court, filed in Court of Appeals, Feb. 7, 1951........5333
Judgment of Court of Appeals pursuant to Mandate, entered Feb. 14, 1951........5335 Commission's order re Objections to Modified Findings, dated Mar. 24, 1952........5336
Commission's Order to Show Cause, dated Mar. 24, 1952........5337
Statement of Commissioner Mason re proposed Modified Findings, etc........5339
Respondents' Objections to Procedure, etc., dated May 29, 1952........5340
Letter re Hearing and Extension of Time........5359
  Letter Mar. 14, 1951, Chaffetz to Kelley........5359
  Letter Mar. 19, 1951, Kelley to Chaffetz........5360
  Letter Mar. 20, 1952, Daniel to Chaffetz........5361
  Letter May 15, 1952, Chaffetz to Spingarn........5362
Commission's Modified Findings as to Facts and Conclusions, dated Jan. 16, 1953........5364
  Modified Order to Cease and Desist........5391
  Dissenting Opinion by Commissioner Mason........5393 Dissenting Opinion by Commissioner Carretta........5394
Letter of Recertification to Court of Appeals, dated Mar. 26, 1953........5422
  Memorandum stating Dissent of Commissioner Mason........5424

Order of Court of Appeals, entered May 19, 1953....5427
Petition to Remand Cause to Federal Trade Commission, etc., filed Oct. 14, 1953....5429
Order remanding Cause to Federal Trade Commission, entered Jan. 18, 1954....5450
Petition for Reconsideration on Remand, dated May 14, 1954....5452
Answer to Respondent's Petition....5469
Order denying Petition for Reconsideration, dated Jan. 7, 1955....5480
Petition for Review, filed Mar. 7, 1955....5481
Order re Record on Petition for Review....5489
Designation of Record....5490
Additional Designation of Record....5494

Proceedings in the U. S. C. A. for the Seventh Circuit 5495 Opinion, Major, J. 5495
Judgment 5503
Clerk's certificate (omitted in printing) 5503
Order extending time to file petition for writ of certiorari 5503
Order allowing certiorari 5504

1 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, SS:

In the matter of
Standard Oil Company. } Docket 4389.

I, Robert M. Parrish, Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission and official custodian of its records, do hereby certify that transmitted herewith and hereby re-certified to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit are:

Part 12—Exhibits—Documentary—Commission.
Part 13—Exhibits—Documentary—Respondent. and separate original physical exhibits marked:

2-1	2-2	2-3	2-4	2-5
4389-1	4389-1	4389-1	4389-1	4389-1

being parts of the record of proceedings by the Federal Trade Commission in its Docket 4389, in the matter of Standard Oil Company, which were certified to the Court November 5, 1946, and which were subsequently returned to the Commission; and

That there are also transmitted herewith and certified:
Part 14—Record after Remand—3-24-52 to 5-13-54.
Part 15—Record after Remand—5-14-54 to 1-7-55.

That these materials together with those previously certified to the Court constitute the full, true and complete record in this proceeding.

That this transcript is certified to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, pursuant to the filing in said Court of a petition to review of a modified order to cease and desist, dated January 16, 1953, entered by the Federal Trade Commission in the above indicated proceeding.

In witness whereof, I hereunto subscribe my name, and affix the seal of the said Federal Trade Commission, at its office in the City of Washington, D. C., this 13th day of April, A. D. 1955.

Robert M. Parrish,
Secretary.

(Seal)

2 IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit.

No. 9215. October Term, 1948, January Session, 1949.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner,
vs.
Federal Trade Commission,
Respondent.

Petition for Review of Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

March 11, 1949.

Before KERNER, MINTON, and DUFFY, Circuit Judges.

MINTON, Circuit Judge. The petitioner seeks to review a cease and desist order issued by the respondent ordering it to cease and desist from discriminating in the price of gasoline of the same grade and quality among its customers in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (15 U. S. C. Sec. 13). The Commission asks the enforcement of its order.

The petitioner contends that the order should not be enforced because, first, the Commission failed to find and could not have found under the undisputed evidence in this case, that either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination was in commerce; secondly, that the Commission treated as immaterial the petitioner's conclusive showing that the discrimination made in price was in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, which showing the petitioner asserts is a complete defense. Third, the petitioner contends that:

> "Paragraph 6 of the Modified Order directs Standard at its peril to prevent jobbers to whom it sells 3 gasoline and who are in competition with Standard in the resale thereof from reselling to their retail dealers at prices less than Standard's price to its own retail dealers; requires Standard to police, maintain and regulate such competitor's prices on gasoline, title to > which passed to the jobbers on delivery by Standard; and subjects Standard retroactively to punishment for contempt should a jobber-competitor fail to maintain such resale prices."

Substantial evidence in this record shows the following facts as found by the Commission. The petitioner's principal office and place of business is located in Chicago, Illinois. It is engaged in the business of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products throughout fourteen states, principally in the Middle West. The petitioner has a refinery at Whiting, Indiana, to which it supplies crude oil from fields located in other states. One of the divisions in which it distributes its products is known as the Detroit Field, which embraces some thirteen counties in southern Michigan, including the city of Detroit. The Detroit Area, as distinguished from the Detroit Field, is confined to the city of Detroit and its suburbs. The petitioner has no refinery in Michigan, and almost all the gasoline it sells and distributes in the Detroit Field is transported by tankers from its refinery at Whiting through the Great Lakes to the petitioner's marine terminal at River Rouge, outside the city of Detroit. This terminal has a storage tank capacity of sixty-three million gallons. During the summer months, deliveries are made from Whiting weekly and sometimes twice weekly. In the fall, sufficient gasoline is delivered and stored to take care of the estimated requirements during the winter months when navigation on the Great Lakes is closed. The amount of gasoline used in Detroit is fairly constant and can be accurately estimated. During the years from 1936 through 1940, the years here in question, the petitioner supplied 16 to 17% of all the gasoline in the Detroit Area. In addition to the River Rouge tanks, the petitioner operated six bulk plants in the Detroit Area. Practically all of the gasoline sold in the Detroit Area passed through the River Rouge terminal, except that in some instances gas was delivered directly from Whiting by truck and also by the same means to commercial users. Deliveries were made from the River Rouge terminal by tank cars and tank trucks up to February 1, 1940, and thereafter by trucks alone.
4 The delivery trucks were owned and operated or leased and operated by the petitioner through its employees.

The petitioner supplied gasoline to approximately 358 retail service stations, approximately two hundred of which the petitioner owned and leased, and eight of which it leased and subleased. The remaining 150 were independent operators who owned or leased their stations from someone else. The latter had agreements to purchase their entire requirements of Standard Oil gasoline only from the petitioner. While the former had no such agreements, they did not buy gasoline from anyone except the petitioner. The delivery to the retail customers was known as "tank wagon delivery" and was made at a price fixed in Chicago by the petitioner from time to time, known in the trade as the "posted tank-wagon price." 8

In addition, the petitioner supplied gasoline to four dealers in the Detroit Area, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, hereinafter sometimes referred to as Citrin, Stikeman, Wayne, and Ned's. These customers were also known as wholesale customers. They had their own storage tanks and trucks for delivery and met the credit qualifications of the petitioner.

During the time in question, Citrin, Stikeman, and Wayne sold a substantial portion of their gasoline purchased from the petitioner direct to the public through retail service stations owned and operated by them. Ned's was engaged entirely in the retail sale of gasoline to the public through its own stations. To these last four customers, known, as we have pointed out, as the wholesale customers, the petitioner has discriminated in price by selling its gasoline to them for resale at wholesale and through their own retail stations at a price substantially lower than the prices charged retail purchasers in the Detroit Area for gasoline of the same grade and quality. The petitioner's Red Crown gasoline, its largest selling brand and comprising about ninety per cent of its sales in the Detroit Area, was sold to those four wholesalers at 1½¢ a gallon lower than the prices charged by the petitioner for the same gasoline to other retail dealers in the Detroit Area.

Citrin, in addition to supplying its own stations which sold at retail, from January 1, 1938, to December 31, 1940, sold one million gallons of gasoline annually to Langer
5 and Cohn, who run a chain of service stations, at 1¢ a gallon less than the tank wagon price, and in addition sold another retail service operator at ½¢ a gallon less than the tank wagon price. For a time Citrin also issued special service cards which entitled the holder to a 2¢ a gallon discount on the purchase of gasoline from one of the retail service stations operated by Citrin.

There is no evidence that Wayne ever sold gasoline to retailers at a price lower than the posted tank-wagon price charged by the petitioner to its dealers or that Wayne ever allowed any discounts. The same is true of Stikeman.

Ned's, however, sold at retail exclusively, and it has been its practice since March 7, 1938, to sell to its customers below the prevailing retail service station price or to give premiums and discounts which result in a price below its posted price.

A lower price at one service station than at another is an important factor in the purchasing public's mind, especially in the price of the petitioner's advertisd brands. Any difference in price between two stations selling the same brand of gasoline is very important in influencing the business. The margin of profit between the tank wagon price to a service station and the retail price is small, averaging since November 1, 1939, about 3.3¢ a gallon in the Detroit Area.

In 1937 Ned's was selling the petitioner's Red Crown gasoline to the public at approximately 2¢ a gallon below the prevailing retail service station price, which continued with variations until the latter part of 1939. In 1939 and 1940, when Ned's posted price was the prevailing retail price, it gave premiums and discounts under cover. It has from time to time given commercial discounts of 1 to 2¢ a gallon off the posted tank-wagon price. In 1939, Ned's also issued trading stamps with a value of 2¢ a gallon, which were redeemable in merchandise or gasoline at Ned's stores. Price cutting at Ned's stores has been almost continuous, and this company has been responsible for starting most of the retail price cutting in major brand gasolines in Detroit over a period of several years. This practice of Ned's has caused substantial damage to other retail service station operators selling the petitioner's Red Crown gasoline and also to retail service station operators selling other brands of gasoline.

The price discriminations granted to Ned's, Citrin, 6 Wayne, and Stikeman on gasoline sold by them at retail have given a substantial competitive advantage to these favored dealers in their retail operations over other retailers of gasoline, including retail customers of the petitioner. This competitive advantage is capable of being used and has been used by Ned's and to some extent by Citrin to divert large amounts of business from other gasoline retailers, including customers of the petitioner, with resultant injury to them and to their ability to continue in business and successfully compete with Ned's and Citrin in the retailing of gasoline. The effect of these discriminations in price allowed by the petitioner to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman has been and may be substantially to lessen competition and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition with each of these four dealers and with their respective customers in the retail sale of gasoline.

There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor. The petitioner failed to show that the discriminatory price which it made these four dealers was justified on the basis of any cost savings.

The findings of the Commission based upon the substantial evidence above indicated are sufficient to support the Commission's conclusion of law that the discriminatory sales were in commerce. It is not disputed that the petitioner is engaged in commerce, but it is vigorously insisted that commerce ended at the River Rouge plant and the bulk plants in the Detroit Area and that the petitioner's transactions from there on were wholly intrastate. With this we are unable to agree. The break that occurred at River Rouge was a break in transportation but not in the constant stream of commerce that flowed from the Whiting refinery to the petitioner's customers in Michigan. The stream of commerce flowed continuously from the tanks at the refinery to the tankers on the lake; from the tankers to the tank at River Rouge and the bulk plants in Detroit; and from there into tank cars and tank trucks to the petitioner's customers. There may have been several breaks in transportation in getting from one vehicle or receptacle to the other in completing the commercial transaction of getting the petitioner's gasoline from Whiting into the Detroit territory, but the stream of commerce was never broken, 7 no matter how many receptacles were used on the way.

The rest at River Rouge was not like a warehouse where the goods awaited further sale and distribution. Although the gasoline was not brought to River Rouge pursuant to orders already taken, the demands of the Michigan territory were fairly constant, and the petitioner's customers' demands could be accurately estimated, so the flow of the stream of commerce kept surging from Whiting to Detroit.

We think this case quite analogous to Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495, 42 S. Ct. 397, 66 L. Ed. 735. In that case, the livestock came by carrier interstate and intrastate into the receiving pens of the stockyards where the animals were fed, watered, and held until sales were consummated, either to the packers who drove them across the street to the packing house, or to the wholesale dealers or feeders who reshipped them. The transportation was broken at the yards. The animals came to rest, but the stream of commerce moved on to final destination; and the stockyards, with its holding pens, was held to be in commerce, just as here the various changes in the manner of movement may have slowed down the stream of commerce between Whiting and Michigan, but never stopped it. The tanks at River Rouge were similar to a "packaging house" on the way to market. The tank cars and trucks were the most convenient "packages" that could be used to complete the distribution of the gasoline. It is unlike Walling v. Goldblatt Bros., 128 F. 2d 778, where the warehouse was only a detached stockroom for retail stores of a retailer. There the stream of commerce ended at the warehouse for the most part. Here it reached at River Rouge only an intermediate stage preliminary to its final disposition to the petitioner's customers.

We decline, as the Supreme Court did in Stafford v. Wallace, supra, p. 519, "* * * to defeat this purpose in respect of such a stream and take it out of complete national regulation by a nice and technical inquiry into the noninterstate character of some of its necessary incidents and facilities when considered alone and without reference to their association with the movement of which they were an essential but subordinate part." After all, as Justice Holmes said in Swift and Company v. United States, 196 U. S. 375, 398, 25 S. Ct. 276, 49 L. Ed. 518, "* * * commerce among the States is not a technical legal conception, but a practical one, drawn from the course of business." The 8 modern concept of commerce is one which gives full sweep to the commerce clause of the Constitution within the limits of the implementing statute, a liberal view of the Congressional purpose as expressed in the statute, and a realistic view of what business is doing as it moves across state lines to accomplish its purpose. The late cases support the view that the petitioner's operations are in commerce from the refinery to its customers. Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 317 U. S. 564, 63 S. Ct. 332, 87 L. Ed. 460; Binderup v. Pathe Exchange, 263 U. S. 291, 309, 44 S. Ct. 96, 68 L. Ed. 308; Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation v. Keen, 157 F. 2d 310, 314; Republic Pictures Corporation v. Kappler, 151 F. 2d 543, 545; Walling v. American Stores Co., 133 F. 2d 840.

Now as to the contention that the discriminatory prices here complained of were made in good faith to meet a lower price of a competitor. While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held, contrary to the petitioner's contention, that this was not a defense.

Prior to June 19, 1936, when the Robinson-Patman Act went into effect, the Clayton Act, Section 2,[1] provided:

> "That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, * * * either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities * * * where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price betwen purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition * * *."

Thus it will be seen that a discrimination in price made in good faith to meet competition was a defense under Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as was a showing that the discrimination was made because of cost savings, or proof of the other defenses given by the Act. But since large buyers could always get such price meeting by suppliers to justify a discrimination in price in their favor, the purpose of the Act to avoid such discrimination was easily evaded. Congress sought to change this bypass by changing the discriminatory price, made in good faith to meet the low price of a competitor, from a defense, as it then was, to a procedural aid to enable a seller to overcome the prima facie case made by showing a difference in price to customers in the same community for goods of the same quality. This was done by amending Section 2 of the Clayton Act by Section 2(a), and (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act.[2] The amended Section 2(a) still made it unlawful to make a discriminatory price, as before, and it kept as a defense the cost savings and other defenses of the old Clayton Act, but took out of the defense category the provision for making a lower price to meet competition. As to this, it was provided in Section 2(b) as follows:

---

[1] 38 Stat. 730 (1914), 15 U. S. C. Sec. 13 (1934).

> "Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

This amendment, it is clear, provided that if a discrimination in price were shown, the burden of justifying it was upon the party making the discriminatory price, and he could make this prima facie case by showing that he acted in good faith to meet the low price of a competitor. That it was not intended as a defense is apparent from the Conference Report resolving the disagreement of the two Houses. The purpose of Congress is so clearly set out in the Conference Report that we quote it as follows:

> "The Senate bill contained a further proviso: 'That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good in faith to meet competition.' This language is found in existing law, and in the opinion of the conferees is one of the obstacles to enforcement of the present Clayton Act. The Senate receded, and the language is stricken. A provision relating to the question of meeting competition, intended to operate only as a rule of evidence in a proceeding before the Federal Trade Commission is included in subsection (b) in the conference text as follows:

> " 'Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.' " (Congressional Record, June 15, 1936, p. 9414.)

The Chairman of the House Conferees stated on the floor of the House as he presented the Conference Report:

> "It is to be noted, however, that this does not set up the meeting of competition as an absolute bar to a charge of discrimination under the bill. It merely permits it to be shown in evidence. This provision is entirely procedural.
>
> * * * * *
>
> "If this proviso were construed to permit the showing of a competing offer as an absolute bar to liability for discrimination, then it would nullify the act entirely at the very inception of its enforcement, for in nearly every case mass buyers receive similar discriminations from competing sellers of the same products." (Congressional Record, June 15, 1936, p. 9418.)

The intent of Congress is clear and the language used to express its intent, it seems to us, is not ambiguous. That Section 2(b) is as the Conference Report says it was intended to be, seems to be the view of the Supreme Court as expressed in Trade Comm'n. v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746, 65 S. Ct. 971, 89 L. Ed. 1338, which reversed this Court in A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 144 F. 2d 221, wherein we held the prima facie case had been rebutted. Chief Justice Stone said (p. 752):

> "It will be noted that the defense that the price dis-> 11 criminations were made in order to meet competition, is under the statute a matter of 'rebutting' the Commission's 'prima-facie case.' Prior to the Robinson-Patman amendments, Sec. 2 of the Clayton Act pro> vided that nothing contained in it 'shall prevent' discriminations in price 'made in good faith to meet competition.' The change in language of this exception was for the purpose of making the defense a matter of evidence in each case, raising a question of fact as to whether the competition justified the discrimination.''

The showing made here by the petitioner that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competition, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out. The effect of it was to rebut the prima facie case made by the Commission's proof of the petitioner's discriminatory prices. If nothing further appeared in this record, the case might well have ended there. The reason for making the discrimination was effective to rebut the prima facie case in price discrimination, but it still remained a discrimination, and that discrimination affected competition on the retail level among the retail customers of the wholesalers to whom the petitioner has sold. The discrimination in price in favor of the parties in this case, which the petitioner had a right to make as against its competitors, was then used by the petitioner's customers to work havoc among competitors on the retail level. The petitioner had given a club to its wholesalers which they passed on to their retailers to bludgeon their competitors. This is what the Commission is trying to stop, and it is towards the elimination of this evil that the cease and desist order is directed.

The Commission here considered the other evidence as to the effect on competition of this continuing discrimination and found, and it was justified in finding, that the discrimination not only may but did affect competition. There is substantial evidence in this record that the petitioner's favored wholesalers were in a position to do and did do injury to competition. Where as here the discrimination is between purchasers who are in competition and the competition which is alleged and proved to be injured is among the retail customers of the favored purchasers and other retailers, the fact that the seller's discriminatory price 12 was made to meet his own competition is not controlling. The discrimination continued here and its effect was direct and harmful to competition and was properly condemned by the Commission's order, notwithstanding the petitioner's discrimination in price was made in good faith to meet competition of its own.

The case of Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 148 F. 2d 378, does not, as we understand it, hold that Section 2(b) is a defense in all events. It holds only that a lower price discrimination made in good faith to meet competition, standing alone, may be a defense. If there were no further showing that the lower price lessens or tends to prevent competition, the justification in the discrimination would be made out. But in the instant case, the Commission went further and showed that the petitioner's discrimination in price to its wholesale customers did have the effect to substantially lessen competition or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition. Note, however, that it would have been necessary for the Commission to prove only that such discrimination in price may have that effect. Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 68 S. Ct. 822, 92 L. Ed. 948. It is not actual injury alone, but the prospect reasonably to be expected of injury to competition which the statute seeks to prevent.

We agree with the Commission that the showing of the petitioner that it made the discriminatory price in good faith to meet competition is not controlling in view of the very substantial evidence that its discrimination was used to affect and lessen competition at the retail level.

The petitioner objects to Paragraph 6 of the cease and desist order. This paragraph reads as follows:

> "6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler resells such gasoline to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer."

13 This paragraph is intended to eliminate the effects of the discriminatory price made to these customers, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman, who do a wholesale business. To avoid the force of this paragraph, the petitioner may do one of two things. First, discontinue selling to wholesalers at a price different than that made to retailers. The petitioner's three largest competitors in Detroit have found it agreeable to do so. The petitioner argues that this is an elimination of wholesalers. If this be true, it is elimination only where their existence cannot be justified except on the exploitation of a differential in price not justified by any cost savings to obtain that price. This does not impress us as either illegal, unwarranted, or unjust.

Secondly, the petitioner may under the right to choose its customers refuse to sell to wholesalers who sell to retailers below the price the petitioner makes to its own retailers. The petitioner does not have to make price control agreements with anyone. It has only to govern its own conduct to avoid the impact of an unlawful discrimination. To govern its conduct, the order makes the petitioner deal with its wholesalers at its peril as to what they might do with the gasoline in the future. The petitioner has no control and can have no control over the price of the gasoline after it is sold to the wholesalers. The latter may put any price on it they may choose. They may give it away if they like. The petitioner should not be required to police its wholesalers and to sell to them at the petitioner's peril. The petitioner should be liable if it sells to a wholesaler it knows or ought to have known is engaging in or intends to engage in the competitive practices condemned by this proceeding. Under the order as drawn, the petitioner would be liable if afterwards the wholesaler should resell at a price lower than the petitioner charged its retailers. If the petitioner is to be hailed into court for a violation of the Commission's order, the petitioner must be guilty of knowingly choosing a customer who is using or intends to use its price advantage to undersell the petitioner in its prices made to its retailers.

We would modify Paragraph 6 to read as follows:

> "By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the 14 retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler, to the knowledge of the respondent or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent, resells such gasoline or intends to resell > the same to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer."

The order as modified will be enforced, and judgment thereon will be entered accordingly.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
For the Seventh Circuit,
Chicago 10, Illinois.

Friday, March 11, 1949.

Before:

Hon. Otto Kerner, Circuit Judge,
Hon. Sherman Minton, Circuit Judge,
Hon. F. Ryan Duffy, Circuit Judge.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner,
No. 9215 vs.
Federal Trade Commission,
Respondent.

Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of the record from the Federal Trade Commission, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this Court that Paragraph 6 of the Modified Order of the Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist, en-15 tered in this cause on August 6, 1946, be modified to read as follows:

> "By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the respondent charges its retail customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retail customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler, to the knowledge of the respondent or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent, resells such gasoline or intends to resell the same to any of its said retailer customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer."

The said order of the Federal Trade Commission, as modified above, will be enforced and a Decree thereon will be entered accordingly.

16 IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit.

Standard Oil Company,
a corporation,
Petitioner,
vs.
Federal Trade Commission,
Respondent.
No. 9215.

FINAL DECREE MODIFYING FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION'S ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST AND AFFIRMING AND ENFORCING SAID ORDER AS MODIFIED.

The petitioner herein, Standard Oil Company, a corporation of the State of Indiana, having filed with this Court on the 4th day of October, 1946, its petition to review and set aside an order to cease and desist issued by the Federal Trade Commission, respondent herein, on August 9, 1946, under the provisions of the Clayton Act, as amended; and a copy of said petition having been served upon the respondent herein; and said respondent having thereafter, to wit: on the 7th day of November, 1946, certified and filed herein, as required by law, a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding lately pending before it, in which said order to cease and desist was entered; and the respondent herein, Federal Trade Commission, having filed with this Court on the 18th day of November, 1946, its cross-petition for affirmance and enforcement of its order to cease and desist, aforesaid, and a copy of said cross-petition having been served upon the petitioner; and the matter having been heard by this Court on briefs and oral argument of counsel; and this Court thereafter, to wit: on the 11th day of March, 1949, having rendered its decision modifying Paragraph 6 of said order to cease and desist and affirming and enforcing said order as modified;

17 Now, Therefore, It Is Hereby Ordered, Adjudged And Decreed, that Paragraph 6 of the aforesaid order to cease and desist, issued by the respondent herein as aforesaid, be and the same is hereby modified so as to read as follows:

> 6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler, to the knowledge of the respondent or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent, resells such gasoline or intend to resell the same to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, regates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer.

And, It Is Hereby Further Ordered, Adjudged And Decreed, that the said order to cease and desist issued by the Federal Trade Commission, respondent herein, on the 9th day of August, 1946, as aforesaid, and as herein modified by the decision of this Court on the 11th day of March, 1949, as aforesaid, be, and the same is, hereby affirmed and petitioner is commanded to obey the same;

And, It Is Further Ordered, Adjudged And Decreed, that the Standard Oil Company, a corporation of the State of Indiana, and its officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the sale of gasoline in commerce, as "commerce" is defined by the Clayton Act, as amended, shall forthwith cease and desist, as required by the terms of such affirmed and modified order set out below, from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of such gasoline of like grade and quality, as among purchasers:

> 1. By selling such gasoline to competing purchasers at different prices in the manner and under the circumstances stated in the findings as to the facts herein.

2. By continuing or resuming the discriminations in price of such gasoline referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

3. By otherwise discriminating in price between purchasers of such gasoline in a manner and degree 18 substantially similar to the manner and degree of the discriminations referred to and described in the Commission's findings as to the facts herein.

✓4. By selling such gasoline to some retailers thereof at prices lower than the prices charged other retailers who in fact compete with them in the sale and distribution of such gasoline.

5. By allowing a price to any dealer, jobber, or wholesaler on such gasoline sold by such dealer, jobber or wholesaler at retail lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with such dealers, jobbers or wholesaler in their retailing capacity.

6. By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers, or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler, to the knowledge of the respondent or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent, resells such gasoline or intends to resell the same to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services, or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer.

For the purpose of comparison the term "price" as used in this order includes discounts, rebates, allowances and other terms and conditions of sale.

The above specified requirements of this order are subject, however, to the following provisos:

(a) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that were not found under the facts herein to have a tendency to injure, destroy or prevent competition with respondent's customers receiving the benefit of such differentials or with their customers.

(b) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as preventing any price differentials by respondent which make only due allowance for differences in respondent's cost of manufacture, sale, 19 or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

(c) That none of the prohibitions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting a lower price to jobbers than to retailers where respondent thereby makes only due allowance for its differences in cost of manufacture, sale or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such gasoline is to such purchasers sold or delivered.

(d) That none of the provisions of the order shall be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that reflect differences in the grades and qualities of such gasoline.

And It Is Hereby Further Ordered, Adjudged And Decreed, that this Court retain, and it does hereby retain, jurisdiction of this proceeding to the extent necessary to compel obedience to said order to cease and desist, as herein modified, but without prejudice to the right of the Federal Trade Commission to initiate such contempt proceedings or other proceedings for that purpose as may be warranted by law.

By the Court.

April 29, 1949.

Otto Kerner,
Sherman Minton,
F. Ryan Duffy,
United States Circuit Judges.

A True Copy.
Teste:

....
Clerk, United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

Approved as to form:
Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Att'ys for Petitioner, Standard Oil Company.
4-27-49.

20 SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

No. 1.—October Term, 1950.

Standard Oil Company, Petitioner,
vs.
Federal Trade Commission.

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

[January 8, 1951.]

MR. JUSTICE BURTON delivered the opinion of the Court.

In this case the Federal Trade Commission challenged the right of the Standard Oil Company, under the Robinson-Patman Act,[1] to sell gasoline to four comparatively large "jobber" customers in Detroit at a less price per gallon than it sold like gasoline to many comparatively small service station customers in the same area. The Company's defenses were that (1) the sales involved were not in interstate commerce and (2) its lower price to the jobbers was justified because made to retain them as customers and in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.[2] The Commission, with one member dissenting, ordered the company to cease and desist from making such a price differential. 43 F. T. C. 56. The Court of Appeals slightly modified the order and required its enforcement as modified. 173 F. 2d 210. We granted certiorari on petition of the company because the case presents an important issue under the Robinson-Pat-21 man Act which has not been settled by this Court. 338 U. S. 865. The case was argued at our October Term, 1949, and reargued at this term. 339 U. S. 975.

For the reasons hereinafter stated, we agree with the court below that the sales were made in interstate commerce but we agree with petitioner that, under the Act, the lower price to the jobbers was justified if it was made to retain each of them as a customer and in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.

---

[1] Specifically under § 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13. For the material text of § 2(a) and (b) see pp. 9-10, infra.

[2] The company contended before the Commission that the price differential allowed by it to the jobbers made only due allowance for differences in the cost of sale and delivery of gasoline to them. It did not, however, pursue this defense in the court below and does not do so here.

I. Facts.

Reserving for separate consideration the facts determining the issue of interstate commerce, the other material facts are summarized here on the basis of the Commission's findings. The sales described are those of Red Crown gasoline because those sales raise all of the material issues and constitute about 90% of petitioner's sales in the Detroit area.

Since the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act, June 19, 1936, petitioner has sold its Red Crown gasoline to its "jobber" customers at its tank-car prices. Those prices have been 1½¢ per gallon less than its tank-wagon prices to service station customers for identical gasoline in the same area. In practice, the service stations have resold the gasoline at the prevailing retail service station prices.[3] Each of petitioner's so-called "jobber" customers has been free to resell its gasoline at retail or wholesale. Each, at some time, has resold some of it at retail. One now resells it only at retail. The others now resell it largely at wholesale. As to resale prices, two of the "jobbers" have resold their gasoline only at the prevailing wholesale or retail rates. The other two, however, 22 have reflected, in varying degrees, petitioner's reductions in the cost of the gasoline to them by reducing their resale prices of that gasoline below the prevailing rates. The effect of these reductions has thus reached competing retail service stations in part through retail stations operated by the "jobbers" and in part through retail stations which purchased gasoline from the "jobbers" at less than the prevailing tank-wagon prices. The Commission found that such reduced resale prices "have resulted in injuring, destroying, and preventing competition between said favored dealers and retail dealers in respondent's [petitioner's] gasoline and other major brands of gasoline . . . ." 41 F. T. C. 263, 283. The distinctive characteristics of these "jobbers" are that each (1) maintains sufficient bulk storage to take delivery of gasoline in tank-car quantities (of 8,000 to 12,000 gallons) rather than in tank-wagon quantities (of 700 to 800 gallons) as is customary for service stations; (2) owns and operates tank wagons and other facilities for delivery of gasoline to service stations; (3) has an established business sufficient to insure purchases of from one to two million gallons a year; and (4) has adequate credit responsibility.[4] While the cost of petitioner's sales and deliveries of gasoline to each of these four "jobbers" is no doubt less, per gallon, than the cost of its sales and deliveries of like gasoline to its service station customers in the same area, there is no finding that such difference accounts for the entire reduction in price made by petitioner to these "jobbers," 23 and we proceed on the assumption that it does not entirely account for that difference.

---

[3] About 150 of these stations are owned or leased by the customer independently of petitioner. Their operators buy all of their gasoline from petitioner under short-term agreements. Its other 208 stations are leased or subleased from petitioner for short terms.

Petitioner placed its reliance upon evidence offered to show that its lower price to each jobber was made in order to retain that jobber as a customer and in good faith to meet an equally low price offered by one or more competitors. The Commission, however, treated such evidence as not relevant.

II. The Sales Were Made in Interstate Commerce.

In order for the sales here involved to come under the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, they must have been made in interstate commerce.[5] The Commission and the court below agree that the sales were so made. 41 F. T. C. 263, 271, 173 F. 2d 210, 213-214.

Facts determining this were found by the Commission as follows: Petitioner is an Indiana corporation, whose principal office is in Chicago. Its gasoline is obtained from [4] Not denying the established industry practice of recognizing such dealers as a distinctive group for operational convenience, the Commission held that petitioner's classification of these four dealers as "jobbers" was arbitrary because it made "no requirement that said jobbers should sell only at wholesale." 41 F. T. C. at 273. We use the term "jobber" in this opinion merely as one of convenience and identification, because the result here is the same whether these four dealers are wholesalers or retailers.

---

[5] Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended, relates only to persons "engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce . . . where either or any of the purchases involved . . . are in commerce . . . ." 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. § 13(a). "Commerce" is defined in § 1 of the Clayton Act as including "trade or commerce among the several States . . . ." 38 Stat. 730, 15 U. S. C. § 12.

fields in Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas and Wyoming. Its refining plant is at Whiting, Indiana. It distributes its products in 14 middle western states, including Michigan. The gasoline sold by it in the Detroit, Michigan, area, and involved in this case, is carried for petitioner by tankers on the Great Lakes from Indiana to petitioner's marine terminal at River Rouge, Michigan. Enough gasoline is accumulated there during each navigation season so that a winter's supply is available from the terminal. The gasoline remains for varying periods at the terminal or in nearby bulk storage stations, and while there it is under the ownership of petitioner and en route from peti-24 tioner's refinery in Indiana to its market in Michigan.

"Although the gasoline was not brought to River Rouge pursuant to orders already taken, the demands of the Michigan territory are fairly constant, and petitioner's customers' demands could be accurately estimated, so the flow of the stream of commerce kept surging from Whiting to Detroit." 173 F. 2d at 213-214. Gasoline delivered to customers in Detroit, upon individual orders for it, is taken from the gasoline at the terminal in interstate commerce en route for delivery in that area. Such sales are well within the jurisdictional requirements of the Act. Any other conclusion would fall short of the recognized purpose of the Robinson-Patman Act to reach the operations of large interstate businesses in competition with small local concerns. Such temporary storage of the gasoline as occurs within the Detroit area does not deprive the gasoline of its interstate character. Stafford v. Wallace, 258 U. S. 495. Compare Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., 317 U. S. 564, 570, with Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Standard Oil Co., 275 U. S. 257, 268.[6]

---

[6] The Fair Labor Standards Act cases relied on by petitioner are not inconsistent with this result. They hold that, for the purposes of that statute, interstate commerce ceased on delivery to a local distributor. Higgins v. Carr Bros. Co., 317 U. S. 572; Walling v. Jacksonville Paper Co., supra. The sales involved here, on the other hand, are those of an interstate producer and refiner to a local distributor.

III. There Should Be a Finding as to Whether or Not Petitioner's Price Reduction Was Made in Good Faith to Meet a Lawfully Equally Low Price of a Competitor.

Petitioner presented evidence tending to prove that its tank-car price was made to each "jobber" in order to retain that "jobber" as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor. Petitioner sought to show that it succeeded in retaining 25 these customers, although the tank-car price which it offered them merely approached or matched, and did not undercut, the lower prices offered them by several competitors of petitioner. The trial examiner made findings on the point[7] but the Commission declined to do so, saying:

> "Based on the record in this case the Commission concludes as a matter of law that it is not material whether the discriminations in price granted by the respondent to the said four dealers were made to meet equally low prices of competitors. The Commission further concludes as a matter of law that it is unnecessary for the Commission to determine whether the alleged competitive prices were in fact available or involved gasoline of like grade or quality or of equal public acceptance. Accordingly the Commission does not attempt to find the facts regarding those matters because, even though the lower prices in question may have been made by respondent in good faith to meet 26 the lower prices of competitors, this does not constitute a defense in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy and pre-

---

[7] The trial examiner concluded:

"The recognition by respondent [petitioner] of Ned's Auto Supply Company as a jobber or wholesaler [which carried with it the tank-car price for gasoline], was a forced recognition given to retain that company's business. Ned's Company at the time of recognition, and ever since, has possessed all qualifications required by respondent [petitioner] for recognition as a jobber and the recognition was given and has ever since been continued in transactions between the parties, believed by them to be bona fide in all respects . . . ." (Conclusion of Fact 2, under § IX, R. 5098-5099.)

"The differentials on 's branded gasolines respondent [petitioner] granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the Wayne Company [the four jobbers], at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality." (Conclusion of Fact, under § X, R. 5104.)

> vent competition with the retail stations operated by the said named dealers and with stations operated by their retailer-customers." 41 F. T. C. 263, 281-282.

The court below affirmed the Commission's position.[8] There is no doubt that under the Clayton Act, before its amendment by the Robinson-Patman Act, this evidence would have been material and, if accepted, would have established a complete defense to the charge of unlawful discrimination. At that time the material provisions of § 2 were as follows:

> "Sec. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation, 27 or discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade." (Emphasis added within the first proviso.) 38 Stat. 730-731, 15 U. S. C. (1934 ed.) § 13.

The question before us, therefore, is whether the amendments made by the Robinson-Patman Act deprived those facts of their previously recognized effectiveness as a de-[8] "Now as to the contention that the discriminatory prices here complained of were made in good faith to meet a lower price of a competitor. While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held, contrary to the petitioner's contention, that this was not a defense. . . .

---

"We agree with the Commission that the showing of the petitioner that it made the discriminatory price in good faith to meet competition is not controlling in view of the very substantial evidence that its discrimination was used to affect and lessen competition at the retail level." 173 F. 2d at 214, 217.

fense. The material provisions of § 2, as amended, are quoted below, showing in italics those clauses which bear upon the proviso before us. The modified provisions are distributed between the newly created subsections (a) and (b). These must be read together and in relation to the provisions they supersede. The original phrase "that nothing herein contained shall prevent" is still used to introduce each of the defenses. The defense relating to the meeting of the price of a competitor appears only in subsection (b). There it is applied to discriminations in services or facilities as well as to discriminations in price, which alone are expressly condemned in subsection (a). In its opinion in the instant case, the Commission recognizes that it is an absolute defense to a charge of price discrimination for a seller to prove, under § 2 (a), that its price differential makes only due allowances for differences in cost or for price changes made in response to changing market conditions. 41 F. T. C. at 283. Each of these three defenses is introduced by the same phrase "nothing . . . shall prevent," and all are embraced in the same word "justification" in the first sentence of § 2 (b). It is natural, therefore, to conclude that each of these defenses is entitled to the same effect, without regard to whether there also appears an affirmative showing of 28 actual or potential injury to competition at the same or a lower level traceable to the price differential made by the seller. The Commission says, however, that the proviso in § 2 (b) as to a seller meeting in good faith a lower competitive price is not an absolute defense if an injury to competition may result from such price reduction. We find no basis for such a distinction between the defenses in § 2 (a) and (b).

The defense in subsection (b), now before us, is limited to a price reduction made to meet in good faith an equally low price of a competitor. It thus eliminates certain difficulties which arose under the original Clayton Act. For example, it omits reference to discriminations in price "in the same or different communities . . ." and it thus restricts the proviso to price differentials ocurring in actual competition. It also excludes reductions which undercut the "lower price" of a competitor. None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense. That still consists of the provision that wherever a lawful lower price of a competitor threatens to deprive a seller of a customer, the seller, to retain that customer, may in good faith meet that lower price. Actual competition, at least in this elemental form, is thus preserved.

Subsections 2 (a) and (b), as amended, are as follows:

> "SEC. 2. (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials
> 29 which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: . . . And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent price changes from time to time . . . in response to changing conditions affecting the market for or the marketability of the goods concerned . . .
>
> "(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." (Emphasis added in part.). 49 Stat. 126, 15 U. S. C. § 13 (a) and (b).

This right of a seller, under § 2 (b), to meet in good faith an equally low price of a competitor has been considered here before. Both in Corn Products Refining Co.

v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 324 U. S. 726, and in Federal Trade Comm'n v. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, evidence in support of this defense was reviewed at length. There would have been no occasion thus to review it under the theory now contended for by the Commission. While this Court did not sustain the seller's defense in either 30 case, it did unquestionably recognize the relevance of the evidence in support of that defense. The decision in each case was based upon the insufficiency of the seller's evidence to establish its defense, not upon the inadequacy of its defense as a matter of law.[9]

In the Corn Products case, supra, after recognizing that the seller had allowed differentials in price in favor of certain customers, this Court examined the evidence presented by the seller to show that such differentials were justified because made in good faith to meet equally low prices of a competitor. It then said:

> "Examination of the testimony satisfies us, as it did the court below, that it was insufficient to sustain a finding that the lower prices allowed to favored customers were in fact made to meet competition. Hence petitioners failed to sustain the burden of showing that the price discriminations were granted for the purpose of meeting competition." (Emphasis added.) 324 U. S. at 741.[10]

In the Staley case, supra, most of the Court's opinion is devoted to the consideration of the evidence introduced in support of the seller's defense under § 2 (b). The discussion proceeds upon the assumption, applicable here, that if a competitor's "lower price" is a lawful individual price offered to any of the seller's customers, then the 31 seller is protected, under § 2 (b), in making a counteroffer provided the seller proves that its counteroffer is made to meet in god faith its competitor's equally low price. On the record in the Staley case, a majority of the Court

---

[9] In contrast to that factual situation, the trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense (see note 7, supra), and yet the Commission refuses, as a matter of law, to give them consideration.

[10] In the Corn Products case, the same point of view was expressed by the Court of Appeals below: "We think the evidence is insufficient to sustain this affirmative defence." 144 F. 2d 211, 217 (C. A. 7th Cir.). The Court of Appeals also indicated that, to sustain this defense, it must appear not only that the competitor's lower price was met in good faith but that such price was lawful.

of Appeals, in fact, declined to accept the findings of the Commission and decided in favor of the accused seller.[11] This Court, on review, reversed that judgment but emphatically recognized the availability of the seller's defense under § 2 (b) and the obligation of the Commission to make findings upon issues material to that defense. It said:

> "Congress has left to the Commission the determination of fact in each case whether the person, charged with making discriminatory prices, acted in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence
> 32 is for the Commission. See Federal Trade Commission v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., 273 U. S. 52, 63; Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U. S. 67, 73. In the present case, the Commission's finding that respondents' price discriminations were not made to meet a 'lower' price and consequently were not in good faith, is amply supported by the record, and we think the Court of Appeals erred in setting aside this portion of the Commission's order to cease and desist.
>
> . . . . .
>
> "In appraising the evidence, the Commision recognized that the statute does not place an impossible burden upon sellers, but it emphasized the good faith requirement of the statute, which places the burden of proving good faith on the seller, who has made the discriminatory prices. . . .
>
> ". . . We agree with the Commission that the

---

[11] The Staley case was twice before the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. In 1943 the case was remanded by that court to the Commission for findings as to wherein the discriminations occurred and how they substantially lessened competition and promoted monopoly and also "for consideration of the defense [under § 2(b)] urged by the petitioners, and for findings in relation thereto." 135 F. 2d 453, 456. In 1944, a majority of the court decided in favor of the seller. 144 F. 2d 221. One judge held that the complaint was insufficient under § 2(a) and that, therefore, he need not reach the seller's defense under § 2(b). He expressly stated, however, that he did not take issue with the basis for the conclusion that the seller's price was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitior. Id., at 227-231. His colleague held squarely that the seller's defense of meeting competition in good faith under § 2(b) had been established. Id., at 221-225. The third judge found against the seller both under § 2(a) and (b). Id., at 225-227. The important point for us is that the Court of Appeals, as well as this Court, unanimously recognized in that case the materiality of the seller's evidence in support of its defense under § 2(b): even though the "discriminations 'have resulted, and do result, in substantial injury to competition among purchasers . . . .'" Id., at 222.

> statute at least requires the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor. Nor was the Commission wrong in holding that respondents failed to meet this burden." 324 U. S. at 758, 759-760.

See also, Federal Trade Comm'n v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, 721-726; Federal Trade Comm'n v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 43; and United States v. United States Gypsum Co., 340 U. S. 76, 92. All that petitioner asks in the instant case is that its evidence be considered and that findings be made by the Commission as to the sufficiency of that evidence to support petitioner's defense under § 2 (b).

33 In addition, there has been widespread understanding that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for the seller to show that its price differential has been made in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor. This understanding is reflected in actions and statements of members and counsel of the Federal Trade Commission.[12] Representatives of the Department of Jus-

---

[12] In cease and desist orders, issued both before and after the order in the instant case, the Commission has inserted saving clauses which recognize the propriety of a seller making a price reduction in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, even though the seller's discrimination may have the effect of injuring competition at a lower level. See In re Ferro-Enamel Corp., 42 F. T. C. 36; In re Anheuser-Busch, Inc., 31 F. T. C. 986; In re Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 28 F. T. C. 186.

See also, the statement filed by Walter B. Wooden, Assistant Chief Counsel, and by Hugh E. White, Examiner for the Commission, with the Temporary National Economic Committee in 1941:

"The amended Act now safeguards the right of a seller to discriminate in price in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, but he has the burden of proof on that question. This right is guaranteed by statute and could not be curtailed by any mandate or order of the Commission. . . . The right of self defense against competitive price attacks is as vital in a competitive economy as the right of self defense against personal attack." The Basing Point Problem 139 (TNEC Monograph 42, 1941).

In regard to the Commission's position on § 2(b), urged in the instant case, Allen C. Phelps, Assistant Chief Trial Counsel and Chief of the Export Trade Division of the Commission, testified before the Subcommittee on Trade Policies of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in June, 1949, that "This position, if upheld in the courts, in my judgment, will effectively and completely erase section 2(b) from the Robinson-Patman Act." Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on S. 236, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 66. See also, pp. 274-275.

tice have testified to the effectiveness and value of 34 the defense under the Robinson-Patman Act.[13] We see no reason to depart now from that interpretation.[14]

The heart of our national economic policy long has been faith in the value of competition. In the Sherman and Clayton Acts, as well as in the Robinson-Patman Act, "Congress was dealing with competition, which it sought to protect, and monopoly, which it sought to prevent."
35 Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 135 F. 2d 453, 455. We need not now reconcile, in its entirety, the economic theory which underlies the Robinson-Patman

---

[13] Herbert A. Bergson, then Assistant Attorney General, testifying for the Department, January 25, 1949, said: "The section [2(b)] presently permits sellers to justify otherwise forbidden price discriminations on the ground that the lower prices to one set of buyers were made in good faith to meet the equally low prices of a competitor." Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on S. 236, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 77. See also, report on S. 236 by Peyton Ford, Assistant to the Attorney General, to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Id., at 320. Mr. Bergson added the following in June, 1949: "While we recognize the competitive problem which arises when one purchaser obtains advantages denied to other purchasers, we do not believe the solution to this problem lies in denying to sellers the opportunity to make sales in good faith competition with other sellers." Hearings before Subcommittee No. 1 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on S. 1008, 81st Cong., 1st Sess. 12.

[14] Attention has been directed again to the legislative history of the proviso. This was considered in the Corn Products and Staley cases. See especially, 324 U. S. at 752-753. We find that the legislative history, at best, is inconclusive. It indicates that it was the purpose of Congress to limit, but not to abolish, the essence of the defense recognized as absolute in § 2 of the original Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, where a seller's reduction in price had been made "in good faith to meet competition . . . ." For example, the legislative history recognizes that the Robinson-Patman Act limits that defense to price differentials that do not undercut the competitor's price, and the amendments fail to protect differentials between prices in different communities where those prices are not actually competitive. There is also a suggestion in the debates, as well as in the remarks of this Court in the Staley case, supra, that a competitor's lower price, which may be met by a seller under the protection of § 2(b), must be a lawful price. And see, S. Res. 224, 70th Cong., 1st Sess., directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate and report to it on chain-store operators and F. T. C. Final Report on the Chain-Store Investigations, S. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess.

In the report of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, which drafted the clause which became § 2(b), there appears the following explanation of it:

"This proviso represents a contraction of an exemption now contained in section 2 of the Clayton Act which permits discriminations without limit where made in good faith to meet competition. It should be noted that while the seller is permitted to meet local competition, it does not permit him to cut local prices until his competitor has first offered lower prices, and then he can go no further than to meet those prices. If he goes further, he must do so likewise with all his other customers, or make himself liable to all of the penalties of the act, including treble damages. In other

Act with that of the Sherman and Clayton Acts.[15]
36 It is enough to say that Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act either to abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense against a price raid by a competitor. For example, if a large customer requests his seller to meet a temptingly lower price offered to him by one of his seller's competitors, the seller may well find it essential, as a matter of business survival, to meet that price rather than to lose the customer. It might be that this customer is the seller's only available market for the major portion of the seller's product, and that the loss of this customer would result in forcing a much higher unit cost and higher sales price upon the seller's other customers. There is nothing to show a congressional purpose, in such a situation, to compel the seller to choose only between ruinously cutting its prices to all its customers to match the price offered to one, or refusing to meet the competition and then ruinously raising its prices to its remaining customers to cover increased unit costs. There is, on the other hand, plain language and established practice which permits a seller, through § 2(b), to retain a customer by realistically meeting in good faith the price offered to that customer, without necessarily changing the seller's price to its other customers.

---

words, the proviso permits the seller to meet the price actually previously offered by a local competitor. It permits him to go no further." H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 16.

See also, 80 Cong. Rec. 6426, 6431-6436, 8229, 8235.

Somewhat changing this emphasis, there was a statement made by the managers on the part of the House of Representatives, accompanying the conference report, which said that the new clause was a "provision relating to the question of meeting competition, intended to operate only as a rule of evidence in a proceeding before the Federal Trade Commission . . . ." H. R. Rep. No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess. 7. The Chairman of the House Conferees also received permission to print in the Record an explanation of the proviso. 80 Cong. Rec. 9418. This explanation emphasizes the same interpretation as that put on the proviso in the Staley case to the effect that the lower price which lawfully may be met by a seller must be a lawful price. That statement, however, neither justifies disregarding the proviso nor failing to make findings of fact where evidence is offered that the prices met by the seller are lawful prices and that the meeting of them is in good faith.

[15] It has been suggested that, in theory, the Robinson-Patman Act as a whole is inconsistent with the Sherman and Clayton Acts. See Adelman, Effective Competition and the Antitrust Laws, 61 Harv. L. Rev. 1289, 1327-1350; Burns, The Anti-Trust Laws and the Regulation of Price Competition, 4 Law & Contemp. Prob. 301; Learned & Isaacs, The Robinson-Patman Law: Some Assumptions and Expectations, 15 Harv. Bus. Rev. 137; McAllister, Price Control by Law in the United States: A Survey, 4 Law & Contemp. Prob. 273.

In a case where a seller sustains the burden of proof placed upon it to establish its defense under § 2(b), we D find no reason to destroy that defense indirectly, merely because it also appears that the beneficiaries of the seller's price reductions may derive a competitive advantage from them or may, in a natural course of events, reduce their 37 own resale prices to their customers. It must have been obvious to Congress that any price reduction to any dealer may always affect competition at that dealer's level as well as at the dealer's resale level, whether or not the reduction to the dealer is discriminatory. Likewise, it must have been obvious to Congress that any price reductions initiated by a seller's competitor would, if not met by the seller, affect competition at the beneficiary's level or among the beneficiary's customers just as much as if those reductions had been met by the seller. The proviso in § 2(b), as interpreted by the Commission, would not be available when there was or might be an injury to competition at a resale level. So interpreted, the proviso would have such little, if any, applicability as to be practically meaningless. We may, therefore, conclude that Congress meant to permit the natural consequences to follow the seller's action in meeting in good faith a lawful and equally low price of its competitor.

In its argument here, the Commission suggests that there may be some situations in which it might recognize the proviso in § 2(b) as a complete defense, even though the seller's differential in price did injure competition. In support of this, the Commission indicates that in each case it must weigh the potentially injurious effect of a seller's price reduction upon competition at all lower levels against its beneficial effect in permitting the seller to meet competition at its own level. In the absence of more explicit requirements and more specific standards of comparison than we have here, it is difficult to see how an injury to competition at a level below that of the seller can thus be balanced fairly against a justification for meeting the competition at the seller's level. We hesitate to accept § 2(b) as establishing such a dubious defense. On the other hand, the proviso is readily understandable as simply continuing in effect a defense 38 which is equally absolute, but more limited in scope than that which existed under § 2 of the original Clayton Act.

The judgment of the Court of Appeals, accordingly, is reversed and the case is remanded to that court with instructions to remand it to the Federal Trade Commission to make findings in conformity with this opinion.

It is so ordered.

MR. JUSTICE MINTON took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

(See next page for opinion of
Mr. Justice Reed, dissenting.)

39 MR. JUSTICE REED, dissenting.

The Federal Trade Commission investigating practices of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana in selling its gasoline in the Detroit area at different prices to competing local distributors, in alleged violation of the Robinson-Patman (anti-price discrimination) Act. Standard's defense is not a denial of that discriminatory practice but a complete justification, said to be allowed by the Robinson-Patman Act, on the ground of trade necessity in order to meet an equally low price in Detroit of other gasoline refiners. On concluding the practice violated federal prohibitions against discriminatory sale prices, the Commission entered a cease and desist order against Standard's sale system. The order was enforced by the Court of Appeals after a minor modification. 43 F. T. C. 56; 173 F. 2d 210.

The need to allow sellers to meet competition in price from other sellers while protecting the competitors of the buyers against the buyers' advantages gained from the price discrimination was a major cause of the enactment of the 1936 Robinson-Patman Act. The Clayton Act of 1914 had failed to solve the problem. The impossibility of drafting fixed words of a statute so as to allow sufficient flexibility to meet the myriad situations of national commerce, we think led Congress in the Robinson-Patman Act to put authority in the Federal Trade Commission to determine when a seller's discriminatory sales price violated the prohibitions of the anti-monopoly statute, 40 § 2(a), 49 Stat. 1526, and when it was justified by a competitor's legal price.[1] The disadvantage to business of this choice was that the seller could not be positive before the Commission acted as to precisely how far he might go in price discrimination to meet and beat his competition. The Commission acted on its interpretation of the Act.[2] Believing it important to support the purpose of Congress and the Commission's interpretation of the Act, with which we agree, we state our reasons.

---

[1] The difficulties of any other approach are illustrated by the attempt of Congress to clarify the Robinson-Patman Act. See President's veto message on S. 1008, Cong. Rec. June 16, 1950, p. 8844, and conference reports, House of Reps., 81st Cong., 1st Sess., No. 1422, October 13, 1949, and 2d Sess., No. 1730, March 3, 1950.

The Court first condemns the Commission's position that meeting in good faith a competitor's price merely rebuts the prima facie establishment of discrimination based on forbidden differences in sales price, so as to require an affirmative finding by the Commission that nevertheless there may be enjoinable injury under the Robinson-Patman Act to the favored buyer's competitors. The Court then decides that good faith in meeting competition was an absolute defense for price discrimination, saying:

> "On the other hand, the proviso is readily understandable as simply continuing in effect an equally absolute, but more limited, defense than that which existed under § 2 of the original Clayton Act."

Such a conclusion seems erroneous. What follows in this dissent demonstrates, we think, that Congress intended so to amend the Clayton Act that the avenue of escape given price discriminators by its meeting competition clause should be narrowed. The Court's interpreta-41 tion leaves what the seller can do almost as wide open as before. See p. 12 et seq., infra. It seems clear to us that the interpretation put upon the clause of the Robinson-Patman Act by the Court means that no real change has been brought about by the amendment.

The public policy of the United States fosters the free-enterprise system of unfettered competition among producers and distributors of goods as the accepted method to put those goods into the hands of all consumers at the least expense.[3] There are, however, statutory exceptions to such unlimited competition.[4] Nondiscriminatory pricing tends to weaken competition in that a seller, while otherwise maintaining his prices, cannot meet his antagonist's price to get a single order or customer. But Congress obviously concluded that the greater advantage would accrue by fostering equal access to supplies by competing merchants or other purchasers in the course of business.[5]

---

[2] Hearings before Subcommittee No. 1 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on S. 1008, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., June 8 and 14, 1949, p. 61.

[3] Associated Press v. United States, 326 U. S. 1, 13; United States v. Line Material Co., 333 U. S. 287, 309.

[4] E. g., Interstate Commerce Act, § 5, 49 U. S. C. §5; Communications Act of 1934, § 221, 47 U. S. C. § 221; Miller-Tydings Act, 15 U. S. C. § 1. And see Mason, The Current Status of the Monopoly Problem in the United States, 62 Harv. L. Rev. 1265.

The first enactment to put limits on discriminatory selling prices was the Clayton Act in 1914, 38 Stat. 730, § 2. Section 11 enabled the Commission to use its investigatory and regulatory authority to handle price discrimination. Section 2 provided for the maintenance of competition by protecting the ability of business rivals to obtain commodities on equal terms. The Robinson-Patman Act moved further toward this objective. In the margin appear the applicable words of the Clayton Act followed by those 42 of the Robinson-Patman Act. Phrased summarily for this case, it may be said that the italicized words in the Clayton Act were the source of the difficulties in enforcement that Congress undertook to avoid by the italicized words of the Robinson-Patman Act.[6]

It will be noted that unless the effect is given the Robinson-Patman amendment contended for by the Federal Trade Commission, there is little done to overcome the difficulties arising from the meeting competition clause of the Clayton Act. Formerly "discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition." was allowed as a complete defense.

---

[5] For a discussion of the merits of the legislation, see Adelman, Effective Competition and the Anti-Trust Laws, 61 Harv. L. Rev. 1289.

[6] Clayton Act:

"SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce . . . to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities, . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition, or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent . . . discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition: . . . .".

Robinson-Patman Act:

"SEC. 2.(a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, . . . to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities . . . where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them; . . . .

"SEC. 2.(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

43 Now it is "made in good faith to meet an equally low low price of a competitor." The Court says:

> "It thus eliminates certain difficulties which arose under the original Clayton Act. For example, it omits reference to discrimination in price 'in the same or different communities . . .' and it thus restricts the proviso to price differentials occurring in actual competition. It also excludes reductions which undercut the 'lower price' of a competitor. None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense. That still consists of the provision that wherever a lawful lower price of a competitor threatens to deprive a seller of a customer, the seller, to retain that customer, may in good faith meet that lower price."

We see little difference. The seller may still, under the Court's interpretation, discriminate in sales of goods of like quantity and quality between buyers on opposite corners, so long as one gets a lower delivered price offer from another seller, no matter where located. The "actual core of the defense" remains intact.

I.

Legislative History. Upon the interpretation of the words and purpose of this last addition by the Robinson-Patman Act to curbs on discrimination in trade, the narrow statutory issues in this case turn. Though narrow, they are important if trade is to have the benefit of careful investigation before regulation, attainable under the Federal Trade Commission Act but so difficult when attempted by prosecutions in courts with the limitations of judicial procedure. As an aid to the interpretation of § 2(b) we set out applicable parts of its legislative history.

The Clayton Act created a broad exception from control for prices made in good faith to meet competition. This raised problems of which Congress was aware. In 44 reporting on a redrafted version of S. 3154, the Senate's companion bill to the House bill that became the

Robinson-Patman Act, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, February 3, 1936, pointed out the weakness of § 2 of the Clayton Act in permitting discrimination to meet competition, and suggested a harsh remedy, the elimination of its italicized proviso in note 6 supra, without the mollifying the words of § 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act.[7] In March, the House Committee on the Judiciary made its report on the bill that became the Act. Section 2 (b) was then in substantially its present form. The report pointed out the draftsmen's purpose to strengthen the laws against price discrimination, directly or indirectly through brokerage or other allowances, services or absorptions of costs.[8] It commented that the subsection that

---

[7] S. Rep. No. 1502, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 4:

"The weakness of present section 2 lies principally in the fact that: (1) It places no limit upon differentials permissible on account of differences in quantity; and (2) it permits discriminations to meet competition, and thus tends to substitute the remedies of retaliation for those of law, with destructive consequences to the central object of the bill. Liberty to meet competition which can be met only by price cuts at the expense of customers elsewhere, is in its unmasked effect the liberty to destroy competition by selling locally below cost, a weapon progressively the more destructive in the hands of the more powerful, and most deadly to the competitor of limited resources, whatever his merit and efficiency. While the bill as now reported closes these dangerous loopholes, it leaves the fields of competition free and open to the most efficient, and thus in fact protects them the more securely against inundations of mere power and size.

"Specific phrases of section 2(a), as now reported, may be noted as follows:

"One: '* * * where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce * * *.'

"Section 2(a) attaches to competitive relations between a given seller and his several customers, and this clause is designed to extend its scope to discriminations between interstate and intrastate customers, as well as between those purely interstate. Discriminations in excess of sound economic differences involve generally an element of loss, whether only of the necessary minimum of profits or of actual costs, that must be recouped from the business of customers not granted them. When granted by a given seller to his customers in other States, and denied to those within the State, they involve the use of that interstate commerce to the burden and injury of the latter. When granted to those within the State and denied to those beyond, they involve conversely a directly resulting burden upon interstate commerce with the latter. Both are within the proper and well-recognized power of Congress to suppress."

[8] H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 3:

"The purpose of this proposed legislation is to restore, so far as possible, equality of opportunity in business by strengthening anti-trust laws and by protecting trade and commerce against unfair trade practices and unlawful price discrimination, and also against restraint and monopoly for the better protection of consumers, workers, and independent producers, manufacturers, merchants, and other businessmen.

"To accomplish its purpose, the bill amends and strengthens the Clayton Act by prohibiting discriminations in price between purchasers where such became § 2 (b) let a seller "meet the price actually previously offered by a local competitor."[9] The language 46 used in regard to competition in the bills and in the Act seems to have been based on a recommendation of the Federal Trade Commission.[10] The Commission had been unable to restore the desired competition under the Clayton Act, and Congress evidently sought to open the way for effective action.[11] discriminations cannot be shown to be justified by differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from different methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold and delivered. It also prohibits brokerage allowances except for services actually rendered, and advertising and other service allowances unless such allowances or services are made available to all purchasers on proportionally equal terms. It strikes at the basing-point method of sale, which lessens competition and tends to create a monopoly."

---

[9] Id., p. 16:

"This proviso represents a contraction of an exemption now contained in section 2 of the Clayton Act which permits discriminations without limit where made in good faith to meet competition. It should be noted that while the seller is permitted to meet local competition, it does not permit him to cut local prices until his competitor has first offered lower prices, and then he can go no further than to meet those prices. If he goes further, he must do so likewise with all his other customers, or make himself liable to all of the penalties of the act, including treble damages. In other words, the proviso permits the seller to meet the price actually previously offered by a local competitor. It permits him to go no further."

[10] Final Report on the Chain-Store Investigation, S. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 96: "A simple solution for the uncertainties and difficulties of enforcement would be to prohibit unfair and unjust discrimination in price and leave it to the enforcement agency, subject to review by the courts, to apply that principle to particular cases and situations. The soundness of and extent to which the present provisos would constitute valid defenses would thus become a judicial and not a legislative matter.

"The Commission therefore recommends that section 2 of the Clayton Act be amended to read as follows:

" 'It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in any transaction in or affecting such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate unfairly or unjustly in price between different purchasers of commodities, which commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States.' "

This report was utilized by the House Committee dealing with the proposed Robinson-Patman legislation. H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 3, 7.

[11] Id., p. 64: "If the discrimination is 'on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold,' or makes 'only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation,' or is 'made in good faith to meet competition,' it is not unlawful, even though the effect 'may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce.' Discriminatory price concessions given to prevent the loss of a chain store's business to a competing manufacturer, to prevent it manufacturing its own goods, or to prevent it from discouraging in its stores the sale of a given manufacturer's goods, may be strongly

47 Events in the course of the proposed legislation in the Senate and House have pertinence. The Senate inserted the original ineffective language of the Clayton Act in its exact form in the Senate bill. In the same draft it adopted an amendment similar to the proviso ultimately enacted. 80 Cong. Rec. 6426, 6435. In the House, Repsentative Patman explained his views of the dangers in the original proviso.[12] It was taken out in Confer-48 ence.[13] The Chairman of the House managers, Mr. Utterback, before the Conference Report was agreed to urged by the manufacturer as 'made in good faith to meet competition.'" See p. 90, id.

---

Attention was called to this need. H. R. Rep. No. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 7: "Some of the difficulties of enforcement of this section as it stands are pointed out in the [Final Report] of the Federal Trade Commission above referred to, at pages 63 and following."

[12] 80 Cong. Rec. 8235:

"Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Patman]. A great many of the industries in Ohio were very much in favor of the proviso in the Senate bill, appearing on page 4, and reading as follows:

"'And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price in the same or different commodities made in good faith to meet competition.'

"I find that on page 9 of the Patman bill, beginning in line 14, there appear these words:

"'Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.'

"Will the gentlman explain the difference between these two proposals?

"Mr. PATMAN. If the Senate amendment should be adopted it would really destroy the bill. It would permit the corporate chains to go into a local market, cut the price down so low that it would destroy local competitors and make up for their losses in other places where they had already destroyed their competitors. One of the objects of the bill is to get around that phrase and prevent the large corporate chains from selling below cost in certain localities, thus destroying the independent merchants, and making it up at other places where their competitors have already been destroyed. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the Senate amendment, because it would be very destructive of the bill. The phrase 'equally low price' means the corporate chain will have the right to compete with the local merchants. They may meet competition, which is all right, but they cannot cut down the price below cost for the purpose of destroying the local man.

"Mr. COOPER of Ohio. What does the gentleman's proviso mean?

"Mr. PATMAN. It means they may meet competition, but not cut down the price below cost. It means an equally low price but not below that. It permits competition, but it does not permit them to cut the price below cost in order to destroy their competitors. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the Senate amendment."

But see pp. 15 and 16, infra.

[13] H. R. Rep. No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 6-7:

"The Senate bill contained a further proviso—

"'That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price in by the House, received permission to print an explanation of his understanding of the proviso. He explained that the proviso "does not set up the meeting of competition as an absolute bar to a charge of discrimination under the bill. It merely permits it to be shown in evidence. . . . It leaves it a question of fact to be determined in each case, whether the competition to be met was such as to justify the discrimination given. . . ." The pertinent parts of the statement appear in the margin.[14] the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition.'

---

"This language is found in existing law, and in the opinion of the conferees is one of the obstacles to enforcement of the present Clayton Act. The Senate receded, and the language is stricken. A provision relating to the question of meeting competition, intended to operate only as a rule of evidence in a proceeding before the Federal Trade Commission, is included in subsection (b) in the conference text as follows:

"'Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.'"

[14] 80 Cong. Rec. 9418:

"In connection with the above rule as to burden of proof, it is also provided that a seller may show that his lower price was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or that his furnishing of services or facilities was made in good faith to meet those furnished by a competitor. It is to be noted, however, that this does not set up the meeting of competition as an absolute bar to a charge of discrimination under the bill. It merely permits it to be shown in evidence. This provision is entirely procedural. It does not determine substantive rights, liabilities, and duties. They are fixed in the other provisions of the bill. It leaves it a question of fact to be determined in each case, whether the competition to be met was such as to justify the discrimination given, as one lying within the limitations laid down by the bill, and whether the way in which the competition was met lies within the latitude allowed by those limitations.

"This procedural provision cannot be construed as a carte blanche exemption to violate the bill so long as a competitor can be shown to have violated it first, nor so long as that competition cannot be met without the use of oppressive discriminations in violation of the obvious intent of the bill.

"If this proviso were construed to permit the showing of a competing offer as an absolute bar to liability for discrimination, then it would nullify the act entirely at the very inception of its enforcement, for in nearly every case mass buyers receive similar discriminations from competing sellers of the same product. One violation of law cannot be permitted to justify another. As in any case of self-defense, while the attack against which the defense is claimed may be shown in evidence, its competency as a bar depends also upon whether it was a legal or illegal attack. A discrimination in violation of this bill is in practical effect a commercial bribe to lure the business of the favored customer away from the competitor, and if one bribe were permitted to justify another the bill would be futile to achieve its plainly intended purposes."

49 II.

Statutory Interpretation. This résumé of the origin and purpose of the original § 2 of the Clayton Act and the amendments of the Robinson-Patman Act gives a basis for determining the effect of this section in a hearing before the Commission where the charge, as here, that a seller during the same period of time has sold the same commodities to various purchsers at different 50 prices, is admitted and the defense, the elements of which are likewise admitted, is that the discrimination was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competition. Does meeting in good faith a competitor's price constitute a complete defense under the proviso to § 2 (b)? Or does the fact of good faith reduction in price to a purchaser to meet a competitor's price merely rebut the prima facie establishment of discrimination, arising under the statute from proof of forbidden differences in price,[15] so as to require under § 2 (a) affirmative finding by the Commission that there may be injury to competition? Petitioner asserts that good faith meeting of a competitor's price is a complete defense. The Commission and the Court of Appeals take the opposite position, with which we concur.

This is our reason. The statutory development and the information before Congress concerning the need for strengthening the competitive price provision of the Clayton Act, make clear that the evil dealt with by the proviso of § 2 (b) was the easy avoidance of the prohibition against price-discrimination. The control of that evil was an important objective of the Robinson-Patman Act. The debates, the Commission's report and recommendation and statutory changes show this. The Conference Report and the explanation by one of the managers, Mr. Utterback, are quite definitive upon the point. Because of experience under the Clayton Act, Congress refused to continue its competitive price proviso. Yet adoption of petitioner's position would permit a seller of nationally distributed goods to discriminate in favor of large chain retailers, for the seller could give to the large retailer a price lower than that charged to small retailers, and could then completely justify its discrimination by showing that the large retailer had first obtained the same

---

[15] See n. 6, supra.

low-price from a local low-cost producer of competitive 51 goods. This is the very type of competition that Congress sought to remedy. To permit this would not seem consonant with the other provisions of the Robinson-Patman Act, strengthening regulatory powers of the Commission in "quantity" sales, special allowances and changing economic conditions.

The structure and wording of the Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act also conduce to our conclusion. In the original Clayton Act, § 2 was not divided into subsections. In that statute, § 2 stated the body of the substantive offense, and then listed, in a series of provisos, various circumstances under which discriminations in price were permissible. Thus the statute provided that discriminations were not illegal if made on account of differences in the grade of the commodity sold, or differences in selling or transportation costs. Listed among these absolute justifications of the Clayton Act appeared the provision that "nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price . . . made in good faith to meet competition." The Robinson-Patman Act, however, made two changes in respect of the "meeting competition" provision, one as to its location, the other in the phrasing. Unlike the original statute, § 2 of the Robinson-Patman Act is divided into two subsections. The first, § 2 (a), retained the statement of substantive offense and the series of provisos treated by the Commission as affording full justifications for price discriminations; § 2 (b) was created to deal with procedural problems in Federal Trade Commission proceedings, specifically to treat the question of burden of proof. In the process of this division, the "meeting competition" provision was separated from the other provisos, set off from the substantive provisions of § 2 (a), and relegated to the position of a proviso to the procedural subsection, § 2 (b). Unless it is believed that this change of position was fortuitous, it can be inferred that Congress meant 52 to curtail the defense of meeting competition when it banished this proviso from the substantive division to the procedural. In the same way, the language changes made by § 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act reflect an intent to diminish the effectiveness of the sweeping defense offered by the Clayton Act's "meeting of competition" proviso. The original provisos in the Clayton Act, and the provisos now appearing in § 2 (a), are worded to make it clear that nothing shall prevent certain price practices, such as "price differentials . . . [making] . . . due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture . . .," or "price changes . . . in response to changing conditions affecting the market for . . . the goods concerned . . . ." But in contrast to these provisions, the proviso to § 2 (b) does not provide that nothing "shall prevent" a certain price practice; it provides only that "nothing shall prevent a seller rebutting . . . [a] . . . prima facie case by showing" a certain price practice—meeting a competitive price. The language thus shifts the focus of the proviso from a matter of substantive defense to a matter of proof. Consistent with each other, these modifications made by the Robinson-Patman Act are also consistent with the intent of Congress expressed in the legislative history.

The Court suggests that former Federal Trade Commission cases decided here have treated the meeting-competition clause of the Robinson-Patman Act as being an absolute defense, not merely a rebuttal of the discrimination charge requiring further finding by the Commission. Reference is made to Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Comm'n, 324 U. S. 726, and Federal Trade Comm'n v. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746. In the Corn Products case, dealing with a basing point scheme for delivered prices, this Court merely said at p. 741:

> "The only evidence said to rebut the prima facie > case made by proof of the price discriminations was > 53 given by witnesses who had no personal knowledge > of the transactions, and was limited to statements > of each witness's assumption or conclusion that the > price discriminations were justified by competition."

And then went on to use the language quoted at p. 12 of the Court's opinion. There was no occasion to consider the effect of a successful rebuttal. As authority for its statement, we there cited the Staley case at 324 U. S. 746.

That citation included these words at pp. 752-753:

> "Prior to the Robinson-Patman amendments, § 2 of the Clayton Act provided that nothing contained in it 'shall prevent' discriminations in price 'made in good faith to meet competition.' The change in language of this exception was for the purpose of making the defense a matter of evidence in each case, raising > a question of fact as to whether the competition justified the discrimination. See the Conference Report, H. Rep. No. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 6-7; see also the statement of Representative Utterback, the Chairman of the House Conference Committee, 80 Cong. Rec. 9418."

After that statement, which it should be noted relies upon Mr. Utterback's interpretation quoted at note 14 of this opinion, the Court in the Staley case goes on to say that there was no evidence to show that Staley adopted a lower price to meet an equally low price of a competitor. Again there was no occasion for this Court to meet the present issue. We think our citation in Staley, quoted above, shows the then position of this Court.[16]

54 There are arguments available to support the contrary position. No definite statement appears in the committee reports that "meeting competition" is henceforth to be only a rebuttal of a prima facie case and not a full justification for discrimination in price. The proviso of § 2 (b) can be read as having the same substantive effect as the provisos of § 2 (a). The earlier provisos are treated by the Commission as complete defenses. Perhaps there is an implication favorable to the petitioner's position in Representative Patman's omission to state the Federal Trade Commission interpretation on the floor. See n. 12, supra.

The underlying congressional purpose to curtail methods of avoiding limitations on price discriminations, however, considered with the more specific matters discussed herein, satisfies us that we should adopt the conclusion of the Commission and the Court of Appeals.[17] We believe that good faith meeting of a competitor's price only rebuts the prima facie case of violation established by showing the price discrimination. Whether the proven price discrimination is of a character that violates § 2 (a) then becomes a matter for the determination of the Commission on a showing that there may be injury to competition.

---

[16] The Court's opinion in this case refers, p. 12, notes 12 and 13, to the opinions of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Staley and Corn Products, 144 F. 2d 211 and 221. But that Court reversed its position in the opinion below, 173 F. 2d 210, 216. It is fair to assume that reversal was because of our opinions in Corn Products and Staley.

[17] It is hardly necessary to note that the wisdom of the enactment is not for the Commission nor the courts in enforcing the Act. The Commission recently has advised Congress that while "on balance it would be preferable to make the good faith meeting of competition a complete defense," it "does not strongly urge either view upon the Congress." Hearings before Subcommittee No. 1 of the House Committee on the Judiciary on S. 1008, 81st Cong., 1st Sess., June 8 and 14, 1949, p. 61. Compare Standard Oil Co. v. United States, 337 U. S. 293, 311. This statement confirmed the Commission's position taken in this case. There were other officials of the Commission who have taken the view adopted by the Court.

55 III.

Conclusion. In view of the Court's ruling, we will not enlarge this dissent by discussing other problems raised by the case. We have said enough to show that we would affirm the decree below in principle, even though we should conclude some amendment might be required in the wording of the order.

The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Black join in this dissent.

56 United States of America, ss:

(Filed Feb. 7, 1951. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.)

(Seal)

The President of the United States of America, To the Honorable the Judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit Greeting:

Whereas, lately in the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, in a cause between Standard Oil Company, Petitioner, and Federal Trade Commission, Respondent, No. 9215, wherein the final judgment of the said Court of Appeals modifying the order of the Commission and affirming said order as modified was duly entered in said cause on the 29th day of April, A. D. 1949, which judgment is fully set out in the record of said cause in the office of the Clerk of said Court of Appeals and is incorporated herein by reference thereto;

as by the inspection of the transcript of the record of the said United States Court of Appeals which was brought into the Supreme Court of the United States by virtue of a writ of certiorari, agreeably to the act of Congress, in such case made and provided, fully and at large appears.

57 And whereas, in the present term of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifty, the said cause came on to be heard before the said Supreme Court, on the said transcript of record, and was argued by counsel:

On consideration whereof, It is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the judgment of the said United States Court of Appeals in this cause be, and the same is hereby, reversed.

And it is further ordered, That this cause be, and the same is hereby, remanded to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit with instructions to remand the cause to the Federal Trade Commission to make findings in conformity with the opinion of this Court.

January 8, 1951.

You, therefore, are hereby commanded that such proceedings be had in said cause, in conformity with the opinion and judgment of this Court, as according to right and justice, and the laws of the United States, ought to be had, the said writ of certiorari notwithstanding.

Witness, the Honorable Fred M. Vinson, Chief Justice of the United States, the fifth day of February, in the year of our Lord on ethousand nine hundred and fifty-one.

Charles Elmore Cropley,
Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States.
By Hugh W. Barr,
Deputy.

Endorsed: U. S. C. A. #9215. Supreme Court of the United States, No. 1, October Term, 1950. Standard Oil Company, vs. Federal Trade Commission. Mandate. Filed Feb. 7, 1951. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

58 UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit,

Chicago 10, Illinois.

February 14, 1951.

Before

Hon. Otto Kerner, Circuit Judge.
Hon F. Ryan Duffy, Circuit Judge.

Standard Oil Company, Petitioner,
No. 9215 vs.
Federal Trade Commission, Respondent.

Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission.

On consideration of the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States entered in this cause on January 8, 1951, as set forth on the mandate of the Supreme Court which was filed in this Court on February 7, 1951, which said judgment and mandate provide that the judgment of this Court be reversed and that this Court remand the cause to the Federal Trade Commission with instructions to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States,

It is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the judgment of this Court entered in this cause on March 11, 1949 be, and the same is hereby, vacated and set aside, and that this cause be, and the same is hereby, remanded to the Federal Trade Commission with instructions to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States filed on January 8, 1951.

59 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Commissioners:
James M. Mead, Chairman,
Lowell B. Mason,
John Carson,
Stephen J. Spingarn.

In the Matter of
Standard Oil Company, a corporation. } Docket No. 4389.

ORDER GRANTING RESPONDENT LEAVE TO PRESENT OBJECTIONS TO MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS.

The Commission, acting pursuant to the mandate of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit filed on February 14, 1951, having made its modified findings as to the facts and its conclusion in this proceeding, in which it was found, among other things, that the respondent has not justified the discriminatory prices granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc. by showing that such discriminatory prices were the result of lower prices granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors within the meaning of subsection (b) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended; and

The Commission being of the opinion, however, that before said modified findings as to the facts and conclusion are finally issued the respondent should be afforded the opportunity of presenting its views with respect thereto for the Commission's consideration:

It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company, be, and it hereby is, granted thirty (30) days after service upon it of this order within which it may file with the Commission an appropriate memorandum or brief setting forth any objections it may have to the issuance of the attached document as the Commission's modified findings as to the facts and conclusion in this proceeding.

60 It Is Further Ordered that the respondent may, if it desires, request oral argument before the Commission in support of any such objections.

By the Commission.

D. C. Daniel,
Secretary.

(Seal)

Issued: March 24, 1952.

* * * * *

92 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Before Federal Trade Commission.

Commissioners:
James M. Mead, Chairman,
Lowell B. Mason,
John Carson,
Stephen J. Spingarn.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST SHOULD NOT BE FURTHER MODIFIED.

The Commission having reconsidered its modified order to cease and desist in this proceeding in the light of its experience and the Court decisions which have been rendered in a number of price discrimination cases since said order was issued; and,

The Commission recognizing the desirability of making its orders as clear and explicit as possible and being of the opinion that the public interest and the interest of the respondent requires that the aforesaid modified order to cease and desist be further modified:

It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company, be, and it hereby is, granted leave to show cause, if any there be, by written memorandum or brief filed within thirty (30) days after service upon it of this order, why the modified order to cease and desist issued in this proceeding on August 9, 1946, should not be further modified to read as follows:

"It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company (Indiana), a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents and employees, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the sale or distribution of gasoline in commerce, as 'commerce' is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of gasoline of like grade and quality:

93 "By selling such gasoline to any retailer thereof at a lower price than to any other retailer who in fact competes with the favored purchaser in the resale of such gasoline to the public ('Retailer' as here used applies to that portion of the business of any purchaser which consists of the retail sale of gasoline to the public).

"For the purpose of comparison, the term 'price' as used in this order includes discounts, rebates, allowances and other terms and conditions of sale.

"It Is Further Ordered that the respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order."

It Is Further Ordered that the respondent may, if it desires, request oral argument before the Commission in support of its position.

By the Commission.

D. C. Daniel,
Secretary.

(Seal)
Issued: March 24, 1952.

94 BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

• • (Caption—4389) • •

STATEMENT OF COMMISSIONER MASON WITH REGARD TO THE PROPOSED MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS AND CONCLUSION, AND ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE WHY MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST SHOULD NOT BE FURTHER MODIFIED.

I am in complete agreement insofar as the proposed order strikes out Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the Commission's order of August 9, 1946. In this respect, the new Commission has adopted the points I raised before the old Commission in my dissent filed on August 9, 1946, namely:

"First, in my judgment, the order is too indefinite and obscure to be followed. The first half merely says, 'Look at what Standard did and don't do that.' I refer specifically to those portions of the order which state that the respondent is ordered to cease and desist from discriminating

'1. By selling such gasoline * * * in the manner * * * stated in the findings * * *.

'2. By continuing or resuming the discriminations * * * described in the Commission's findings * * *.

'3. By otherwise discriminating * * * in a manner * * * similar to * * * the discrimination * * * referred to * * * in the Commission's findings * * *.'

"An order is a command to do or refrain from doing certain things, and thus should interpret the Robinson-Patman Act ideals into completely understandable, explicit directions.

"To rely on the finding of facts to determine the command of an order is bad. How can business men 95 determine the standard at which they must aim if the Commission will not set down in words and figures in the order what is illegal?

"The order of the Commission, being of a negative quality, that is to say, an order to cease and desist, should ban specific acts and thus by a series of quasi-judicial exclusions, direct all men of enterprise toward the best practices of their trade."

As to the validity of the balance of the order and the modified findings proposed by the Commission pertaining to the issue of good faith meeting of competition, I reserve judgment until the matters have been developed through presentation of briefs and oral argument.

Lowell B. Mason,
Commissioner.

183 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Docket No. 4389.

In the Matter
of
Standard Oil Company, a corporation.

STATEMENT OF RESPONDENT'S OBJECTIONS TO PROCEDURE, FINDINGS, CONCLUSION AND MODIFIED ORDER OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
John C. Butler,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
of
Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle Street,
Chicago 2, Illinois,
Attorneys for Respondent.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert L. Green,
Gordon E. Tappan,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 80, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

May 29, 1952.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

STATEMENT OF RESPONDENT'S OBJECTIONS TO PROCEDURE, FINDINGS, CONCLUSION AND MODIFIED ORDER OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Comes now Standard Oil Company, a corporation, respondent herein, and, in accordance with the order of the Commission of March 24, 1952, sets forth its objections to the issuance of the modified findings as to the facts and conclusion, and to the entry of the modified order, as promulgated by the Commission on March 24, 1952, and to the procedure followed by the Commission herein.

The Commission, to which this matter was remanded to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court, 340 U. S. 231, has considered the record of the prior proceedings, ex parte. Without hearing or considering any additional evidence, the Commission—to use its own words—"is convinced" that respondent's price reductions, which it admittedly made solely in order to keep its four tank-car customers in Detroit, were not made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the amended Clayton Act. This new adverse finding of the Commission is made in the face of past actions of the Commission which, under all the circumstances, foreclose any finding other than one of good faith.

I.

The Improper Procedure of the Commission.

At the outset, respondent objects to the arbitrary manner in which the Commission has acted upon the remand. Respondent was furnished with no notice or specification by the Commission, let alone afforded any opportunity to be heard, concerning the respects in which its heretofore virtually conceded good faith is now adjudged to be bad faith—a matter of which the Commission, following its private deliberations, is now "convinced". Respondent asserts that the Commission has proceeded most improperly and arbitrarily, and has denied respondent the rudiments of a fair hearing.

A. Respondent's Lack of Adequate Time.

The Commission had allowed itself approximately fourteen months, following the mandate of the Supreme Court, to fashion in its own councils its present revised findings. On March 26, 1952, respondent was suddenly served with the revised findings, conclusion and order of the Commission and was given thirty days to show cause, if any there be, why the order of the Commission to cease and desist should not be entered in the form promulgated by it. Coupled with this formal dispensation, a concurrent period of time was allotted to respondent within which to file with the Commission a memorandum or brief setting forth its objections to the issuance of the Commission's present findings and conclusion.

Respondent asked the Commission that it be accorded sixty additional days to respond to the present findings, conclusion and order, protesting that thirty days' time was not adequate. This request was renewed on May 15, 1952,[*] but the Commission granted extensions which afforded respondent to May 29, 1952—only thirty-five more days than originally were allowed for the preparation of its views. The time thus allotted to respondent is utterly inadequate in view of the size of the record, the complexity of the issues involved, and the novel interpretations of the law that the Commission has made. Accordingly, in sub-185 mitting this statement, respondent wishes to reiterate that it has not had adequate opportunity to give detail to its objections to the action which the Commission is taking.

B. The Denial of a Fair Hearing.

Respondent objects also to the procedure followed by the Commission in revising the findings and modifying the order in advance of any opportunity on respondent's part to be heard.

On March 14, 1951, respondent made the request that it be heard both on procedure and on substance with respect to the further action of the Commission, and that such matters not be considered, ex parte, even provisionally. The Commission's response to respondent's request was made a year later—on March 24, 1952—promising respondent the opportunity of presenting its views "(I)n the event the Commission decides to modify its findings in the case adversely to the respondent."* Four days later, the Commission acted "adversely to the respondent"—and professes now to permit respondent "the opportunity of presenting its views", the Commission taking this action after it had become "convinced" of the findings and order it has fashioned.

---

[*] This request was made by letter addressed to Commissioner Spingarn a copy of such letter being attached to this statement of objections

Proper conformance to the mandate of the Supreme Court, in the absence of additional evidence which the Commission has seen fit neither to adduce nor to desire, would require that the Commission adhere to the determination of respondent's good faith which its late counsel conceded. Particularly under the circumstances of this case, it would have seemed appropriate, if not necessary, that the present Commission, before allowing itself to become "convinced" in any manner at variance with that of respondent's good faith, should hear from the respondent as well as from the Commission's staff.

Of the present members of the Commission, only one Commissioner was a member at the time that the original findings were made. That Commissioner explicitly supported respondent's defense of good faith. The others, in practical effect, conceded it. It is obvious that three of the present four Commissioners who now assume responsibility for a contrary determination have had no prior familiarity with the evidence and the record, and have acted entirely upon the basis of an ex parte determination designed to emasculate the Supreme Court's opinion. The opportunity afforded to respondent in this setting to attempt to persuade the majority of the Commission to revise either the findings or order does violence to basic concepts of fair hearing and fair play, and negatives objective judicial consideration or conflicting points of view.

---

* Copies of this exchange of letters are attached to this statement of objections.

 The late Walter B. Wooden, counsel for the Commission, said in his argument before it on April 25, 1946:

> "Desiring to test the legal status of such defense, the Commission found that it was not material as a matter of law whether such defense could be sustained as a matter of fact under the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, it made no finding on the factual question.
>
> "The result, I suppose, is the same as though the existence of the respondent's good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor has been conceded." (Pp. 100-101 of Official Report of Oral Argument before Federal Trade Commission.)

 In the argument in the Court of Appeals, Judge Minton stated that, in view of the obvious good faith of respondent, any remand to the Commission on the good faith issue "would be an idle ceremony because you would just make it" (i. e., the finding of good faith). Standard Oil Co. v. F. T. C., 173 F. 2d 210 (7th Cir. 1949). Transcript of Oral Argument, p. 66.

In this case it is clear that the majority of the Commission have already considered the matters involved ex parte. In its order of March 24, 1952, the Commission recites that it has "made" its modified findings as to the facts and its conclusion that respondent did not act in good faith. Acknowledging it is already "convinced", the Commission states that before its findings and conclusion "are finally issued" respondent should be offered "the opportunity of presenting its views".

This does not suffice. In the prior proceedings, the Commission had conceded respondent's good faith in meeting the lower prices of competitors—a concession which it had to make in view of the uncontroverted evidence on the matter.* The Commission attempted to nullify respondent's meeting of competition defense by asserting a legal theory of its unavailability in the face of "affirmative proof" of injury to competition. The Commission's theory was wrong. 340 U. S. 231. The Commission now strains to reach the same end—the nullification of the meeting of competition defense—by a prejudged, ex parte, and unfounded determination of respondent's bad faith. This prejudgment, and the manner by which it was made, all serve to evidence the repudiation of standards of administrative conduct which it is to the Commission's interest to 186 maintain and which the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution requires: that administrative agencies, in the performance of their quasi-judicial functions, must as a minimum act in accordance with the cherished judicial tradition embodying the basic concepts of fair play.

Respondent is accordingly forced to register its protest that the Commission's present action violates respondent's rights under the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution and under the Administrative Procedure Act which was designed to impose higher standards of reasonableness and fairness upon administrative agencies than had formerly been the case.

The Commission's modified findings, which it has promulgated herein, are therefore fatally defective, in this denial of respondent's good faith, not only because (1) they are unsupported by essential findings of basic facts, and (2) the fundamental findings of fact therein are not supported by substantial evidence, and (3) they are based upon an erroneous conception of the law, and (4) they are in disregard of the mandate of the Supreme Court, but also because they are reached by a method which departs from recognized and accepted standards of procedure, required by the Constitution and by statute, and are arbitrarily made.

---

* Commission counsel, in presenting the case to the Commission in the original proceeding, conceded that "apparently no evidence controverting" respondent's good faith was offered. (P. 101 of Official Report of Oral Argument before Federal Trade Commission).

II.

The Impropriety of the Commission's Findings.

A. As Judged by Prior Proceedings in This Case.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, at the time this proceeding was before it on the legal scope of section 2 (b) of the amended Clayton Act, stated:

> "There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner (respondent) made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor." 173 F. 2d 210, 213 (7th Cir. 1949).

This statement is true in all respects and only reflects the theme of respondent's complete good faith which has been repeatedly reiterated in this proceeding from the Trial Examiner to the Supreme Court.

First, the Trial Examiner, in his conclusions of fact and of law on the question of respondent's good faith, found that the differentials in price which respondent had granted its four jobbers "were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality" (R. 5104)* and that "the granting of the differentials was lawful" (R. 5105)—unless the meeting of competition defense, for legal reasons only, was not available to respondent. This can only mean—and no amount of argumentation by the Commission can result otherwise—that the Trial Examiner found that respondent was in good faith.

---

* The references to the record, as used throughout this statement of objections, are to the printed transcript of record of this case in the Supreme Court, 340 U. S. 231 (1951).

It is thus improper to state, as the Commission now states, that the Trial Examiner, either "deliberately or inadvertently", did not find the lower prices to have been allowed by respondent in good faith. Necessarily the Trial Examiner did so find, for the question before him (which he denominated the sixth question) was whether the differentials in price which respondent accorded to its four jobbers were "made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors, or the services or facilities furnished by competitors" (R. 5099). The Trial Examiner answered this question, as Section X of his report discloses, in the affirmative.

The majority of the Commission at that time must have accepted respondent's good faith as having been established. If the respondent's good faith had not been clearly proved, the Commission would not have been pressed, as it obviously was, to devise the novel theory which made respondent's good faith immaterial. The extent to which the Commission had to go originally in order to circumvent respondent's good faith compels the conclusion that that good faith was not questioned, even though, at the risk of extending this litigation, the Commission saw fit not to make the express finding. Commissioner Mason, correctly dissenting from the now adjudged legal error of the Commission, made express that which the majority of the Commission had necessarily conceded in fact. He wrote:

> "* * * The respondent proved that it had granted a lower price in good faith to meet a competitor's price. The trial examiner who heard the case so held, and I as a Commissioner would so find." (R. 5264.)

187 Regardless of the fact that the Supreme Court appears to have felt that the express finding of good faith should be made by this Commission, both the majority and the minority opinions leave no doubt that the Court unanimously accepted respondent's good faith. Mr. Justice Burton, writing for the majority, said of the Trial Examiner's finding on good faith:

> "In contrast to the factual situation [in the Corn Products and Staley cases], the trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense * * *." 340 U. S. 231, fn. 9.

The further reaction of the majority to the question of respondent's good faith was phrased in the following language:

> "Petitioner presented evidence tending to prove that its tank-car price was made to each 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor." (Emphasis supplied.) 340 U. S. 231, 238.

Mr. Justice Reed, writing for the minority, likewise concluded that the good faith of respondent was not in controversy, stating:

> "This resume of the origin and purpose of the original § 2 of the Clayton Act and the amendments of the Robinson-Patman Act gives a basis for determining the effect of this section in a hearing before the Commission where the charge, as here, that a seller during the same period of time has sold the same commodities to various purchasers at different prices, is admitted, and the defense, the elements of which are likewise admitted, is that the discrimination was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." (Emphasis supplied.) 340 U. S. 231, 262.

Until now, everyone connected with this case, who has met the question of respondent's good faith, has answered that question in respondent's favor. Soley on the basis of every past determination of respondent's good faith in this case, the Commission's present attempt to deny this meeting of competition defense to respondent suggests a strained effort to break away from the previous conclusion of the Commission in favor of respondent on this issue, in order to reach an improper result.

B. As Judged by the Evidence on the Record.

No amount of theorizing, such as that indulged in by the Commission in its present findings, can get away from the fact that the Trial Examiner, the only officer of the Commission who heard the witnesses and who over a period of many months considered the testimony, found that respondent had acted in good faith.

Certainly the evidence of respondent's good faith, as presented to and considered by the Trial Examiner, would at the very least have to offer some minimum toe-hold of factual conflict to justify the Commission's reversal of the Trial Examiner's findings on this point,* particularly when all but one of the Commission's present membership are, in effect, reviewing the Commission's prior decision in this case. But the evidence in this case, as it has been noted through the remarks of the late Mr. Wooden, is uncontroverted and affords no such toe-hold. Respondent originally had seven jobber customers in Detroit, three of whom it lost to competitors—the acid test of the seriousness of competitive offers—through its failure to meet ~~their lower~~ prices. It cannot be denied—and we do not understand that it is denied—that the lower prices, which respondent did make to its four jobber customers, were made most reluctantly and only under the pressure of serious competitive offers, and only to retain these last remaining jobber customers in the face of the otherwise certain loss of their business.

III.

The Futile Effort To Defeat the Good Faith Finding of the Trial Examiner By Legalistic Devices.

The Commission, even in its present modified findings, confesses to the propriety of the Trial Examiner's finding of good faith by stating:

> "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman and continued to refuse the tank-car price to Ned's Auto Supply Company it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case, for all of these concerns, ex-
> 188 cept Ned's Auto Supply Company, had already been recognized as entitled to the tank-car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it within the range where it was likely to be so

---

* See Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U. S. 474 (1951); Folds v. Federal Trade Commission, 187 F. 2d 658 (7th Cir. 1951); Minneapolis-Honeywell Reg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F. 2d 786 (7th Cir. 1951).

recognized by a major oil company at any time . . ."* (Paragraph 14, subparagraph 5.)

The Commission, however, makes an effort in the succeeding subparagraphs of Paragraph 14 to dissipate the effects of the foregoing finding by purely legalistic devices, none of which will bear even superficial scrutiny.

A. Good Faith Is Not Negatived by Alleged Probability of Injury to Competition.

First, it is suggested that respondent "knew or had the means of knowing and should have known" that by selling to its jobber customers at the tank-car price, it "continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers who bought such gasoline at different prices and resold it in competition with one another." However, the suggestion—that good faith cannot exist when there is injury to competition—is a mere reiteration of the Commission's now discredited theory. This suggestion is in the very teeth of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which squarely holds that asserted injury to competition does not rule out the meeting of competition defense. The Supreme Court expressly pointed out in its opinion that "any price reduction to any dealer may always affect competition at that dealer's level as well as at the dealer's resale level, whether or not the reduction to the dealer is discriminatory," 340 U. S. 231, 250. The present renewed attempt of the Commission to characterize a lower price as one made in bad faith because of injury to competition—or conversely, that "the probability of injury to competition" stamps with the label of bad faith the manner of pricing which is said to cause this injury—is but a poorly disguised effort to ignore the entire basis upon which the Supreme Court previously reversed the Commission.

---

* This grudging recognition in the new findings, that respondent had no choice but to give the four jobbers the tank-car price or lose them as customers, confirms the Trial Examiner's conclusion (supra, p. 6) and renders unnecessary any detailed comment on the Commission's analysis of the specific offers. We point out, nevertheless, that the Commission's statement of the evidence with respect to specific offers is incomplete and its characterization of these offers gives something less than a fair picture of their impact upon respondent's dealings with its jobber customers. Apart from the scanty review of the testimony in the new findings, there is substantial, uncontroverted evidence that all during the period involved in this case each of respondent's four jobber customers could have purchased on a tank-car basis from respondent's competitors at a price as low as, or lower than, that accorded it by the respondent (R. 345, 947-8, 1018-9, 1062-3, 1892-3, 5104).

With respect to the particular offers mentioned in the new findings, respondent denies that offers made prior to the date of the Robinson-Patman Act, or offers made subsequent to the filing of the complaint in this case, have no materiality or relevancy and therefore are to be disregarded. Such offers are part of the overall picture to be taken into account by the Commission in judging whether respondent was justified in its belief that it had to offer a lower price in order to retain the particular customers. Similarly, the Commission is not justified in interpolating into the statutory phrase "commodities of like grade and quality" the amorphous concept of "public acceptance." This would be an improper enlargement of the Commission's powers and would amount to an unwarranted usurpation of authority. Waite v. Macy, 246 U. S. 606 (1918).

 Respondent, of course, denies emphatically that it caused any injury to competition, much less "that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition." What slight effect there may have been, if any, on competition at the buyer's level, arising from the ability of jobbers to buy at tank-car prices, is not attributable to respondent, and does not comprise injury to competition. 340 U. S. 231, 250; Adelman, Integration and Anti-trust Policy, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27, 71 (1949). The theory that a jobber, buying gasoline at

B. Good Faith Is Not Negatived by Failure of the Cost Justification Defense.

Equally fallacious is the Commission's attempt to deny respondent's meeting of competition defense by the groundless assertion that respondent knew, or should have known, that it could not cost justify its lower price to its jobber customers. If this be the legal consequence of the failure to cost justify price differentials, then it is utterly futile for one whose prices are challenged by the Commission to couple a meeting of competition defense to one of cost justification. For although a respondent may actually have acted in perfect good faith in meeting competition, the unwarranted imputation of knowledge of inability to cost justify his lower price would, in the Commission's view, nullify his good faith. On the other hand, if the cost justification defense should be accepted by the Commission, the meeting of competition defense would be of no consequence. The availability to a respondent of the meeting of competition defense cannot tank-car prices $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents below the tank-wagon price, is thereby enabled to subsidize a reduced retail price is economically fallacious when it is borne in mind (1) that this differential must first be applied to the defrayment of the jobber's wholesaling costs and (2) that the very small amount, at most, remaining to the jobber after defrayment of costs applicable to his wholesaling operation, is too small to cause any effect on prices at the retail level. See also Adelman, op. cit., p. 63.

---

possibly be dependent on the acceptability of his cost justification defense. This would be statutory distortion with a vengeance.

Furthermore, the only inference from all of the facts is exactly to the contrary of that sought to be drawn by 189 the Commission. Adelman, Integration and Antitrust Policy, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27, 66 (1949). Respondent would not have gone to all the trouble and expense entailed in making its cost justification defense unless it had reason to believe that it would prevail. Disagreement between accountants for the Commission and those of respondent as to the proper application of cost accounting principles, resulting in the ruling out of respondent's cost defense, in no way casts doubt on respondent's belief that its defense should have prevailed. Cf. 340 U. S. 231, 236. The sincere effort made by respondent to prove cost justification would seem to indicate its good faith rather than to negative the existence of such good faith.

C. The False Effort to Characterize the Giving of the Tank-Car Price to the Jobber as the Adoption of an Illegal Pricing System.

The Commission, in Paragraph 14, employs language taken directly from Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746 (1945). It seeks by the use of such language to create the aura of analogy of Staley to the facts of this proceeding, and to convey the impression of respondent's adoption of an illegal pricing system of its competitors.

In the first place, respondent clearly did not follow or adopt any pricing system, but dealt with each of its customers in the light of an individual competitive situation.

In the second place, however, if the giving of a tank-car price to a jobber is to be regarded as adopting a system, it is astounding for the Commission to assert that that system has been an illegal one since passage of the Robinson-Patman Act. The jobber function is clearly not illegal, and integration of wholesale and retail operations by the jobber is a wholly natural and economically-sound development. While the jobber operation long antedated the Robinson-Patman Act, nothing in that Act outlawed the jobber or curtailed his right to sell at both wholesale and retail. A retailer, as he grows and prospers, looks forward to the time when he can purchase his own bulk plant and become a jobber. A wholesaler who commences with the operation of a bulk plant looks forward to owning some, or all, of his own retail stations, and either operating them himself or leasing them to other operators, as economic conditions require or permit. Since it is perfectly lawful for a wholesaler to integrate forward into retailing, and for a retailer to integrate backwards into wholesaling, it is astounding to find the Commission questioning the legitimacy of such integrated operations.

The Robinson-Patman Act did not enact into law the separation of distributive occupations, which is condemned under the Sherman Act as a means of maintaining a rigidly uniform retail price structure. Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553 (1936). Even under the theory of the modified findings and under the precise terms of the modified order in this case, a jobber engaged in both wholesale and retail activities cannot be prevented from buying gasoline at tank-car prices from refiners or distributors who market in his area in tank-car quantities only—and this is a common practice. What the Commission is saying, in effect, is that only those refiners or distributors who sell in tank-car quantities may compete for the business of a jobber who both wholesales and retails, and that others may not meet their competition—but must stand helplessly by and watch their trade be taken away. The sole effect of such a fantastic application of the law is to limit the jobbers' sources of supply, to restrain competition for the jobbers' business, and to maintain an artificial price structure to the detriment of the consumer.

Since jobbers who both wholesale and retail are legitimately in business, and it is perfectly lawful for suppliers "X", "Y" and "Z" to sell them at tank car prices, it is absurd to say that respondent knew or had reason to know that it would injure competition by offering them such a price. Especially is this so where it is inevitable that they would buy at tank-car prices in any event, and the only question is whether they would continue to buy from respondent or shift to another source of supply. What the Commission is doing—whether deliberately or inadvertently—is attempting to reiterate its "arbitrary classification" theory which is now discredited both as a matter of economics[*] and of law.[]

190 Clearly, respondent's reluctant recognition of four of its customers as jobbers, forced upon respondent by competition, does not impugn respondent's good faith.

D. Respondent's Alleged Failure to Pursue a Non-Discriminatory Price Scale.

The Commission, in the new findings, Paragraph 14, makes a desperate effort to negative respondent's good faith meeting of competition in individual instances by stating, without basis in fact, that respondent's lower prices "were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale which were made to meet lower prices of competitors, but represented only the continued application of the pricing standard previously adopted by respondent and followed by it since long before 1936."

Respondent flatly denies that it was engaged in any course of conduct prior to 1936 which had to be changed upon passage of the Robinson-Patman Act. Its conduct in the matters at issue was at all times, according to the record in this case, consistent with the standards of that Act. Its policy of recognizing former retailer customers as jobbers only in individual instances, only when it desired to keep them as customers, only when it was forced to give them the tank-car price in order to keep them as customers, and even then only when they met respondent's own minimum standards for a jobber customer, conforms to the most rigid standards of the Robinson-Patman Act.

---

[*] See Adelman, Integration and Antitrust Policy: 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27, 63 (1949):

> "This is of course a perfect illustration of the "pig iron" fallacy. Standard was selling its retailer customers gasoline plus storage plus delivery. It was selling the jobbers net of these services Unless it charged these two classes of buyers different prices, it would be discriminating against the jobbers. * * *"

[] "Not denying the established industry practice of recognizing such dealers as a distinctive group for operational convenience, the Commission held that petitioner's classification of these four dealers as 'jobbers' was arbitrary because it made 'no requirement that said jobbers should sell only at wholesale.' 41 F. T. C. at 273. We use the term 'jobber' in this opinion merely as one of convenience and identification, because the result here is the same whether these four dealers are wholesalers or retailers." 340 U. S. 231, fn. 4.

IV.

Lawfulness of Price Being Met.

Respondent considers that the question of the lawfulness of the prices which it met has been answered affirmatively and is therefore no longer in issue in this proceeding. The Trial Examiner, in examining the question of respondent's good faith (R. 5099), has concluded, with a now immaterial qualification, that the differentials which respondent granted were lawful (R. 5105). The Supreme Court stated that respondent's evidence tended to prove that its tank-car price was made in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor. 340 U. S. 231, 238.

The Commission has not raised the question of the lawfulness of the competitors' prices which respondent met except insofar as it has sought to insinuate that respondent has adopted an illegal pricing system. This insinuation has been disposed of. Accordingly, respondent maintains not only that the issue of good faith should be resolved in its favor but that the Commission should expressly find that respondent's price reductions were made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor. Respondent specifically requests the making of this finding as called for by the mandate of the Supreme Court.

V.

The Modified Order of the Commission Is Unwarranted and Improper.

The only proper course for the Commission is to find that the differentials in price, which the respondent allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., were made in good faith to meet lawful equally low prices of competitors. The only order which the present record can justify is an order of dismissal, respondent having established its meeting of competition defense. If the order promulgated by the Commission on March 24, 1952, is to be entered notwithstanding the fatal defects pointed out by respondent, it then objects to the form of the order in the following respects:

A. The Order Is Too Broad in Scope.

The complaint in this case concerned itself only with the Commission's charge that respondent had discriminated in price with reference to four of its customers in the Detroit, Michigan, area—and that the effect of such discrimination was to "injure, destroy and prevent competition with each of the four dealers * * * and with their respective customers, in the resale of gasoline" (R. 35).

191 This was the stated and restricted compass of the complaint, the testimony, the evidence, and, though less plainly, of the Commission's order to cease and desist of August 9, 1946.

The Commission now promulgates an order which is completely unrestricted in its geographic application to respondent's business. It does this without the benefit of any evidence, and in excess of the only function which the Commission was to perform on the remand: viz., to make a finding as to whether or not respondent's price reductions were made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor.

The geographically unlimited application of the Commission's order is highly improper in view of the absence of any allegation in the complaint, and any showing in this record, that there is any similarity, either close or remote, between respondent's conduct in the Detroit area and in the other sections or communities where it does business.

Furthermore, even with respect to the Detroit area, the complaint was limited to, and challenged only, respondent's sales of its gasoline at tank-car prices to four named jobbers who bought in tank-car quantities and who resold in whole or in part at retail in competition with retailer customers of respondent. But even narrower than this is the Commission's theory of the case: viz., only in the event any of such jobbers reduces his retail price below the prevailing level are respondent's sales to him at the tank-car price to be unlawful, because only then are they said to create the probability of injury to competition. In this setting, a Commission order may not lawfully be entered which (1) bars every possible form of price differential among all the thousands of respondent's retail customers everywhere, no matter how unrelated the differential may be to the price discrimination declared here to exist, and

(2) eliminates in every such situation the Commission's responsibility of proving that the differential is one which is declared unlawful by Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act.* The Commission on this record and without shouldering its responsibility may not lawfully require respondent to sell its gasoline without any price differential among all its retail customers. Yet this is what the Commission's modified order would compel respondent to do, despite the very limited scope of the complaint, the evidence, the recommended order of the Trial Examiner, and the Commission's own theory of the case.

The Commission is attempting to impose a modified order upon respondent which is beyond its power under the law to impose and which it is not authorized to make in the discharge of its present responsibilities: that is, to make a finding as to whether or not petitioner's price reduction was made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor.

B. The Order Should Be Addressed Only to Respondent.

The complaint in this case was addressed only to respondent. The evidence, again, was directed only to a particular course of conduct of respondent in the Detroit, Michigan area. Yet the order is directed not only to respondent but, as well, to "its officers, representatives, agents and employees," not only in Detroit but elsewhere. This, in face of the fact that none such was either identified or made a party to the proceeding, and in the absence of any evidence or finding as to any part which any individual took in the actions of respondent which are now condemned. The Commission is without authority indiscriminately to include unnamed parties in its order without complaint, evidence, finding, or opportunity to defend. This is true of orders issued under the Federal Trade Commission Act, Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 192 F. 2d 535 (7th Cir. 1951), and is equally true of orders issued under the Clayton Act. The Commission cannot excuse its jurisdictional excess merely on the ground that a court may later exercise an equitable discretion.

---

* Respondent, of course, recognizes that the modified order of the Commission need not expressly include the statutory provisos permitting price differentials which are cost justified or made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor. Respondent understands that these provisos, together with those which state its right to select its own customers and to sell at different prices in response to changing conditions, are necessarily implicit in the Commission's order and are as much a part of such order as if set out in extenso. Federal Trade Commission v. The Ruberoid Co., U. S. Sup. Ct., May 26, 1952. What respondent objects to is the attempt to stamp as illegal all price differences among its retail customers, thus relieving the Commission of its responsibility under the Act to establish whether such price differences fall within the ban of Section 2(a).

192 C. The Order Is Defective by Reason of Lapse of Time.

The evidence in the record of this proceeding concerned market conditions and actions of respondent with reference to four of its customers in the Detroit, Michigan, area during the years 1936 to 1940. Respondent suggests that the Commission, basing its action on a record twelve years old, is misapplying statutory procedures which are intended to be remedial and not punitive, prospective and not retrograde. A record made twelve years ago does not provide any substantial basis on which to predicate injunctive provisions effective in the future.

D. The Commission Is Without Power Under the Mandate to Enlarge Its Order.

The Commission cites no authority which would support the unlimited geographic and factual enlargement of its present modified order. The Commission makes no demonstration that every price differential which respondent may make at any time or any place under any set of circumstances is so reasonably related to the specific action examined in the present record as forever to be interdicted. It cannot factually make such demonstration. Moreover, in the absence of permission from the court, we are aware of no precedent which would authorize the Commission to enlarge its order in a manner unrelated to the mandate, much less enlargements of the excessive and improper nature which the Commission has now promulgated. No doubt the Commission may at any time cancel its order in whole or in part, but respondent submits that the Commission, without taking further evidence, may not utilize the occasion of compliance with the Supreme Court's mandate to make the form of the order more onerous.

Respectfully submitted,

Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
John C. Butler,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
of
Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle Street,
Chicago 2, Illinois,
Attorneys for Respondent.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert L. Green,
Gordon E. Tappan,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 80, Illinois.
Of Counsel.

May 29, 1952.

193 Correspondence Exchanged Between Commission and Respondent on Respondent's Request for Hearing and Extension of Time.

194 Chicago, Illinois
March 14, 1951.

W. T. Kelley, Esq.
General Counsel
Federal Trade Commission
Washington, D. C.

Re: Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Oil Company Docket No. 4389

Dear Sir:

We are advised that the mandate of the Supreme Court in the above case has now been received by the Commission.

The last argument before the Commission in this case took place on April 25, 1946. Three of the present members of the Commission have been appointed since that date, and it would be remarkable if the other two Commissioners had any very distinct recollection of the record and the arguments made thereon some five years ago. In addition, it seems to us that the issue has now been greatly clarified by the Supreme Court.

The Commission, in determining how further to proceed and what finding to make, will be acting judicially. We therefore request, as is our right, that we be heard both on procedure and on substance, and that these matters not be considered, even provisionally, ex parte or in our absence. We believe, of course, with the Court of Appeals that the Trial Examiner's finding of respondent's good faith is incontrovertible.

If desirable, we would be glad to discuss this matter with you and your associates.

Very truly yours,

Hammond E. Chaffetz

HEC:LD

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Washington 25

Office of General Counsel

March 19, 1951

Hammond E. Chaffetz, Esquire,
Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle Street,
Chicago 2, Illinois.

Re: In the Matter of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, F. T. C. Docket No. 4389.

Dear Mr. Chaffetz:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 14, 1951, relative to the above matter; requesting the right to be heard by the Commission in determining how further to proceed and what findings to make, both on procedure and on substance, and that these matters not be considered, even provisionally, ex parte or in your absence.

Your letter has been transmitted to the Commission for consideration of your request and you will be advised by the Commission of its action thereon in due course.

Very truly yours,

W. T. Kelley,
General Counsel.

cc: Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
World Center Building,
16th and K Streets, N. W.,
Washington 6, D. C.

195

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
Washington

Office of the Secretary
and Executive Director

March 20, 1952

Hammond E. Chaffetz, Esq.,
Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle Street,
Chicago 2, Illinois.

In Re: F. T. C. Docket No. 4389,
Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

Dear Mr. Chaffetz:

This is in further reference* to your letter of March 14, 1951, requesting the right to be heard by the Commission in determining how to proceed and what findings to make in this proceeding in response to the mandate of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit filed on February 14, 1951.

Your request has received the Commission's careful consideration. In the event the Commission decides to modify its findings in the case adversely to the respondent, you will be afforded the opportunity of presenting your views with respect to such modification.

By direction of the Commission.

D. C. Daniel,
Secretary.

Copy to: Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
World Center Building,
Sixteenth and K Streets, N. W.,
Washington 6, D. C.

*The Commission's counsel on March 19, 1951, acknowledged receipt of this letter of March 14, 1951; the further reference is the present letter.

May 15, 1952

The Honorable Stephen J. Spingarn
Federal Trade Commission
Washington 25, D. C.

Re: Standard Oil Company (an Indiana Corporation.)

Dear Commissioner Spingarn:

This is to confirm the request made orally to you this morning for additional time in which to file a brief on behalf of the respondent in the above case and for additional time beyond the five days now provided for in which to respond to the brief of the Commission's staff when filed.

The size of the record, the extraordinary importance of the case and the unusual number of novel and important legal questions that are involved make it impossible to conduct the necessary study of the record, legal research, preparation of brief and discussion with the client that would be required in order to assure the presentation of the respondent's position adequately to the Commission in the time presently allotted. Our original request for sixty days extension was made after consultation with counsel for Commission (not Mr. MacIntyre) and was the minimum time in which we thought it would be possible for us to be prepared. We find now that our original request was a modest one indeed. We have worked diligently in an effort to complete our work in the time allotted and we have not yet approached the stage of a first draft of the brief, with less than ten days remaining under the present schedule. If adequate time is not allotted to us, we will have no recourse other than to file a memorandum of our points and take an exception to the denial of our reasonable request for time to prepare.

We believe that our position will be one that will merit the very serious consideration of the Commission and that the Commission will wish to be fully informed before making any final determination in this important matter. Certainly, when the Commission required fifteen months from the date of the Supreme Court's decision in which to determine what its position would be, simple fairness would seem to require that we have a total of only ninety days to develop and present our views.

With respect to time to reply to the Commission's brief when filed, as I stated to you this morning, unless a reasonable time is provided before the oral argument we will have no alternative than to ask for time following the argument to make written reply so as to make certain that we have fully replied on all the legal issues involved. There are several vital procedural and substantive questions as 196 to which we will not know the position of the Commission's staff until we receive their brief. It seems to me here, too, that the Commission would prefer to have our reply to the Commission's brief at the time of the oral argument.

The Commission's consideration of our request will be greatly appreciated. In view of the pressure of time, may I request notification by telephone of the Commission's action?

Yours very truly,

Hammond E. Chaffetz.

cc: Everette MacIntyre, Esquire.
HEC:mme

* * * * *

301 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Commissioners:
James M. Mead, Chairman,
Lowell B. Mason,
John Carson,
Stephen J. Spingarn,
Albert A. Carretta.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS AND CONCLUSION.

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act), as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 (the Robinson-Patman Act), the Federal Trade Commission, on November 29, 1940, issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Standard Oil Company, a corporation, charging said respondent with having violated the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of the said Clayton Act, as amended. After the issuance of said complaint, the filing of the respondent's answer thereto, and the taking of part of the testimony and other evidence in support of the complaint, the Commission, on April 23, 1941, issued and subsequently served upon the respondent an order amending said complaint, which order further provided that the testimony and other 302 evidence theretofore taken be adopted and considered as having been taken in support of the allegations of the complaint, as amended, and that the answer of the respondent to the original complaint be adopted as the respondent's answer to the complaint, as amended. Thereafter, further testimony and other evidence in support of and in opposition to the allegations of said complaint, as amended, were introduced before a hearing examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, and such testimony and other evidence were duly recorded and filed in the office of the Commission. This proceeding then regularly came on for final hearing before the Commission upon the complaint, as amended, the respondent's answer thereto, the testimony and other evidence, the report of the hearing examiner upon the evidence and exceptions thereto, briefs in support of and in opposition to the complaint, as amended, and oral argument of counsel; and the Commission, having duly considered the same, on October 9, 1945, made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom and issued its order to cease and desist (which order to cease and desist was, on August 9, 1946, modified in certain respects).

On October 4, 1946, the respondent filed with the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit its petition for review of the Commission's modified order to cease and desist, and after hearing the cause on briefs and oral argument, said court, on April 29, 1949, issued its decree modifying Paragraph 6 of said order and affirming the order as so modified. The judgment of the Court of Appeals having been reversed by the Supreme Court, said Court of Appeals, on February 14, 1951, issued its decree vacating and setting aside its former judgment and remanding the case to the Commission "to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States filed on January 8, 1951".

Thereafter, the Commission, having further considered the matter, on March 24, 1952, issued, and on March 26, 1952, served upon the respondent, an order granting the respondent leave to present to the Commission any objections it might have to the issuance of a document 303 attached thereto as the Commission's modified findings as to the facts and conclusion in compliance with the aforesaid decree; and the Commission, having received and considered the respondent's objections and briefs on behalf of Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc., National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., Empire State Petroleum Association, Inc., Great American Oil Company, and counsel in support of the complaint, and having heard and considered oral argument of counsel in opposition to and in support of the proposed modified findings as to the facts and conclusion, now makes this its modified findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom in this proceeding:

Findings As to the Facts.

Paragraph One: The respondent, Standard Oil Company, is a corporation organized, existing, and doing business under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business located at 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Paragraph Two: The respondent is engaged in the busines of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products among and between the various States of the United States. Respondent sells three brands of gasoline—"Solite with Ethyl", "Red Crown", and "Stanolind". Red Crown is respondent's regular housebrand gasoline and accounts for approximately 90 percent ~~of~~ respondent's sales in the Detroit metropolitan area, while Solite with Ethyl accounts for 7 to 10 percent and Stanolind, 3 or 4 percent. Respondent has several refineries, one of which is located in Whiting, Indiana. Crude oil to supply its refineries is derived from various sources, but principally from the so-called Mid-Continent fields in Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and Wyoming. Respondent sells its products throughout a territory consisting of 14 States, principally located in the Middle West. This territory is divided into 27 divisions or fields, with a branch office in each field in charge of a manager or superintendent.

One of such divisions or fields is known as the "Detroit Field", which embraces all or part of thirteen counties 304 in southern Michigan, including the cities of Detroit, Lansing, Pontiac, Jackson, and Ann Arbor. The "Detroit Area", as distinguished from the "Detroit Field", includes only the city of Detroit and its suburbs, Hamtramck, Dearborn, and Highland Park, in Wayne County, which is also referred to as the "Detroit metropolitan area".

The respondent has no refinery in the State of Michigan. Gasoline and other petroleum products sold and distributed by the respondent in the Detroit Field are transported from its refinery at Whiting, Indiana, by tankers through the Great Lakes to respondent's marine terminal at River Rouge in the outskirts of Detroit. This marine terminal has a storage capacity of about 1,500,000 barrels of 42 gallons each. During the summer months, deliveries are made from the Whiting refinery every week and sometimes twice a week. In the fall sufficient gasoline is delivered and stored to take care of estimated requirements during the winter months when navigation through the Great Lakes is closed.

During the years from 1936 to and including 1940, respondent supplied from 16.2 percent to 17.4 percent of all the branded and unbranded gasoline sold in the Detroit metropolitain area. The total sales made by respondent in said area during that period amounted to 62,198,750 gallons in 1936, 70,015,200 gallons in 1937, 60,448,200 gallons in 1938, 70,279,818 gallons in 1939, and 74,627,712 gallons in 1940.

During the periods of time herein mentioned respondent operated six bulk plants in the Detroit metropolitan area. Delivery of gasoline to these bulk plants was made from the River Rouge marine terminal by tank car or transport truck. Tank-car delivery by railroad was for the most part discontinued about February 1, 1940. Transportation of gasoline by transport truck was accomplished by transportation companies employed by the respondent. The capacity of a transport truck is approximately the same as a tank car. In some instances the respondent has shipped gasoline and other petroleum products from its refinery at Whiting, Indiana, directly to purchasers thereof located in the Detroit metropolitan area. Respondent maintains, 305 and at all times mentioned herein has maintained, a course of trade in said products in commerce among and between the various States of the United States.

Paragraph Three: Prior to September 10, 1936, respondent operated all retail service stations owned or leased by it in the Detroit metropolitan area, but on that date it discontinued all retail operations and leased or sublet all stations owned or leased by it to independent operators.

In the course and conduct of its business in the Detroit metropolitan area, the respondent, since September 10, 1936, has regularly supplied gasoline to approximately 358 retail service stations. Respondent owned approximately 200 and leased 8 of these stations. The remaining 150 stations which were supplied directly by the respondent were owned or operated by independent operators, with whom the respondent entered into written agreements known as "Dealer's Agreement, Form 461", by which agreements respondent agreed to sell, and the dealers agreed to purchase, all of their requirements of Solite with Ethyl, Standard Red Crown, and Stanolind gasoline for the period of time specified in said agreements. These latter stations were known as contract service stations as distinguished from the leased service stations hereinabove described.

Deliveries of gasoline to the leased and contract service stations in the Detroit metropolitan area were made from respondent's bulk plants by tank trucks owned by respondent and operated by its salaried employees. This method of delivery is known as "tank-wagon" delivery. The price at which respondent sold its gasoline to said leased and contract service stations was its "posted tank-wagon price", which was fixed from time to time by the general office of the respondent in Chicago.

In addition, the respondent also supplied gasoline to four dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area—Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, which were classified by respondent as "jobbers" and which, with the exception of Ned's Auto Supply Company, supplied respondent's gasoline to from 94 to 106 retail service stations. Deliveries to these dealers were generally made 306 by tank car, and after February 1, 1940, by transport truck, direct from respondent's River Rouge terminal. During the periods of time hereinafter described, the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., and Wayne Oil Company sold a substantial portion of the gasoline purchased by them from the respondent direct to the public through retail service stations owned and operated by them. Ned's Auto Supply Company was engaged entirely in the retail sale of gasoline to the public through its own stations.

A third class of customer in the Detroit metropolitan area to whom the respondent supplied gasoline was large commercial users of gasoline, who were usually sold on contracts made by the general office of the respondent in Chicago. The gasoline so purchased was usually delivered either direct from the Whiting refinery or the River Rouge terminal by tank car or transport truck.

Paragraph Four: In the course and conduct of its business since June 19, 1936, the respondent has discriminated in price by selling its gasoline for resale direct to the purchasing public to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., and Wayne Oil Company, and subsequent to March 7, 1938, to Ned's Auto Supply Company, at prices which were substantially lower than the prices charged by respondent to its other retailer-purchasers in the Detroit metropolitan area for gasoline of the same grade and quality. Each of the aforesaid purchasers has, since said date, owned or operated in the Detroit metropolitan area one or more gasoline stations where said respondent's gasoline so purchased has been resold at retail to consumers thereof in competition with other retailers of gasoline purchasing the same from the respondent or from other manufacturers. The respondent sold its largest selling brand, Red Crown gasoline, to said four "jobbers" at its tank-car price, which was 1½ cents per gallon lower than the prices charged by it for the same gasoline to its other retail dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Paragraph Five: In allowing "jobber" classification in the Detroit metropolitan area to the four dealers hereinbefore named, the respondent required only that said dealers purchase substantial quantities of gasoline, own or control bulk plants where gasoline in large 307 quantities could be delivered, and have sufficient financial standing or credit rating to warrant the extension of credit. There was no requirement that said dealers should sell only at wholesale.

The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, although selling the respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public, was nevertheless classified by the respondent as a "jobber" in 1928 or 1929 and since that time has been allowed the tank-car price on gasoline purchased from respondent. It operated from 1 to 5 retail stations from 1936 to 1939, from 5 to 8 stations in 1940 and 1941, and was operating 5 retail service stations at the time this case was submitted for decision. During this time it purchased from the respondent in excess of 5,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually. The percentage of gasoline so purchased which was sold at retail by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company through its retail service stations was 29.4 percent in 1936, 15.4 percent in 1937, 7.3 percent in 1938, 10.1 percent in 1939, and 6.5 percent in 1940. During the period from January 1, 1938, to December 31, 1940, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company sold a million gallons of gasoline annually to Langer and Cohn, retail service station operators, at 1 cent per gallon off tank-wagon price and in addition sold another retail service station operator at ½ cent per gallon off tank-wagon price. For a short period of time Citrin-Kolb Oil Company issued "Special Savings Cards", which entitled the holders to a 2-cents-per-gallon discount on the purchase of gasoline from one of the retail service stations operated by it.

The Wayne Oil Company, although selling the respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public, was nevertheless classified by respondent as a "jobber" in 1935 and since that time it has been allowed the tank-car price on all gasoline purchased from respondent. Prior to September 8, 1939, the Wayne Oil Company operated no retail service stations but subsequent thereto has operated from 2 to 6 stations and was operating 2 stations at the time this case was submitted for decision. During this period its 308 annual purchases of gasoline from respondent ranged from 1,348,348 gallons in 1936, to 2,341,394 gallons in 1940. The percentage of gasoline so purchased which was sold at retail by the Wayne Oil Company through its retail service stations was 7.6 percent in 1939 and 14.2 percent in 1940. There is no evidence that the Wayne Oil Company ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than the posted tank-wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers or that any discount was allowed to purchasers by any retail service station operated by it.

The Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., although selling the respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public, was nevertheless classified by respondent as a "jobber" in 1932 and since that time it has been allowed the tank-car price on all gasoline purchased from respondent. In 1938 the Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., discontinued the operation of retail service stations. Since 1936 its annual purchases of gasoline from the respondent have ranged from 2,225,000 gallons in 1936 to 1,772,911 gallons in 1940. The percentage of gasoline so purchased which was sold at retail by the Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., through retail service stations operated by it was 27.8 percent in 1936, 9.1 percent in 1937, and 0.3 percent in 1938. There is no evidence that this company ever sold gasoline to resellers at a price lower than posted tank-wagon price charged by respondent to its dealers or that any discount was allowed to purchasers by any retail service station operated by it.

Ned's Auto Supply Company was classified by respondent as a "jobber" on March 7, 1938, and since that time it has been allowed the tank-car price on all gasoline purchased from the respondent. Ned's Auto Supply Company does not sell other resellers of gasoline but has at all times sold the gasoline purchased from the respondent to the public through its own service stations. In 1938 Ned's Auto Supply Company operated 5 retail service stations, which was increased to 6 in 1940. In addition, Ned's Auto Supply Company operates a station known as "Char-309 ley's Service Station", which is owned by Ned's Auto Supply Company and operated by an individual on a salary-and-commission basis. At all times since March 7, 1938, it has been the practice of Ned's Auto Supply Company to sell its gasoline below the prevailing retail service-station price or to give premiums and discounts from its posted price.

Paragraph Six: In addition to the discriminations in price hereinabove described, the respondent, in the course and conduct of its business during the period from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938, sold its gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company at .5 cents per gallon less than the price that it was charging for the same gasoline to its other retail dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Since 1918 Ned's Auto Supply Company has been a customer of respondent and until March 7, 1938, received its gasoline from respondent by regular tank-wagon delivery. In 1936 Ned's Auto Supply Company purchased 2,401,600 gallons of gasoline from the respondent, which it resold to the public through its four retail outlets or service stations. On September 1, 1936, respondent allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company a price of .5 cents off regular tank-wagon price, which was allowed on all gasoline purchased from September 1, 1936, until March 7, 1938. When respondent allowed this price differential, it made no change in its form of delivery of gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company, but continued to sell it on the regular tank-wagon basis, making delivery from respondent's bulk plants direct to Ned's Auto Supply Company service stations.

Paragraph Seven: During all of the time covered by these findings Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., sold the respondent's gasoline at both wholesale and retail. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., although selling a substantial portion of respondent's gasoline direct to the consuming public, 310 were nevertheless arbitrarily classified by the respondent as "jobbers" and as such received from the respondent a lower price on gasoline than the respondent charged its other retail customers in the metropolitan

Detroit area who purchased gasoline of like grade and quality direct from the respondent.

Ned's Auto Supply Company, although selling all of its gasoline purchased from the respondent at retail direct to the consuming public, was nevertheless arbitrarily classified by the respondent as a "jobber" and as such received from the respondent a lower price on gasoline than the respondent charged its other retail customers in the metropolitan Detroit area who purchased gasoline of like grade and quality direct from the respondent.

Paragraph Eight: The volume of gasoline sold in the Detroit metropolitan area through retail gasoline stations is more or less constant; and fluctuations that occur are chiefly due to variation in the number of cars in use from year to year. A lower price at one service station than at another is an important factor in the purchasing public's mind, particularly when the difference in price occurs in the major brands of gasoline. Any difference in price between two stations selling the same gasoline or major brands of gasoline is very important in influencing the flow of business.

The margin of profit of the retail service-station operator between the tank-wagon price which he pays and the prevailing retail service-station price on the regular brand of gasoline of major companies is small. This is illustrated by the fact that between November 19, 1939, and March 1, 1941, the retailer's margin between respondent's posted tank-wagon price and prevailing retail selling price on its Red Crown gasoline was only 3.3 cents a gallon in the metropolitan area of Detroit. Consequently, any reduction allowed to a retail service-station operator below the regular tank-wagon price gives such operator a material advantage over other retail operators who pay the full tank-wagon price.

311 In 1936 Ned's Auto Supply Company had four retail stations and its gasoline volume was 2,401,000 gallons. On September 1, 1936, respondent began to sell gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company at .5 cents per gallon below posted tank-wagon price by tank-wagon delivery. In 1937 Ned's Auto Supply Company was openly advertising cut prices, and its volume increased to 4,240,500 gallons.

On March 7, 1938, Ned's Auto Supply Company began to purchase from respondent in tank-car quantities at tank-car prices. Although the total volume of gasoline sold in the Detroit metropolitan area during the year 1938 was 10 percent less than the volume sold in 1937, the volume of gasoline sold by Ned's Auto Supply Company increased from 4,240,500 gallons in 1937 to 4,880,500 gallons in 1938.

In 1937 Ned's Auto Supply Company was selling respondent's Red Crown gasoline to the public at approximately 2 cents per gallon below the prevailing retail service-station price, which continued, with variations, until the latter part of 1939. In 1939 and 1940, when Ned's Auto Supply Company's posted price was approximately the same as the prevailing retail price, it gave various under-cover discounts and premiums. It has from time to time given commercial discounts varying from 1 to 2 cents per gallon off the posted price. The classification of commercial customers varied from time to time, depending upon the competitive situation. During August to November 1939 Ned's Auto Supply Company issued trading stamps of a value of 2 cents for each gallon purchased, which were redeemable in merchandise or in gasoline at Ned's Auto Supply Company's stores. During the time covered by these findings price cutting at Ned's Auto Supply Company's stations was almost continuous, and this company was responsible for starting most of the retail price cutting in major-brand gasoline in Detroit over a period of several years. This practice on the part of Ned's Auto Supply Company has caused substantial damage to other retail service-station operators selling respondent's Red 312 Crown gasoline and also to retail service-station operators selling other brands of gasoline, and the ability of Ned's Auto Supply Company to continue the price-cutting practice was greatly enhanced through the discriminations in price allowed it by the respondent while at the same time limiting other retailer-customers to a margin of profit of approximately 3.3 cents per gallon.

During the years 1936 to 1940 the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company annually sold at retail from 6.5 percent to 29.4 percent of the gasoline purchased from respondent through service stations operated by it. In 1938 or 1939 the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company gave discount cards to purchasers of gasoline at one of the stations operated by it entitling the holder to a discount of 2 cents a gallon on respondent's Red Crown gasoline.

The Commission finds that the price discriminations granted by the respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company, both prior to March 7, 1938, and subsequent thereto, and the price discriminations granted to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., on gasoline sold by them at retail have given a substantial competitive advantage to these favored dealers in their retail operations over other retailers of gasoline, including retailer-customers of the respondent. This competitive advantage is capable of being used, and by Ned's Auto Supply Company and to some extent by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company has been used, to divert large amounts of business from other retailers of gasoline, including customers of the respondent, with resultant injury to them and to their ability to continue in business and successfully compete with said dealers in the retailing of gasoline.

The Commission further finds that the discriminations in price allowed to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company permitted this dealer to sell a million gallons of gasoline annually to one retailer-customer—Langer and Cohn—from January 1, 1938, to December 31, 1940, at a delivered price of one cent per gallon less than posted tank-wagon price and to sell another customer at a discount of one-half cent per gallon.

The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, by passing on in part 313 to Langer and Cohn the benefits of the discriminatory prices allowed by respondent, enabled said Langer and Cohn to sell said gasoline to the consuming public at discounts of as much as two cents per gallon, which not only gave said Langer and Cohn a competitive advantage over other retailers of gasoline, including retailer-customers of the respondent, but also had the effect of diverting business from such retailers to said Langer and Cohn and of substantially lessening competition and injuring, destroying, and preventing competition between said Langer and Cohn and other retailers of gasoline, including retailer-customers of the respondent.

The Commission further finds that the effect of the discriminations in price allowed by the respondent to the four dealers as herein described has been, and may be, substantially to lessen competition and to injure, destroy, and prevent competition with each of said four dealers and with their respective customers in the resale of gasoline.

Paragraph Nine: As a defense to this proceeding the respondent introduced a series of exhibits (Respondent's Exhibits 31-A to Q), with supporting testimony, to show cost justification for the price differentials allowed Ned's

Auto Supply Company for the period from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938.

The Commission finds that the evidence submitted by the respondent fails to establish that the price differential allowed by respondent to Ned's Auto Supply Company of .5 cents per gallon during the period from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938, made only due allowance for differences in respondent's costs of sale and delivery resulting from the differing methods and quantities in which it sold its gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company during the period involved. The following are a few of the features of respondent's cost justification which warrant its complete rejection as a defense in this proceeding:

a. Respondent has attempted to make a comparison between the cost of doing business with Ned's Auto Supply Company and the cost of doing business with all of 314 its other reseller-customers as a group. This fails to take into consideration the fact that the respondent's reseller-customers fall into several groups, such as service stations owned by respondent and leased to operators, stations leased by respondent and sublet to operators, and independently owned stations to which respondent supplied gasoline. The costs of doing business would vary between these various groups. Furthermore, there were independent stations, transactions of which with respondent were comparable to those of Ned's Auto Supply Company, and comparison of the costs of these stations and Ned's Auto Supply Company would necessarily show a different result than that shown through respondent's having combined all kinds and types of its reseller stations.

b. Respondent has attempted to make a comparison between the costs of single-dump and multiple-dump deliveries. This is based upon the assumption that all deliveries made to Ned's Auto Supply Company were by single-dump delivery and all deliveries to respondent's other reseller-customers by multiple-dump delivery. However, the respondent did not make full-load or single-dump deliveries in all cases to Ned's Auto Supply Company during the period involved but, instead, made both single-dump and multiple-dump deliveries. There were also a substantial number of retail service stations located in the Detroit metropolitan area with tank capacity sufficient to take single-load deliveries, and a substantial number of single-load deliveries were made to such stations at respondent's regular tank-wagon price during the period involved.

c. Respondent attempted to segregate certain items of sales expense as not being influenced by Ned's Auto Supply Company and allocated them among all of respondent's other reseller-customers, with no charge being made against Ned's Auto Supply Company; for example, it was contended that when an account, such as Ned's Auto Supply Company, has been established, no further promotional sales work is necessary and should not be charged to such account. Among such items which respondent did not charge to Ned's Auto Supply Company were certain 315 sales promotional services, such as driveway training, which it furnished to reseller-customers but which was not desired by, or furnished to, Ned's Auto Supply Company. In addition to the fact that certain promotional advertising should be charged to Ned's Auto Supply Company, it further appears from the evidence that there are other reseller-customers of the respondent whose accounts have been established and who do not require driveway training.

d. Respondent attempted to segregate certain items of expense of an overhead nature as not being influenced by Ned's Auto Supply Company, on the theory that such expenses would not be appreciably influenced by the acquisition or loss of a single account, such as Ned's Auto Supply Company, and, consequently, that it is proper to charge no part of these expenses to the business of Ned's Auto Supply Company. The reason for not charging any of such items to the business of Ned's Auto Supply Company would apply equally to the business of any other single retail service station.

e. There were certain other items of cost on which it was claimed by respondent that no exact allocation could be made, and, as to such items, the respondent apportioned them among its retail customers, exclusive of Ned's Auto Supply Company, instead of allocating these costs on the basis of gallonage, which would have afforded no cost differential.

f. Respondent has included in its cost items certain items of expense in connection with stations owned or leased by the respondent which were leased or sublet to the station operator. Many of these costs apply directly to the landlord activities of the respondent and are not properly chargeable to, or considered as, costs of sale or delivery.

g. In allocating the sales expense of certain salesmen who called on Ned's Auto Supply Company and other retail service stations, respondent attempted to estimate the time spent at Ned's Auto Supply Company and compare 316 the costs so determined as against all salesmen's costs, including salesmen who did not confine their activities solely to the Detroit metropolitan area. Furthermore, in estimating the time of the particular salesman who called on Ned's Auto Supply Company, no consideration was given to the time which such salesman spent in calling on service stations which were not customers of the respondent.

h. The respondent allocated advertising expense in such a manner as to show an alleged savings of .213 cents per gallon, or better than 46 percent of the price differential. In doing this, the respondent allocated the items of point-of-sale advertising which were supplied to Ned's Auto Supply Company, such as service signs, globes, banners, games, and displays, by charging the cost of some directly and assigning others on the basis of outlets and arrived at the cost per gallon of these particular items by relating it to gallonage sold by Ned's Auto Supply Company. All other advertising costs were allocated to the gallonage of all reseller-customers, exclusive of Ned's Auto Supply Company. The advertising so charged consisted, principally of advertising issued by the respondent for the purpose of creating consumer acceptance and increasing the sale of gasoline at all Standard stations, such as newspaper advertising, printed and direct-mail advertising, motion pictures, and outdoor signs. Such advertising was for the benefit of Ned's Auto Supply Company, as well as all other customers, and should accordingly have been allocated to Ned's Auto Supply Company, as well as to other customers, on a gallonage basis, in which event there would have been no cost differential as to such items.

Paragraph Ten: As a further defense to this proceeding, respondent contended that the differential between the price of 1½ cents per gallon off tank-wagon price charged Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., 317 Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company and the tank-wagon price charged respondent's other retail dealers made only due allowances for differences in respondent's costs of sale and delivery resulting from the differing methods and quantities in which gasoline was sold and delivered to said "jobbers".

Respondent first attempted to show justification of the differential of 1½ cents per gallon between the tank-car and tank-wagon price by introducing evidence as to a survey made in the Kansas-Oklahoma field to show the cost of selling jobbers, the results of which were compared with the cost of sale and delivery of gasoline by tank-wagon in the entire Detroit division. There is no evidence that the costs of sale and delivery by tank car to jobbers in the Kansas-Oklahoma field were the same or were substantially the same as, or have any relation to, the costs of sale and delivery of gasoline by tank car to "jobbers" in the Detroit metropolitan area. In fact, the evidence indicates that the costs of the jobber operations in the Kansas-Oklahoma field were not comparable with the "jobber" operations in the Detroit field. The volume sold was not comparable with the Detroit sales and the total annual sales to jobbers in the Kansas-Oklahoma field were less than the annual sale to one "jobber", Citrin-Kolb Company, in Detroit, and several of these jobbers purchased less gasoline annually than is sold at an average service station in Detroit. The tabulation of jobber expense in the Kansas-Oklahoma field includes no items of consumer acceptance advertising expense charged to such jobber operations, which is substantial in the Detroit metropolitan area. Furthermore, the cost computations for the Kansas-Oklahoma field do not reflect the true conditions or give a factual result since the gallonage sold to two jobbers, Gibson Oil Company and Kramer Oil Company, that handled nearly one-half the gallonage sold in that field, was excluded in computing accounting and credit costs and included in computing supervision and selling costs.

318 In determining the costs of tank-wagon deliveries in the Detroit metropolitan area for the purpose of comparison with jobber costs in Kansas and Oklahoma, respondent used the total marketing costs for the entire Detroit field which were allocated to the reseller channel and leased service stations in its "Comparative Statement of Expense", known as "Form 189". Respondent divided the total marketing costs so allocated by the total reseller gallonage to arrive at the cost per gallon of sale and delivery in tank-wagon deliveries. This Comparative Statement of Expense is an expense record for the Detroit field prepared from time to time in respondent's regular course of business. Said form represents a breakdown of marketing expense between the channels of distribution, which are reseller channel, consumer channel, leased service stations, and other methods. The consumer channel is also known as the "direct-shipment channel" and includes deliveries to large industrial users of gasoline made either direct from the Whiting refinery or the River Rouge terminal. Such shipments usually originate with sales contracts made by the general office of the respondent on a bid basis. Shipments to "jobbers" were included in the consumer or direct-shipment channel in respondent's usual accounting procedure. The respondent did not consider it necessary for its purpose to isolate the cost of the direct-shipment channel, which included sales to "jobbers". Consequently, none of the expense allocations made on Form 189 are charged to either the direct-shipment channel or to the business done with "jobbers", but, instead, such expense is distributed or scattered over the various channels appearing on said form. While this Comparative Statement of Expense may be considered by the respondent as sufficient to reflect company operations, the figures taken therefrom cannot properly reflect the cost of tank-wagon sales as compared with "jobber" sales. There are numerous items of cost which have been allocated to the reseller channel, a substantial portion of which should have 319 been charged to "jobber" gallonage and, if so charged, would have substantially reduced the cost of reseller operation and in turn reduced the differential in cost between tank-wagon and "jobber" costs.

The Commission finds that the attempted comparison between cost of jobber operations in the Kansas-Oklahoma field with cost of sale and delivery to dealers in the Detroit field taken from its Comparative Statement of Expense has no probative value in determining the cost differential between tank-car sales to "jobbers" and tank-wagon sales to dealers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

Paragraph Eleven: In a further effort to show cost justification for the price differential of 1½ cents off tank-wagon price allowed to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, the respondent attempted to segregate the cost items appearing on its Comparative Statement of Expense and to reallocate such costs to the reseller and "jobber" channels. For this purpose respondent prepared a modified form of its regular Comparative Statement of Expense showing costs allocated to "jobbers", as well as to tank-wagon resellers, which was introduced into evidence as Respondent's Exhibit 101, together with explanation as to methods used, which was introduced as Respondent's Exhibits 99 and 100.

After consideration of the modified form of respondent's Comparative Statement of Expense and other exhibits and testimony submitted in connection therewith, the Commission finds that the evidence submitted by the respondent fails to establish that the price differential of 1½ cents per gallon off tank-wagon price allowed by respondent to the above-named dealers made only due allowance for differences in respondent's costs of sale and delivery resulting from differing methods and quantities in which it sold its gasoline to said dealers. The following are a few of the features of respondent's cost justification which warrant its complete rejection as a defense in this proceeding:

320 a. In making this cost study the respondent did not limit its survey to cost differentials which resulted from differing methods or quantities in which gasoline was sold or delivered to the two classes of customers, nor was it limited to determining savings, if any, which accrued by reason of tank-car or transport-truck delivery as compared with tank-wagon delivery, but, instead, the respondent attempted to compare the cost of doing business with the one class as compared with the other by arbitrarily allocating all of respondent's costs of every nature which could be charg... to the expense of doing business in the Detroit field, including Chicago general office costs allocated to that field.

b. Respondent has compared the cost of marketing to the four dealers located in the Detroit metropolitan area, whose business was confined to that area, with the cost of marketing gasoline to all its other dealers in the Detroit field. The Detroit metropolitan area includes the city of Detroit and the suburbs of Dearborn, Hamtramck, and Highland Park. The Detroit field includes the rural section located outside the Detroit metropolitan area, including Lansing, Pontiac, and Ann Arbor, where different methods of delivery are involved since the rural section is supplied by small bulk plants operated by commission agents known as "B" stations as distinguished from the large bulk plants used to serve the Detroit metropolitan area operated by salaried employees and known as "A" stations. No factual cost study or investigation was made to determine the relation of sale and delivery costs in the entire Detroit metropolitan field to those in the restricted Detroit metropolitan area. In fact, there is substantial evidence indicating that respondent's cost of marketing gasoline to service stations in the rural areas of the Detroit field through commission agents is higher than its cost of marketing through its large bulk plants to service stations in the Detroit metropolitan area.

321 c. In allocating cost items to the tank-wagon reseller channel and the "jobber" channel, the respondent charged to the tank-wagon reseller channel a number of items which should not have been charged to that particular channel and failed to charge to the "jobber" channel cost items properly chargeable to that channel.

d. For the purpose of this cost study, respondent has determined the expense on leased service stations which involve landlord operations only and has carried such expense, after deducting income from rentals, into the general tank-wagon delivery expense allocated to the tank-wagon reseller channel. In fact, the landlord expense incident to the operation of respondent's leased service stations was carried separately in respondent's regular accounting procedure, as this expense has no bearing on the cost of marketing gasoline through the regular reseller channel but represented cost of maintenance, taxes, etc., on company-owned or leased service stations less revenue received, without consideration of the sale of gasoline or the expenses incident thereto.

e. It further appears from respondent's cost study that direct-shipment expense has been allocated for the most part on the basis of effort, while the allocation to the tank-wagon reseller channel has been made for the most part on the basis of gallonage except in accounts where allocation was made on the basis of effort in respondent's regular accounting procedure. The use of these two methods of allocation appears to be inconsistent, and the comparative results obtained do not properly reflect the difference in cost of sale and delivery between the tank-wagon and "jobber" channel.

f. While advertising comprises the largest single item of expense, only a small proportion, consisting of point-of-sale advertising, has been allocated between the tank-wagon and "jobber" channel. The remaining advertising expense, commonly known as "consumer advertising", 322 such as newspaper and billboard advertising, was improperly allocated to the tank-wagon channel alone and no part charged to the "jobber" channel. Consumer advertising costs cannot properly be separated between gasoline resold through "jobber"-operated retail stations and gasoline sold through other retail stations except upon the basis of gallonage, which, if used, would afford no cost differential.

Paragraph Twelve: In further defense of the discriminations in price challenged in this proceeding the respondent contends that the lower prices allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company from and after September 1, 1936, and the lower prices allowed Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., from and after June 19, 1936, were all made in good faith to meet equally low or lower prices of competitors within the meaning of subsection (b) of Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended. The respondent argues that this is established (1) by the showing made respecting several offers to these dealers by some of respondent's competitors, which, it contends, demonstrates that the granting of the lower prices to these dealers was necessary to prevent the loss of their business by respondent, and (2) by evidence that during all of the time the lower prices were allowed by respondent the general competitive condition in Detroit was such that any of these dealers could have purchased from some of respondent's competitors gasoline of a grade and quality comparable with respondent's gasoline at prices equally low or lower than the prices charged by respondent. Although finding against the respondent on other grounds, the hearing examiner nevertheless expressed the opinion (not necessary to the decision which he recommended) that the lower prices allowed these four customers by respondent were in fact granted to meet equally low prices of competitors. Whether deliberately or inadvertently, the hearing examiner did not find that these lower prices were allowed "in good faith". In 323 any event, for reasons hereinafter stated, the Commission is convinced that these lower prices were not made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the amended Clayton Act.

Paragraph Thirteen: As hereinabove indicated, the respondent's method of pricing its gasoline in the Detroit metropolitan area is to sell to its costumers generally at what is designated in the oil industry as the "tank-wagon price" and to sell to a much more limited number of purchasers at a "tank-car price", the latter being 1½ cents per gallon lower than the former (on the respondent's Red Crown gasoline). The "tank-car price" is also frequently referred to as the "jobber" price, although the granting of such price is not based upon any consideration of the method of resale by the purchaser. The respondent's standard for granting the tank-car price is that a purchaser make annual purchases of from one to two million gallons of gasoline, have storage facilities sufficient to accept delivery of a tank-car quantity of gasoline at one time, and have a credit rating satisfactory to assure payment for the gasoline purchased in the larger quantities.

The facts with respect to offers made by respondent's competitors to these four customers appear in detail in the record. In brief, these facts are as follows:

Ned's Auto Supply Company.

The lower prices granted Ned's Auto Supply Company were ½ cent less than the tank-wagon price from September 1, 1936, to March 7, 1938, and 1½ cents less than the tank-wagon price from and after March 7, 1938, this purchaser having acquired tank-car storage facilities on or about March 1, 1938. The offers made to this customer were from the Argo Oil Company, the Texas Company, Shell Oil Company, and Red Indian Oil Company.

In 1930 a vice-president of Argo Oil Company offered to sell Ned's Auto Supply Company its requirements of gasoline by tank-wagon delivery at a price 1 cent per gallon less than the tank-wagon price then paid by 324 Ned's for respondent's gasoline. The brand of gasoline offered by Argo Oil Company was "Dixie" gasoline, not a major brand. The offer was declined and the matter ended.

In 1933 Charles H. Gershenson, President, Ned's Auto Supply Company, went to Akron, Ohio, and discussed with a Mr. Dodge of the Texas Company the possibility of Ned's

Auto Supply Company buying gasoline from that company at the price at which that company then sold its gasoline to Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, which purportedly was 4 cents per gallon less than the tank-wagon price on regular gasoline and 4½ or 5 cents per gallon less than the tank-wagon price on premium or Ethyl gasoline. There is no evidence that the Texas Company or any of its representatives ever agreed to the proposal made by Gershenson or of any further discussions of the matter subsequent to 1933.

In 1933 or 1934 a representative of Shell Oil Company informed Gershenson that it was seeking a single "jobber" in Detroit and that if Ned's Auto Supply Company would arrange to handle, tank-car deliveries Shell Oil Company would sell gasoline to it at about 2 cents per gallon less than the prevailing tank-wagon price. Ned's Auto Supply Company did not accept the offer, and Shell Oil Company selected another dealer in Detroit.

Between 1930 and March 7, 1938, Red Indian Oil Company made repeated offers to sell gasoline to Ned's Auto Supply Company at prices varying from 1 cent to 1½ cents less than respondent's prices to that customer. In 1930 Red Indian Oil Company was selling Phillips 66 gasoline, which it offered to deliver to Ned's stations at 1 cent per gallon less than respondent's price or to sell to Ned's at 1½ cents less than respondent's price if Ned's took delivery at Red Indian's bulk plant. In 1934 or 1935 Red Indian Oil Company ceased selling Phillips 66 gasoline, and since that time has sold Fleet Wing gasoline, which it offered to Ned's at the prevailing tank-car price. Fleet Wing gasoline is not a major brand gasoline and did not have public acceptance comparable to that enjoyed by respondent's Red Crown gasoline.

325 As each of the above negotiations occurred Ned's Auto Supply Company notified the respondent of it, and on August 27, 1936, Ned's advised respondent by letter that a competitive major oil company had offered it a gasoline contract carrying a substantially larger margin of profit than it was able to realize under its arrangement with respondent and that it was the present intention of Ned's to accept that offer. Mr. Gershenson testified that the offer he had in mind was that made by the Red Indian Oil Company on Fleet Wing gasoline. After further negotiation between respondent and Ned's Auto Supply Company, a reduction of one-half cent per gallon off the tank-wagon price ~~was allowed Ned's, with delivery~~ as theretofore by tank wagon. This lower price to Ned's was made effective September 1, 1936, and continued to March 7, 1938, when Ned's was allowed the tank-car price of 1½ cents per gallon less than the tank-wagon price.

Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was first granted the tank-car price by respondent in 1928 or 1929 at a time when that company was engaged exclusively in the retail sale of gasoline through its own filling stations, and this price of 1½ cents less than the tank-wagon price has been continued by respondent to the present time.

Beginning about 1930 Citrin-Kolb received offers from three different suppliers to furnish gasoline at net prices lower than the tank-car prices it was paying respondent. Hickok Oil Company of Toledo, Ohio, proposed an arrangement under which Citrin-Kolb, then a partnership, would incorporate and assign to Hickok 51 per cent of the common stock of the new corporation. This offer related to a brand of gasoline known as Hi-Speed gasoline. Shell Oil Company made a joint offer to Citrin-Kolb and another dealer, Middleton Oil Company, involving a brand of gasoline not then sold in Detroit and known as Silver Flash gasoline. Gulf Refining Company offered its gasoline to Citrin-Kolb at the same price as respondent was then selling it, but in addition offered to waive any requirement that Citrin-Kolb supply its own bulk storage and agreed to allow Citrin-Kolb to take its requirements from Gulf's bulk storage plant, and in addition offered to furnish filling station pumps and other service station equipment without cost to Citrin-Kolb.

326 In August 1936 Citrin-Kolb Oil Company worked out a tentative arrangement with the Texas Company for a five-year contract under which Citrin-Kolb was to be allowed 2 cents per gallon off the tank-wagon price and certain other advantages. This proposed agreement was exhibited to respondent's Detroit manager, Mr. Raupaugh, presumably to afford respondent an opportunity to meet its terms, but this the respondent refused to do and the contract was never put into effect.

In 1939 a representative of Argo Oil Company, a gasoline jobber in the Detroit area, offered Citrin-Kolb Oil Company gasoline (either Marathon or Linco gasoline, the witness was not certain which) at 2 cents a gallon less than the prevailing tank-wagon price. Although this offer was mentioned to respondent's Detroit sales manager, apparently it was never seriously considered by Citrin-Kolb.

In December 1940 Citrin-Kolb was informed by a representative of Aurora Gasoline Company, a Detroit company, that its refinery was to be enlarged and that it would be in a position to furnish Citrin-Kolb with gasoline at 2 cents a gallon less than the prevailing tank-wagon price. Citrin-Kolb informed respondent's Detroit manager, who declined to meet the offer, and nothing further was done. 8

Wayne Oil Company.

In 1935 respondent granted Wayne Oil Company the tank-car price on gasoline, and since that time has continued to sell to it at such price. There was some evidence that the Aurora Gasoline Company solicited the business of Wayne Oil Company, but there is no showing of any definite offers made at prices as low as or lower than the price allowed Wayne by respondent until after the complaint in this proceeding was issued.

In December 1940 a representative of Aurora Gasoline Company discussed with Wayne a proposal similar to that made to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and there is also testimony relating to a tentative proposal made in December 1940 by National Refining Company of Cleveland to Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., jointly, upon a gasoline known as White Rose gasoline, which was not then sold in Detroit.

327

Stikeman Oil Company, Inc.

Respondent granted the tank-car price on gasoline to Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., in 1932, and has subsequently sold to it at that price. There is no evidence of any offers made to Stikeman by any of respondent's competitors at any time prior to the issuance of complaint in this proceeding.

Paragraph Fourteen: This proceeding was brought under Section 2 of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, approved June 19, 1936. Proof of discriminations in price by the respondent prior to June 19, 1936, could not be used to establish the violations of law alleged to have occurred. Except for the limited purposes hereafter considered, offers received by the four customers of respondent as heretofore recited, prior to June 19, 1936, and which were not continuing offers, are not relevant to show that the specific discriminations in price made by respondent subsequent to June 19, 1936, were made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. This leaves for immediate consideration the continuing offer of the Red Indian Oil Company to Ned's Auto Supply Company and the two offers made to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. The offer by Red Indian Oil Company was on Fleet Wing gasoline which, as has been previously found, was not a major brand of gasoline. In the trade sense, it was an off brand and generally sold at prices lower than major brands of gasoline.

There was no evidence as to whether or not Fleet Wing gasoline was of comparable grade or quality with respondent's gasoline. Regardless of this, in the retail distribution of gasoline public acceptance rather than chemical analysis of the product is the important competitive factor. Certain widely distributed and well advertised brands of gasoline have come to be known as major brands, and other brands are known as off brands. In the Detroit metropolitan area, as elsewhere, off-brand or local-brand gasoline sells at lower prices than major brands, and distributors of off-brand gasoline find it necessary to undersell major brands in order to secure some share of the market.

A dealer's purpose in purchasing gasoline is to resell it to his customers, and it is necessary, therefore, for him 328 to have a product his customers are willing to buy. The dealer's overall success or failure may be governed largely by the extent to which his merchandise is acceptable to the public, and in the case of gasoline public acceptance is determined in large measure by factors other than actual grade and quality. A dealer cannot readily shift from one brand of gasoline to another without running the risk of losing many of his customers whom he may or may not be able to replace. Respondent has at all times been familiar with these competitive factors in the distribution of gasoline and could not have regarded the offer of Red Indian Oil Company to sell its Fleet Wing gasoline at a 1½ cents per gallon lower price as a serious competitive threat.

The offer of the Texas Company to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in August 1936, and the offer of Argo Oil Company in 1939, could not have been relevant to the lower price respondent originally granted to Citrin-Kolb, for that lower price was first allowed in 1928 or 1929 and has continued since that time. Presumably, these offers were intended to show that continuance of the lower price to Citrin-Kolb was necessary to prevent respondent's competitors from securing the patronage of that customer.

It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman and continued to refuse the tank-car price to Ned's Auto Supply Company it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case, for all of these concerns, except Ned's Auto Supply Company, had already been recognized as entitled to the tank-car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it within the range where it was likely to be so recognized by a major oil company at any time. Thus, the real question is whether or not the actions of the respondent in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank-car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2(b).

In dealing with this question, the Commission believes that consideration cannot be confined to such specific offers as may have been made by competitors, but also must 329 include the setting and general conditions under which such offers were made. In selecting the customers or prospective customers to whom it will grant the tank-car price on gasoline, the respondent's criterion is now, and for many years has been, that the customer or prospective customer make annual purchases of not less than from one to two million gallons of gasoline, have storage facilities sufficient to accept delivery in tank-car quantities, and have a credit standing assuring payment for large volume purchases. This is the same criterion which for many years has also been applied by the respondent's major competitors, and under it any question of the distributive function performed by the purchaser, that is, whether the purchaser is a retail dealer selling to the public or a wholesaler selling to retail dealers, is wholly immaterial.

Respondent has had long experience in the sale and distribution of gasoline, both through service stations which it owned or leased and operated and through its bulk plants to service station operators. It follows that respondent is thoroughly familiar with the costs of operating retail service stations and bulk plants, with the margins of gross profits available to retail service stations and to operators of bulk plants, and with the competitive results which may be expected when some retailers receive lower prices than competing retailers. At all relevant times, respondent knew or had the means of knowing and should have known that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers who bought such gasoline at different prices and resold it in competition with one another. It also knew or should have known that the price differences which it granted could not be justified on the basis of differences in the cost of manufacture, sale and delivery resulting from differing methods or quantities in which its gasoline was sold or delivered. These circumstances existed at the time the Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act became law, and their existence imposed upon respondent the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute. Respondent neither did this nor made any bona fide attempt so to do.

330 With the exception of the ½ cent per gallon discrimination in favor of Ned's Auto Supply Company preceding the granting of the tank-car discount of 1½ cents per gallon to that purchaser, all of the discriminations in price involved in this proceeding were made pursuant to respondent's established method of pricing. They were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale which were made to meet lower prices of competitors, but represented only the continued application of the pricing standard previously adopted by respondent and followed by it since long before 1936. In the Commission's view, Section 2(b) of the statute does not contemplate justification being made for a method of pricing as exemplified by individual instances of price discrimination made pursuant to such pricing method.

It is also important that the respondent necessarily knew at the time of the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, and at all times thereafter, that its standard for granting tank-car prices on its gasoline was in all substantial respects the same as the standard used by its major competitors. It was evidently then relying, as it is now relying, upon the position that so long as the pricing method in existence prior to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act remains unchanged it can defend its price discriminations on the ground that its lower prices were granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of its competitors. Upon this same theory, respondent's competitors, including the three against whom similar charges of price discriminations are pending, might also defend their similar price differences on the ground of meeting respondent's equally low prices or the equally low prices of other competitors. The Commission does not construe the words "in good faith" in Section 2(b) as permitting that result. In the circumstances shown to exist, the Commission does not believe that the statute provides a means of effectively insulating any particular pricing pattern from attack or that it guarantees that so long as a pricing pattern in effect prior to 1936 remains undisturbed price discriminations made pursuant to that pattern may be lawfully continued.]

331 Paragraph Fifteen: For the reasons stated, the Commission is of the opinion that the respondent has not shown that the discriminatory prices allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., were lower prices granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. The Commission, therefore, finds that the burden imposed upon the respondent by Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, has not been sustained and that the price discriminations referred to in these findings have not been justified.

Conclusion.

The aforesaid discriminations in price by the respondent, as herein found, constituted violations of subsection (a) of Section 2 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act), as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 (the Robinson-Patman Act).

By the Commission.

Jas. M. Mead,
Chairman.

(Seal)

Issued: January 16, 1953.

Attest:
D. C. Daniel,
Secretary.

332 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Commissioners:
James M. Mead, Chairman,
Lowell B. Mason,
John Carson,
Stephen J. Spingarn,
Albert A. Carretta.

* * * (Caption—4389) * *

MODIFIED ORDER TO CEASE AND DESIST.

This proceeding having been heard by the Federal Trade Commission upon the complaint of the Commission, as amended, the respondent's answer thereto, testimony and other evidence in support of the allegations of said complaint, as amended, and in opposition thereto, taken before a hearing examiner of the Commission theretofore duly designated by it, report of the hearing examiner upon the evidence and exceptions filed thereto, briefs in support of and in opposition to the complaint, as amended, and oral argument of counsel, and the Commission, having considered the matter, on October 9, 1945, made its findings as to the facts and its conclusion drawn therefrom and issued its order to cease and desist (which said order to cease and desist was, on August 9, 1946, modified in certain respects).

Said modified order to cease and desist having been further modified by the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in the manner and to the extent set forth in the judgment of said Court issued April 29, 1949, which judgment was subsequently reversed by the United States Supreme Court, and the case having been remanded to the Commission on February 14, 1951, by the Court of Appeals with instructions "to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United 333 States filed on January 8, 1951"; and the Commission having made its modified findings as to the facts and its conclusion that the respondent has violated the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914 (the Clayton Act), as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 (the Robinson-Patman Act), and having afforded the respondent opportunity to show cause why the modified order to cease and desist issued in this proceeding on August 9, 1946, should not be further modified in the manner shown in its order issued March 24, 1952, and having considered the objections to such modification made by the respondent and briefs filed on behalf of Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., Empire State Petroleum Association, Inc., Great American Oil Company, and counsel in support of the complaint, and oral argument of counsel:

It Is Ordered that the respondent, Standard Oil Company (Indiana), a corporation, and its officers, representatives, agents and employes, directly or through any corporate or other device, in connection with the sale or distribution of gasoline in commerce, as "commerce" is defined in the aforesaid Clayton Act, do forthwith cease and desist from discriminating, directly or indirectly, in the price of gasoline of like grade and quality:

1. By selling ~~such~~ gasoline to any retailer thereof at a lower price than to any other retailer who in fact competes with the favored purchaser in the resale of such gasoline to the public ("Retailer" as here used applies to that portion of the business of any purchaser which consists of the retail sale of gasoline to the public).

2. By selling such gasoline to any retailer at a price known by respondent to be higher than the price at which any wholesaler-purchaser is reselling such gasoline to 334 any retailer who competes with such direct retailer-customer of respondent, where respondent is selling to such wholesaler at a price lower than respondent's price to such direct retailer-customer.

For the purpose of comparison, the term "price" as used in this order includes discounts, rebates, allowances and other terms and conditions of sale.

It Is Further Ordered that the respondent shall, within sixty (60) days after service upon it of this order, file with the Commission a report in writing setting forth in detail the manner and form in which it has complied with this order.

By the Commission, Commissioners Mason and Carretta dissenting.

D. C. DANIEL,
Secretary.

Issued: January 16, 1953.

Dissenting opinion of Commissioner Lowell B. Mason and dissenting opinion of Commissioner Albert A. Carretta are attached.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

DISSENTING OPINION OF COMMISSIONER LOWELL B. MASON.

Commissioner Mason joins with Commissioner Carretta in his dissent.

In this connection, reference is made to the following language contained in Commissioner Mason's previous dissent of August 9, 1946, in this same case:

> "* * * the respondent proved by greater weight of the evidence (in fact, I find the testimony uncontroverted). The respondent proved that it had granted a lower price in good faith to meet a competitor's price. The trial examiner who heard the case so held, and I as a Commissioner would so find.
>
> "The Commission concludes as a matter of law that it is unnecessary for it to determine this fact. In my opinion, this is not sound. So far as the Federal Trade Commission is concerned, I believe deliberate and intentional matching of a competitor's lower price is legitimate as long as the proviso on Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act stays on the statute books."[1]
>
> "In the instant case, the respondent, having lost two customers because it would not meet the prices of its competitors, made up its corporate mind to hang on to what business it had left, and in good faith, and what appears to me only ordinary common sense, lowered its price to that of its competitors.

---

[1] The Supreme Court sustained this view. Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, October Term, 1950.

336 "In my opinion, the rejection of this defense by the Commission is fatal to the validity of the order."[2]

Lowell B. Mason,
Commissioner.

337 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Before Federal Trade Commission.

Commissioners:
James M. Mead, Chairman,
Lowell B. Mason,
John Carson,
Stephen J. Spingarn,
Albert A. Carretta.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

DISSENTING OPINION OF COMMISSIONER ALBERT A. CARRETTA.

I. History of Case.

Pursuant to the provisions of an Act of Congress entitled "An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes" approved October 15, 1914 (Clayton Act), as amended by an Act of Congress approved June 19, 1936 (Robinson-Patman Act), the Federal Trade Commission on November 29, 1940 issued and subsequently served its complaint in this proceeding upon the respondent, Standard Oil Company, an Indiana corporation, charging it with violation of the provisions of subsection (a) of Section 2 of the said Clayton Act, as amended. After the issuance of said complaint, the filing of respondent's answer thereto, and the taking of partial testimony and other evidence in support of the complaint, the Commission, on April 23, 1941, issued and subsequently served upon the respondent an order amending said complaint, which order also provided that the 338 testimony and other evidence theretofore taken be adopted and considered as having been taken in support of the allegations of the complaint as amended, and that the answer of the respondent filed to the original complaint be adopted as respondent's answer to the complaint as amended. The complaint, as amended, alleges that the respondent, since June 19, 1936, sold "its gasoline to four Detroit dealers engaged in reselling said gasoline at retail, at prices substantially lower than the prices charged by respondent to its other Detroit retailer purchasers for gasoline of the same grade and quality. Said four dealers are: Citrin-Kolb Oil Company; Stikeman Oil Company, Inc.; Wayne Oil Company; and Ned's Auto Supply Company. Each of said dealers has, since said date, owned or operated in the Detroit area one or more gasoline stations where said gasoline so purchased has been resold (and except as to Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., is now resold) at retail to consumers thereof, in competition with other retailers of gasoline purchasing the same from Respondent or from other manufacturers. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., and Wayne Oil Company, respectively, are also engaged in the business of reselling at wholesale, a large part of the gasoline so purchased by them from respondent, to other gasoline dealers in the Detroit area who are likewise competitively engaged in the resale thereof at retail."

---

[2] The Supreme Court agreed with this interpretation.

The complaint, as amended, further alleges that "the effect of the discrimination in price described in the preceding paragraph hereof has been and may be to injure, destroy and prevent competition with each of the four dealers named in said Paragraph, and with their respective customers, in the resale of gasoline."

Between March 1941 and August 1942, approximately 8,000 pages of testimony and other evidence in support of and in opposition to the allegations of said complaint as amended, were introduced before a trial examiner of the Commission.

In the "Trial Examiner's Report Upon the Evidence" in this case, filed on July 1, 1943, the Trial Examiner posed the following question:

> "Were the differentials in price accorded the four dealers, recognized by respondent as jobbers, made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors, or the services or facilities furnished by competitors?"

339 After reviewing the evidence in the record, the Trial Examiner further stated in his Report:

> "Conclusion of Fact:
>
> The differentials on its branded gasolines respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and the Wayne Company, at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality."

On October 9, 1945, the Commission published both its "Findings as to the Facts and Conclusion" in this matter, as well as its "Order" which requires the respondent to cease and desist from discriminating in the price of gasoline of the same grade and quality among its customers in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

Under dates of January 21, 1946 and February 15, 1946, counsel for the Commission filed motions seeking to modify the order to cease and desist entered herein by the Commission on October 9, 1945. Under date of January 28, 1946, respondent filed a motion seeking a rehearing and reconsideration of the order to cease and desist. Under date of August 9, 1946, the Commission ordered that the motions of counsel for the Commission be granted, and that said order to cease and desist be modified substantially in the manner and to the extent as set out in the supplemental motion of counsel for the Commission dated February 15, 1946. Under date of August 9, 1946, the Commission ordered that the motion of respondent for rehearing and reconsideration of the order to cease and desist be denied. Under date of August 9, 1946, the Commission published its modified order to cease and desist.

On October 4, 1946, respondent filed its petition in the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit seeking a review of the aforementioned modified cease and desist order. In this proceeding, the Commission asked enforcement of its order. In its petition, the respondent contended that the modified cease and desist order should not be enforced because:

340 1. The Commission failed to find and could not have found under the undisputed evidence in this case, that either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination was in commerce.

2. The Commission treated as immaterial the respondent's conclusive showing that the discrimination made in price was in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, which showing the respondent asserted as a complete defense.

3. "Paragraph 6 of the modified order directs Standard at its peril to prevent jobbers to whom it sells gasoline and who are in competition with Standard in the resale thereof from reselling to their retail dealers at prices less than Standard's price to its own retail dealers; requires Standard to police, maintain and regulate such competitor's prices on gasoline, title to which passed to the jobber on delivery by Standard; and subjects Standard retroactively to punishment for contempt should a jobber-competitor fail to maintain such resale prices".

Under date of March 11, 1949, the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit published its opinion which stated, among other things, that:

1. The respondent's operations are in commerce from the refinery to its customers.

2. The showing of the respondent that it made the discriminatory price in good faith to meet competition is not controlling in view of the very substantial evidence that its discrimination was used to affect and lessen competition at the retail level.

(In this connection, the following language is quoted from the opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit:

> "There is substantial evidence in the record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor." 341
>
> * * * * *
>
> "Now as to the contention that the discriminatory prices here complained of were made in good faith to meet a lower price of a competitor. While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held, contrary to the petitioner's contention, that this was not a defense."
>
> * * * * *

> "The showing made here by the petitioner that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competition, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out.")

3. "We would modify Paragraph 6 to read as follows: 'By selling such gasoline to any jobber or wholesaler at a price lower than the price which respondent charges its retailer-customers who in fact compete in the sale and distribution of such gasoline with the retailer-customers of such jobbers or wholesalers, where such jobber or wholesaler, to the knowledge of the respondent or under such circumstances as are reasonably calculated to impute knowledge to the respondent, resells such gasoline or intends to resell the same to any of its said retailer-customers at less than respondent's posted tank-wagon price or directly or indirectly grants to any such retailer-customer any discounts, rebates, allowances, services or facilities having the net effect of a reduction in price to the retailer'."

The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit concluded its opinion by stating:

342 "The order as modified will be enforced, and judgment thereon will be entered accordingly."

Subsequently, respondent filed a petition with the Supreme Court of the United States for a Writ of Certiorari, which was granted on November 7, 1949. Under date of January 8, 1951, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in this case, and remanded the case to that court with instructions to remand it to the Federal Trade Commission to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court.

With respect to the contention of respondent that the subject sales were not in "commerce", the Supreme Court stated in its opinion:

> "Such sales are well within the jurisdictional requirements of the Act."

With respect to the respondent's contention that its price discriminations were made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, the Supreme Court stated:

> "In addition there has been widespread understand> ing that, under the Robinson-Patman Act, it is a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination for the seller to show that its price differential has been made in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor. This understanding is reflected in actions and statements of members and counsel of the Federal Trade Commission. Representatives of the Department of Justice have testified to the effectiveness and value of the defense under the Robinson-Patman Act. We see no reason to depart now from that interpretation."

The opinion of the Supreme Court, therefore, stated that there should be a finding by the Commission as to whether or not petitioner's price reduction was made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor. It was for this purpose that the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit was ordered to remand this case to the Federal Trade Commission. This was done on February 14, 1951.

343 II. Finding Required By the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Supreme Court, in its opinion of January 8, 1951, stated:

> "There Should Be A Finding As To Whether Or Not Petitioner's Price Reduction Was Made In Good Faith To Meet A Lawful Equally Low Price Of A Competitor."

From a reading of the entire opinion, it appears that the one and only purpose for which this case was remanded to the Commission was to direct the Commission to make a finding on the subject matter indicated in the above quotation. All other questions previously presented in this case were disposed of.

The Supreme Court discussed the "good faith defense" contained in Section 2 of the original Clayton Act, and in so doing compared it with the language now contained in Section 2(a) and 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The Court decided that the changes made in this section did not "cut into the actual core of the defense" ("good faith" defense). The Court further stated that such defense "still consists of the provision that wherever a lawful lower price of a competitor tends to deprive a seller of a customer, the seller, to retain that customer, may in good faith meet that lower price. Actual competition, at least in this elemental form, is thus preserved." (Underlining supplied.)

Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, reads as follows:

> "Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the > 344 prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." (Underscoring supplied.)

The question which immediately suggests itself upon reading this language of the statute concerns the intended meaning of the word "lawful", which was apparently added by the Supreme Court to the wording of the statute. Since January 1951, when the decision of the Court herein was published, many articles have been written and many speeches have been made questioning, first, the authority of the Supreme Court to add this words "lawful" to the words of the statute, and second, the meaning which the Court sought to convey by its use. Be that as it may, however, it is not within the province of the Federal Trade Commission to question a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Until such time as the Supreme Court should rule otherwise, or until such time as Congress might legislate upon this subject, the Commission is bound to read the proviso in Section 2(b) as though it contains the words "lawful". To do otherwise would be to flout the decision of the Supreme Court.

Speaking as only one of the Commissioners of the Federal Trade Commission, I can honestly say that I am not in disagreement with the majority of the Court when it ruled that there should be a finding as to whether or not petitioner's price reduction was made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor. The question of importance concerns the extent to which, if any, the respondent is to assume the burden of proving that the competitor's price which was being met was a lawful price.

The Supreme Court could have meant that the respondent must assume the burden of affirmatively proving that the competitor's lower price which was being met was a lawful price. If such were the case, the respondent would have the burden of proving to the satisfaction of the Commission that the lower price of a competitor which was being met was one which would be found by the Commission as being non-violative of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act.

To do this, it would be necessary for the respondent 345 to have access to facts and figures which ordinarily are in the possession of only the competitor. For example, if a competitor's lower price were one based on "cost justification", the respondent would have to have the figures which would justify the granting of such lower price by the competitor to its customer. It is hardly reasonable to assume that any respondent could voluntarily obtain such information from a competitor. This would also mean that the respondent would have to have such information in his possession before he could meet the lower price. Otherwise, he would proceed at his peril. This interpretation is illogical in that it would place upon the party who was required to meet the lower price of his competitor an unreasonable burden. It would bundle him in an economic straight jacket and leave him incapable of exercising that flexibility of movement which is so necessary to compete successfully in the market place. While he was checking to determine whether the price he was required to meet was a lawful price, he would be losing his customer to his competitor.

Further, it must be remembered that it sometimes takes the Federal Trade Commission—even with its extensive investigative and subpoena powers—several years to establish that prices charged by certain respondents are "unlawful" as being in violation of Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. Conversely, it may be stated that the respondents in such cases also spend several years in attempting to establish that their own prices are "lawful" and not in violation of the aforementioned section. How much more difficult, therefore, would it be for a seller to establish that the prices of a competitor are "lawful" prices?

In connection with this matter, it would be well to quote from the "Final Report of the Select Committee on Small Business" of the House of Representatives, dated December 31, 1952.

> "A persistent problem faced by the Federal Trade Commission for many years has been the inordinate amount of time needed to complete its actions". (Report, page 285.)
>
> "A total of 64, about three-fourths of all pending antimonopoly cases, on June 30, 1952, had been active—if active is the word—for more than 3 years.
> 346 The average period as represented by the median was 61 months." (Underscoring added.) (Report, page 287.)

In consideration of the insurmountable problems which would confront a respondent if it were assigned the above-described unreasonable burden of affirmatively proving that the lower price of its competitor which was being met was lawful, it must be concluded that the Supreme Court could not have meant, and in fact, did not mean, that any such burden was to be assumed by the respondent. What, then, could the Court have meant?

The presumption of validity of prices is one which should be given consideration by the Commission in its determinations, and is not one to be lightly dismissed under our system of jurisprudence in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

If a seller knows that a competitor is offering a customer of the seller an unlawful price, can it ever be said that the seller—in meeting such price—is meeting a lawful price? Obviously not. Further, if a seller has reason to believe that the price which a competitor is offering a customer of the seller is an unlawful price, can it ever be said that the seller—in meeting such price—is meeting a lawful price? Here, if the seller ignores the danger signals of which he is cognizant and makes no attempt to dispel his doubts as to the "unlawfulness" of his competitor's price, then the answer must also be in the negative. If the seller meets the lower price of the competitor under such conditions without dispelling the doubts from his mind, he does so at his peril. On the other hand, if the seller does not know, or if the seller does not have reason to believe that the competitor's price to a seller's customer is or may be unlawful, may be, acting as a reasonable prudent man would act under the circumstances, meet such competitor's lower price? Here, I believe the answer is "yes". To require more of the seller would be to deprive him of the right to compete for the business of his customer.

Consequently, when a respondent seeks to avail itself of the defense provided in Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, such respondent must assume the burden of affirmatively proving to the satisfaction of the Commission that his lower price was 347 made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor (note the omission of the word "lawful" herein). As one of the tests in determining whether respondent lowered its price in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor, the Commission must be satisfied that the respondent did not know, or did not have reason to believe, that the competitor's lower price which he was meeting was or might have been unlawful, and that he acted as a reasonable prudent man would have acted under the circumstances.

III. Evidence of Record:

It must be remembered in reading this section that although the present tense is used in many instances, all statements refer to the testimony of witnesses given more than ten years ago.

Before proceeding to a consideration of the evidence relative to the competition which had to be met by the respondent in selling gasoline in the Detroit, Michigan, area, it would be well to cite from the record the uncontroverted testimony concerning the nature of the gasoline market in the City of Detroit and in the State of Michigan during the period covered in the complaint.

Mr. Raupagh, Manager of the Detroit Division of the respondent, testified that Detroit is generally considered to be one of the most, if not the most, highly competitive areas insofar as the gasoline industry is concerned. This applies both to the competition among the suppliers of gasoline to resellers, and to the competition among resellers. Mr. Raupagh gave as some of the reasons for this condition that Detroit, being a large industrial city, has a large potential market for gasoline; it is so located that its distributors have both good water and rail transportation. He stated that some years ago, Detroit was considered as a sort of a dumping ground for gasoline because refineries from the mid-continent and other fields would dump their surplus in the Detroit market because transportation facilities were good—even though normally, such refineries did not enter the Detroit market (R. 3256-57). Mr. Raupagh stated that there has been a surplus of gasoline in the Detroit area during all the time he has been there—which has been since 1930 (R. 3259, R. 3431). The witness further testified that Michigan is a crude oil producing state and that there are approximately 30 refineries therein refining Michigan-produced gasoline, the greater part of 348 which is sold in the Detroit area. Thirty percent of the gasoline consumed in Michigan is produced within the State. There was also a surplus of Michigan gasoline which Michigan refineries were offering to Michigan dealers at 3¢ below the prevailing tank-wagon price (R. 3269).

There are a number of marine terminals located in the Detroit area operated by such companies as Shell, Cities Service, Ohio Oil, Texas, Mid-Continent, Chas. Austin, Inc., Puritan Stations, Inc., Keystone Oil & Refining, Globe Oil & Refining, and Brownley, as well as by respondent. In addition, gasoline is brought into the City of Detroit by pipe line from Toledo. The witness further testified that Detroit is not too far distant from northern Indiana and northern Illinois, where numerous refineries, pipe line terminals and oil depots are located.

Prior to the date on which the complaint herein was issued (November 29, 1940), respondent sold its gasoline to seven jobbers in the Detroit, Michigan, area on a "tank-car" basis. These jobbers were:

Ned's Auto Supply Company
Citrin-Kolb Oil Company
Stikeman Oil Company
Wayne Oil Company

Carnick Oil Company
Middleton Oil Company
Dick Lock.

Mr. Raupagh, Manager of the Detroit Division of the respondent, testified that in 1933 or 1934 respondent lost the Carnick Oil Company account to Gulf Oil Corporation. This latter company permitted Carnick Oil Company to purchase at "tank-car" prices from Gulf Oil's bulk plant, thus enabling Carnick Oil to do away with the necessity of owning and operating a bulk plant (R. 3277-78).

Mr. Raupagh further testified that in 1933 respondent lost the Middleton Oil Company account to Shell Oil Company. At that time, Shell Oil made a lower offer to Middleton Oil, which respondent declined to meet (R. 3279-3282).

In 1933 or the early part of 1934, according to testimony of Mr. Raupagh, respondent lost the Dick Lock account to the Gulf Oil Company. At that time, Dick Lock 349 informed Mr. Raupagh that Gulf Oil had made a better offer to him and that he had accepted such offer (R. 3282-84).

As of the date on which the complaint herein was issued, respondent was selling its gasoline to the remaining four jobbers on a "tank-car" basis. Respondent was also selling its gasoline on a "tank-wagon" basis to retail service stations owned by it, and to retail service stations independently owned, in the Detroit area.

The basic, customary and prevailing standards for qualification as a "jobber" in the gasoline industry are that the applicant for this status must possess a bulk storage plant, must possess a good credit rating, and must have some established business enabling it to purchase from one million to two million gallons per year (R. 40; R. 1485-86).

Because the alleged price discriminations of which the respondent is charged pertain to respondent's dealings with the four jobbers not lost to competitors by the respondent prior to the date on which the complaint herein was issued, it will be necessary to review the record for the history of such dealings.

Ned's Auto Supply Company.

Ned's Auto Supply Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Ned's") began operations in 1918 throug the establishment of a single service station. The secon service station was acquired in 1928, the third in 1933 o 1934, and the fourth in 1935. Between 1936 and 1940 tw other stations were acquired, making a total of six in al plus a service station known as "Charley's", which wa owned by Ned's but which was operated by an individua on a salary and commission basis. During all these year Ned's purchased its requirements from the respondent, an by 1936 was purchasing approximately 2,400,000 gallons o gasoline a year from the respondent at "tank-wagon" prices.

Ned's was classified by the respondent as a "jobber" o March 7, 1938 (approximately two years after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) and since that date ha been purchasing its gasoline requirements from the respondent at "tank-car" prices. Ned's did not sell t 350 other resellers of gasoline, but did at all times sell th gasoline purchased from the respondent to the publi through its above-mentioned service stations.

Charles Gershenson and William Gershenson at the tim this proceeding began, were President and Vice-President respectively, of Ned's Auto Supply Company. At the hearing Charles Gershenson testified that prior to 1936, hi Company had received offers for the sale of gasoline to hi Company from various suppliers. In approximately 193 a representative of the Argo Oil Company inquired whethe Ned's would be interested in buying gasoline at a price 1 a gallon lower than the "tank-wagon" price Ned's was the paying the respondent. The brand name of the gasolin offered was either "Dixie" or "Shell" (R. 3088-89).

Mr. Charles Gershenson also testified that another offe was received at about the same time from the Red India Oil Company, and he stated that he remembered this offe very clearly because such offer had been continued to th date of the hearing in this matter. Red Indian Oil Company was then selling "Phillips 66", a brand of well-advertised gasoline. The representative of Red Indian, a Mr McLean, told Mr. Charles Gershenson that his compan would supply Ned's with gasoline—delivered to Ned's plac—at 1¢ a gallon lower than the "tank-wagon" price pai by Ned's to respondent, or, if the gasoline was picked up by Ned's at the bulk plant of Red Indian Oil Company and hauled by Ned's, Red Indian Oil Company would sell it to Ned's at approximately 1½¢ lower than the "tank-wagon" price paid by Ned's to respondent (R. 3089-91). Another offer was made to Ned's by Red Indian Oil Company in 1936. At that time, Mr. Dworman, President of Red Indian Oil Company, offered to deliver gasoline to Ned's at a price 1½¢ lower than the "tank-wagon" price paid by Ned's to respondent, or at a price 1.7¢ lower than the aforementioned "tank-wagon" price if the gasoline was picked up by Ned's at the bulk plant of Red Indian Oil Company (R. 3415, et seq.).

Mr. Charles Gershenson testified that either in 1933 or 1934, he had attended a "dealer jamboree" conducted by the Shell Oil Company in the Book-Cadillac Hotel in Detroit. There he met a Mr. Jack Read, a representative of Shell Oil Company, who advised him that Shell was looking for a distributor in Detroit, and that if Ned could set itself up to handle "tank-car" deliveries, Shell 351 Oil Company would sell to Ned's on a "tank-car" jobber basis. Subsequently, several meetings were held between Mr. Charles Gershenson and Mr. Read. The Shell Oil Company subsequently took on another company as its Detroit jobber (R. 3100-01).

Mr. Charles Gershenson testified that in May or June of 1933, he went to Akron, Ohio, where, at the Firestone Clubhouse he met a Mr. Dodge, who was then Vice-President and Sales Manager of The Texas Company. Mr. Gershenson informed Mr. Dodge that Ned's was then purchasing its gasoline requirements from respondent on a "tank-wagon" basis but that he wasn't satisfied with the price, and knowing of the contract Firestone Tire and Rubber Company had with The Texas Company, inquired whether Ned's could obtain a similar contract. Mr. Dodge asked whether Ned's had facilities for handling gasoline on a "tank-car" basis. Ned's did not have such facilities at that time. Terms of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company contract were then discussed, and Mr. Charles Gershenson testified that to the best of his recollection, Firestone's differential was 4¢ lower than respondent's "tank-wagon" price on the house brand gasoline, and either 4½¢ or 5¢ a gallon lower than the respondent's "tank-wagon" price on premium gasoline. Mr. Charles Gershenson informed Mr. Dodge that he would communicate with him as soon as Ned's had facilities to avail itself of "tank-car" deliveries. This offer by The Texas Company to Ned's was subsequently communicated to Mr. Raupagh by telephone (R. 3092-96).

Under date of August 27, 1936, a letter was addressed to respondent by William Gershenson in which it was stated:

> "This is to advise you that a competitive major oil company recently submitted to us a gasoline contract carrying a substantially larger margin of profit than we now enjoy from your company.
>
> "It is our present intention to act upon this offer and accept same."

(Attention is invited to the fact that the above letter was addressed to the respondent subsequent to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act.)

Relative to this letter, Mr. Charles Gershenson testified that the offer of The Texas Company was in the nature of a continuing offer, and that it was the offer referred to 352 in the above-quoted letter. The record indicates that although the letter was signed by William Gershenson, it was actually dictated by the witness, Charles Gershenson (R. 3054). As a result of this communication, and subsequent meetings between respondent and Ned's, in approximately September 1936 the respondent began selling gasoline to Ned's at a price ½¢ below respondent's prevailing "tank-wagon" price (R. 3415-16). This arrangement continued until some time in March, 1938, when, as a result of a letter addressed to the respondent by Ned's under date of February 14, 1938 (Respondent's Exhibit No. 46), respondent began selling to Ned's on a "tank-car" basis at 1½¢ lower than respondent's prevailing "tank-wagon" price. At this time, Ned's had acquired bulk plant facilities, enabling it to purchase in larger quantities and to store such gasoline in its own facilities. Prior to Ned's having received the "tank-car" price, Charles Gershenson testified that he had had a number of conversations with Mr. Raupagh subsequent to the writing of the letter referred to as respondent's exhibit No. 46. At such meetings he mentioned to Raupagh the fact that his company could obtain gasoline from Shell, Red Indian or Texas at a lower price, and that this letter, respondent's exhibit No. 46, was in the nature of an ultimatum. Mr. Raupagh was advised that Ned's would take advantage of one of these other three offers if respondent did not start selling Ned's on a "tank-car" basis (R. 3113).

Mr. Raupagh, Detroit Division Manager of respondent company, also testified at some length relative to negotiations between respondent and Ned's Auto Supply Company. Mr. Raupagh testified that in 1936 the relationship between Ned's and respondent was so delicate as to raise a doubt as to whether respondent could retain Ned's business. In that year Charles and William Gershenson suggested to him that they go to Chicago to talk to respondent's officials. Mr. Raupagh made arrangements for this trip, and testified that the meeting in Chicago lasted several days (R. 3410). Mr. Raupagh further testified that at this Chicago conference the Gershensons advised respondent's officials that unless respondent agreed to sell to Ned's at a price lower than the prevailing "tank-wagon" price, Ned's would discontinue doing business with respondent. The Gershensons stated to respondent's officials that they no longer could afford to pay the prevailing price in view of offers Ned's had received from other suppliers. At 353 that time Ned's argued very strongly in favor of being placed on a "tank-car" basis (R. 3411). Mr. Raupagh testified that as a result of these Chicago meetings, he came to the conclusion that respondent would lose Ned's as a customer unless some price reduction was made (R. 3412-14), and that he was specifically told so by the Gershensons (R. 3414). Mr. Raupagh stated that some time later he informed Ned's of respondent's willingness to sell gasoline to Ned's at a price ½¢ lower than the prevailing "tank-wagon" price. There were extensive discussions with respect to this offer of respondent, and although Ned's was not completely satisfied, Ned's decided to accept it for the time being (R. 3415). This testimony of Mr. Raupagh corroborated the testimony of Mr. Charles Gershenson.

Continuing his testimony, Mr. Raupagh testified that some time during the early part of 1938, respondent received a letter from Ned's containing a demand that they be put on a "tank-car" price basis. This is in evidence as Respondent's Exhibit 46 (R. 3419). At meetings held between Ned's and the respondent, Ned's referred to offers made to it by other suppliers of gasoline (R. 3114, 3420, 3425).

Pursuing this line of questioning, Mr. Raupagh was asked by counsel for respondent to relate as many instances as he could where some offer was referred to him by Ned's as having been made to Ned's by other suppliers of gasoline. In this connection Mr. Raupagh testified in detail concerning the circumstances surrounding the offer received by Ned's from The Texas Company. Mr. Raupagh also testified that he had known of the offer made to Ned's by Red Indian Oil Company (R. 3422-25). Continuing, Mr. Raupagh stated that Ned's had informed him of an offer received by Ned's from the Gulf Refining Company in 1940 (quite some time after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) through their manager, a Mr. Crawford. At that time, Gulf offered to sell Ned's the regular quality of gasoline at the same price being paid by Ned's to respondent. Respondent introduced in evidence Exhibit 48, which was a letter dated December 23, 1940, addressed to the respondent by Charles Gershenson, confirming the aforementioned offer made to Ned's by Gulf Refining Company (R. 3425-27).

Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was organized in 1923 as a partnership comprising Jacob A. Citrin, Nathan Kolb and Barney Citrin. At that time they were buying "Lin-354 coln" gasoline. Some time prior to 1926 they began buying gasoline from respondent. Between 1926 and 1928, they acquired a bulk storage plant. In 1929 respondent granted "jobber" classification to this company, and since that time has been selling to it on a "tank-car" basis.

Citrin-Kolb operated from one to five retail stations from 1936 to 1939; from five to eight stations in 1940-1941, and at the time this case was submitted to the Commission for decision, it was operating five retail service stations. During the latter period, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company purchased approximately 5,000,000 gallons of gasoline per year from respondent. Part of the gasoline so purchased was resold at its own retail stations, and part of it was sold to other distributors.

Jacob A. Citrin testified at the hearing that when his company was accorded "jobber" status by respondent in 1929 and purchased gasoline at "tank-car" prices, other jobbers at that time were paying less for gasoline from other suppliers. Notwithstanding this, the company continued to purchase gasoline from respondent (R. 2085-86). Mr. Citrin further testified that in 1930 Hickok Oil Company had offered to sell gasoline to his company at a price which would have netted Citrin-Kolb Oil Company 1¢ more than his company was netting on their purchases of gasoline from respondent. Mr. Citrin testified that under the terms of this offer, his company would have had to incorporate and, among other things, assign to the Hickok Oil Company 51% of the corporate stock (R. 2088-89).

Mr. Citrin further testified that in the early part of 1936, an offer was received by his company from a Mr. Chandler, of Gulf Refining Company, under the terms of which Citrin-Kolb Oil Company would not be required to buy and store large quantities of gasoline because they could use Gulf's storage facilities. This would not necessitate as much of an investment for Citrin-Kolb Company, and would eliminate shrinkage (R. 2118-20). The price offered by Gulf Refining Company was comparable to the price Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was getting from respondent, with the exception that Gulf Refining Company would furnish pumps, paint for oil stations, and equipment. Mr. Citrin testified that this offer of Gulf Refining Company was communicated to Mr. Raupagh, who refused to meet it (R. 2142-44). Mr. Citrin also testified that in August 355 1936 (subsequent to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act), an offer was received by his company from The Texas Company (R. 2126). This offer would have permitted his company to purchase gasoline from The Texas Company at a price approximately ½¢ less per gallon than respondent was charging his company. However, The Texas Company would also furnish advertising, paint, and globes. This offer was communicated by Mr. Citrin to Mr. Raupagh, but Mr. Raupagh advised him that respondent could not meet it (R. 2126-41).

Mr. Citrin testified that in 1939 (subsequent to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act), he received an offer from the Argo Oil Corporation, dealing in "Marathon" gasoline. This offer came from a Mr. Roy Fisher, who offered to sell this gasoline at a price ½¢ lower than Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was then paying respondent (R. 2145-56). This offer was communicated by Mr. Citrin to Mr. Love, Sales Manager of respondent's Detroit Division, who in turn advised Mr. Raupagh.

Mr. Citrin testified that on December 10, 1940 (more than four years after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act), he received an offer from a Mr. McCready of the Aurora Oil Company (R. 2163-64). This offer was ½¢ lower than the price Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was paying respondent (R. 2172). The record indicates that Mr. Raupagh, who was Detroit Division Manager of respondent, testified that the gasoline offered by Aurora Oil Company to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was better gasoline than was being supplied by respondent to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company (R. 3447). This offer of Aurora Gasoline Company was communicated to Mr. Raupagh by Mr. Citrin, who advised Mr. Raupagh that the partners of his company had decided to accept such offer unless respondent agreed to meet it (R. 2174-75). Mr. Raupagh advised Mr. Citrin that he could not do anything about it (R. 2176), and as of the date of the hearings held in this matter, the offer of Aurora Gasoline Company was still being considered by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company (R. 2177).

With regard to the negotiations between Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the respondent, Mr. Raupagh later was called as a witness by respondent and corroborated all of the testimony given by Mr. Citrin with regard to negotiations between Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the respondent, as well as in connection with offers received by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company from other suppliers of gasoline, of which Mr. Raupagh had knowledge.

356 Stikeman Oil Company.

Stikeman Oil Company (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "Stikeman") was organized in 1931. It acquired bulk storage facilities and was recognized by respondent as a "jobber" in 1932. In 1935 the company decided to discontinue retail operations and did completely withdraw from that market on February 15, 1938. Since this later date, it has purchased approximately 2,000,000 gallons annually of respondent's branded gasoline, all of which it has sold at wholesale.

Mr. Raupagh, the Detroit Division Manager of respondent, testified that some time prior to 1936 respondent lost this account to the White Star Refining Company (which is now Socony-Vacuum Oil Company). Mr. Raupagh further testified that the reason for losing this account was that Stikeman was offered a better price by White Star Refining Company than the price offered by respondent. He did not recall how much lower the White Star Refining Company price was, but stated that he believed it to have been from ½¢ to 1¢ per gallon lower than respondent's price (R. 3452). The record is not clear as to the date on which Stikeman Oil Company again began purchasing gasoline from respondent. However, Mr. Raupagh testified that subsequent to 1936, he learned that Phillips Petroleum Company was attempting to sell "Phillips 66" gasoline to Stikeman Oil Company. The Phillips Petroleum Company offer to Stikeman was along the lines of a contract offer, that is, Phillips desired to tie up the Stikeman Oil Company account for a number of years. Mr. Stikeman discussed this offer with Mr. Raupagh, who testified that the Phillips Petroleum Company offer would have allowed Stikeman a larger margin of profit than was possible under the price being paid to respondent (R. 3452).

Mr. Raupagh also testified that the next offer of which he had knowledge as having been made to Stikeman was made in December 1940, when the National Refining Company made a joint offer to sell gasoline to Stikeman Oil Company and to the Wayne Oil Company on a contract basis, by the terms of which each company would realize a greater margin of profit than would be possible under its purchases from respondent (R. 1998 and R. 3450). The testimony of Mr. Raupagh with respect to the offer from National Refining Company is corroborated by Mr. 357 Ledbetter, President of Wayne Oil Company, who was present in the office of the Stikeman Oil Company at the time the offer was made by Mr. Rickley, who represented the National Refining Company, to both Stikeman Oil Company and to Wayne Oil Company (R. 1888-89).

Wayne Oil Company.

The Wayne Oil Company is a family corporation which, in 1931, began operating a retail service station, buying its requirements therefor from the respondent at "tank-wagon" prices. In the same year, it acquired two additional service stations. In 1933 it leased its stations to the then operators, who continued to purchase their requirements from respondent.

By July 1935, Wayne Oil Company was operating twelve service stations, and its requirements increased to approximately one million gallons of gasoline per year. Prior to 1935, the Wayne Oil Company acquired bulk storage facilities. In 1935 the Wayne Oil Company began selling at wholesale, and also supplied gasoline, which it purchased from respondent, to the lessees of its service stations. Since 1935, when this company was recognized as a jobber by respondent, it has been purchasing from the respondent its gasoline requirements on a "tank-car" basis.

From August 1935 to September 1939, the Wayne Oil Company operated no retail service stations, but subsequent to the latter date, this company took over and operated from two to six of its service stations, and was operating two of such stations at the time this case was submitted to the Commission for decision. During this period, the annual purchases of gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company from respondent ranged from approximately 1,350,000 gallons in 1936 to approximately 2,240,000 gallons in 1940.

Mr. Ledbetter, President of Wayne Oil Company, testified as a witness in this proceeding. He stated that for three or four years prior to 1940, the Aurora Gasoline Company had, on different occasions, solicited his gasoline business (R. 1908). The Aurora Gasoline Company is a local Detroit Company, operating refineries at Detroit and at Elsie, Michigan (R. 1886). Although a local Detroit Company, in 1940 Aurora Gasoline Company had bulk 358 storage facilities capable of storing from forty to fifty million gallons of gasoline (R. 3450). Mr. Ledbetter further testified that on December 10, 1940 (12 days after the complaint herein was issued and more than four years after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act), Wayne Oil Company received another offer from the Aurora Gasoline Company to supply his company with 80-octane gasoline at a price ½¢ per gallon below the price which his company was paying respondent for "Red Crown" gasoline (R. 1878-84). Relative to the quality of the gasoline being offered by the Aurora Gasoline Company, Mr. Ledbetter testified that such gasoline is recognized as being comparable, if not superior, to respondent's "Red Crown" gasoline (R. 1883). This latter offer was communicated by letter from Wayne Oil Company to respondent, which fact was confirmed by Mr. Raupagh when he testified concerning this same matter (R. 1885, R. 3450).

Continuing his testimony, Mr. Ledbetter testified that on December 13, 1940, his company received an offer from the National Refining Company, which company operates in a large part of the United States and in Canada (R. 1888-90). He stated that for several months prior thereto, the National Refining Company had been attempting to supply his company with its gasoline requirements (R. 1910). In Mr. Ledbetter's opinion, the National Refining Company furnishes a considerable quantity of the total gasoline sold in the Detroit area (R. 1891). He stated that under the terms of this offer, which was made jointly to Wayne Oil Company and to the Stikeman Oil Company, the National Refining Company would furnish them with "White Rose" gasoline, which is represented as being of better quality than respondent's "Red Crown" gasoline at a price which would net each company a greater margin of profit than each would realize under its purchases from the respondent (R. 1892, R. 1905, R. 1907, R. 1998).

During Mr. Raupagh's testimony, he stated that the first conversation he had had with Mr. Ledbetter relative to offers from competing gasoline companies was in 1935, prior to the time Wayne Oil Company began purchasing gasoline on a "tank-car" price basis. At that time, one of Wayne's service stations was being supplied by the Highland Oil Corporation at a price which was 1¢ per gallon lower than the prevailing "tank-wagon" price. Wayne's other several stations were supplied by respondent, by Sun Oil Company, and by Gulf Refining Company at prevailing "tank-wagon" prices (R. 1914). Mr. Raupagh also 359 testified that no other definite offers from competing gasoline companies were reported to him by the Wayne Oil Company until the summer of 1940 (Mr. Ledbetter, during his testimony, had fixed this date as being December of 1940) when the Aurora Gasoline Company and the National Refining Company both solicited the gasoline business of the Wayne Oil Company (R. 3447). The details of these offers have already been set forth above in connection with Mr. Ledbetter's testimony.

IV. Comments Upon the Evidence.

Let us now appraise the evidence in connection with respondent's sales to Ned's Auto Supply Company; to Citrin-Kolb Company; to Stikeman Oil Company, and to Wayne Oil Company, and determine whether the prices charged to these companies were made in good faith to meet lawful equally low prices of a competitor or competitors of respondent.

First, it must be noted that respondent began selling to each of these four companies some time prior to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman amendment (June 19, 1936) to the Clayton Act. Regardless of this fact, if its pricing policies were not illegal prior to that date but became illegal by virtue of the provisions of the aforementioned Robinson-Patman amendment, the respondent was bound to revise such pricing policies. It is no defense for any respondent to defend on the grounds that it has continued doing business in exactly the same manner as it did prior to the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act. In the subject case, the record discloses lower offers being made to each of these four companies after June 19, 1936. It was to compete with such other offerors that the respondent conducted its business as it did.

Consideration must be given to the setting and general conditions under which such offers were made and such competition was met. The record is replete with uncontroverted testimony that the Detroit gasoline market during the years covered in the complaint was of the "dog eat dog" variety. Detroit was described as the "dumping ground" for gasoline from the mid-continent and other fields. It was not a market of scarcity—rather, it was a market of abundance. Against this background we must appraise the practices of respondent and their effect upon competition. The record discloses that the respondent lost three of its seven jobbers in the years preceding the 360 issuance of the complaint herein. (It also lost a fourth jobber—Stikeman Oil Company—but later succeeded in recovering this customer from its competitors). It is clear that these accounts were lost because the respondent refused to meet the lower prices offered to such customers by respondent's competitors.

We might well examine the evidence to determine whether the respondent arbitrarily granted "jobber" status to the four jobbers hereinbefore referred to. The record shows that it was not an arbitrary classification by respondent in order to favor these four jobbers with lower prices, inasmuch as the companies were qualified for such status according to the commonly accepted standard in the industry.

Ned's Auto Supply Company.

Turning now to Ned's Auto Supply Company—which was at all times a retailer of gasoline—we learn from the record that respondent began selling gasoline to this company as far back as 1918. Until September 1936, respondent sold gasoline to Ned's at regular "tank-wagon" prices. Lower price offers were made to Ned's by respondent's competitors from time to time, and in August of 1936—after the Robinson-Patman amendment—Ned's wrote a letter to respondent in which it was stated that a "competitive major oil company" was offering a gasoline contract carrying a substantially larger margin of profit. To meet this competition, respondent lowered its price ½¢ per gallon. Respondent's witness testified that he had come to the conclusion that respondent would have lost this account unless some price reduction was made.

Early in 1938, Ned's acquired bulk plant facilities and received offers from Shell, Red Indian and Texas to sell its gasoline at "tank-car" prices. Ned's wrote another letter to respondent demanding to be placed on a "tank-car" basis. After some negotiation, respondent met the competition. There is no doubt, after a review of the record, that respondent would have lost Ned's as a customer if it had not met its competitors' offers.

Because of the higgling between respondent and Ned's, which is evident in the record, and because of the slowness and reluctance with which respondent reduced its gasoline price to Ned's, I am convinced that the respondent acted in good faith in meeting such competition.

361 Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

This company began buying gasoline from the respondent in about 1926. In 1929, after acquiring a bulk storage plant, it was recognized as a "jobber" by respondent and purchased gasoline on a "tank-car" basis. Some of this gasoline was resold at its own retail service stations and some was sold to other distributors.

One of the partners of this company testified that in 1930, the Hickok Oil Company offered gasoline to his company at a lower price; in 1936, the Gulf Refining Company offered a more attractive contract to his company; in August 1936 (after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) the Texas Company offered it gasoline at a lower price; in 1939 (again after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) the Argo Oil Corporation solicited his company's business with an attractive offer; and in 1940 (more than four years after enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) the Aurora Gasoline Company sought his company's business with a lower price. At the time of the hearings in this matter, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company had this last offer under consideration.

Here, respondent had begun selling Citrin-Kolb Oil Company on a "tank-car" basis long before the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act, and such policy had continued to the date of the hearings herein. Should respondent have ceased this practice in 1936 when the Robinson-Patman Act became effective? For many years after 1936, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was being pressed by respondent's competitors with attractive offers. Although no new pricing policy was here engaged in after 1936 in order to meet competition, it is clear that a retention of the existing pricing policy was necessary and imperative to meet the competitive offers being made by respondent's competitors to this company.

The evidence is clear that respondent here retained its pricing policy in good faith to meet competition.

Stikeman Oil Company.

This company began buying gasoline from the respondent in about 1932 as a "jobber", paying "tank-car" prices. At that time, this company was engaged in retail operations but by February 15, 1938, it had withdrawn completely from such market. Because of competition, this account was lost by respondent some time prior to 1936. The 362 account was lost to the White Star Refining Company (which is now Socony-Vacuum Oil Company) because such company offered Stikeman Oil Company a better price than respondent was willing to offer to Stikeman Oil Company.

The record discloses that subsequent to 1936 (after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) the Phillips Petroleum Company was attempting to sell Stikeman Oil Company its "Phillips 66" gasoline. The offer of Phillips Petroleum Company would have allowed Stikeman Oil Company a larger margin of profit than was possible under the price being paid to respondent.

There is also evidence in the record that in December 1940 (more than four years after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) a joint offer was made by the National Refining Company to sell gasoline to Stikeman Oil Company and to the Wayne Oil Company on a contract basis, by the terms of which each company would realize a greater margin of profit than would be possible under its purchases from respondent.

Here, as in the case of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, the practice complained of by the Commission was one instituted by the respondent prior to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act. However, subsequent to the passage of that Act, respondent's competitors were making strenuous efforts to take this customer away from respondent.

It appears that the decision of the respondent to retain its existing pricing policy was necessary to meet the competition of respondent's competitors and to prevent the loss of its customer. Consequently, it is my belief that respondent retained its pricing policy in good faith to meet the competition of its competitors.

Wayne Oil Company.

This company began buying its requirements from respondent in 1931 on a "tank-wagon" basis. In about 1935 it acquired bulk storage facilities and began buying from respondent on a "tank-car" basis. It sold most of the gasoline at wholesale and sold some gasoline to the lessees of its service stations.

After the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act and for about three or four years, the Aurora Gasoline 363 Company, on different occasions, solicited the business of this company and offered to sell gasoline to it at lower prices than charged by respondent.

In December 1940 (also after the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act) a joint offer was made by the National Refining Company to sell gasoline to Wayne Oil Company and to the Stikeman Oil Company on a contract basis, by the terms of which each company would realize a greater margin of profit than would be possible under its purchases from respondent.

Here, as in the case of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and the Stikeman Oil Company, the practice complained of by the Commission began before the enactment of the Robinson-

Patman Act, but it is evident that for many years thereafter competitors of the respondent had been seeking to take this customer from respondent by offering a lower price to such company.

The retention of its pricing policy was undoubtedly necessary to prevent the Wayne Oil Company from buying its requirements from some other supplier, and I am convinced that the respondent acted in good faith in so doing.

* * * * *

In reaching my conclusion in connection with respondent's treatment of each of the above four customers, I am satisfied that there is nothing in the 8,000 pages of evidence in this record which might cause me to suspect that the respondent knew, or that it had reason to believe, that the competitor's lower price which it was meeting was or might have been unlawful. With regard to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company and Wayne Oil Company, wherein all that the respondent did was to retain its pricing policy which was in effect prior to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act, I am satisfied that there, too, the respondent did not know, or did not have reason to believe, that it was retaining its pricing policy against a price or practice which was or might have been unlawful. All in all, the record convinces me that the respondent—in meeting some competitor's prices—and in refusing to meet the prices of others—acted as a reasonable prudent person would have acted under the circumstances.

I cannot leave this subject without emphasizing the fact that—independently—both the Commission's Trial
364 Examiner and the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit found that the respondent's lower prices were made in good faith to meet competition.

1. The Trial Examiner who presided at all of the hearings in this matter and who—first hand—heard all of the evidence and observed all of the witnesses, asked the following question in 1943 in his Report to the Commission:

> "Were the differentials in price accorded the four dealers, recognized by respondent as jobbers, made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors, or the services or facilities furnished by competitors?"

and answered it in the same Report as follows:

"Conclusion of Fact:

The differentials on its branded gasolines respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company, at all times subsequent to March 7, 1938, and Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and the Wayne Company, at all times subsequent to June 19, 1936, were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality."

2. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit—in spite of the fact that it ordered enforcement of the modified order of the Commission against the respondent, stated in its opinion in 1949 as follows:

> "There is substantial evidence in the record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor."

* * * * *

365 "Now as to the contention that the discriminatory prices here complained of were made in good faith to meet a lower price of a competitor. While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held, contrary to the petitioner's contention, that this was not a defense."

* * * * *

> "The showing made here by the petitioner that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competition, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out."

V. Conclusion.

Contrary to the conclusion of the majority of the Commission, the finding in this matter should be:

> "The respondent's price reduction was made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor."

Relying upon such a finding, the complaint herein against the respondent should be dismissed.

/s/ Albert A. Carretta,
Commissioner.

January 16, 1953.

* * * * *

369 FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Washington.

Office of the Secretary
and Executive Director

March 26, 1953

Mr. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.
United States Court of Appeals
for the Seventh Circuit
Chicago, Illinois.

Subject: Standard Oil Co., Petitioner,
vs.
Federal Trade Commission, Respondent
No. 9215

Dear Sir:

A decree of the Court issued on February 14, 1951: vacated and set aside its judgment in the above matter and remanded the case to the Commission "to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States filed on January 8, 1951" (340 U. S. 231). The Commission having further considered the matter, after having received and considered the briefs and heard and considered the arguments of opposing and supporting counsel and others, has made modified findings of fact and conclusion and has issued a modified order.

The Commission has today recertified to the Court that part of the record which was returned to the Commission at its request following remand of the case to the Commission together with the record of subsequent proceedings.

The modified findings of fact and conclusion and the modified order together with dissenting opinions are certified herewith by direction of the Federal Trade Commission for review by the Court. It is respectfully requested that the Court direct that this matter be placed on its calendar for rebriefing and reargument with such other procedure as the Court may deem appropriate.

The modified findings of fact and conclusion are being certified to the Court in accordance with the procedure followed in Case No. 8072, A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co., et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 144 F. (2d) 221. The modified order of August 9, 1946, has been further modified by the Commission to render it more efficacious in enjoining the proscribed practices.

In Ford Motor Company v. Labor Board, 305 U. S. 364, where a case was remanded to the Board for the purpose of setting aside its findings and order and issuing proposed findings, and making its decision and order upon a reconsideration of the entire case, the Supreme Court stated at page 374: "Such a remand does not dismiss or terminate the administrative proceeding." Hence, in the instant 370 case, the modified findings and conclusion have been made and the modified order has been issued in the same proceeding which was previously before the Court on the petition of the Standard Oil Company, filed with the Court on October 4, 1946, to review the Commission's modified order of August 9, 1946. The petition having neither been withdrawn nor dismissed and the Court's judgment in this matter having been set aside and vacated by its decree of February 14, 1951, the modified findings of fact and conclusion and the modified order pertain to issues which are still before the Court.

It is assumed that the Court will cause formal service to be made through your office upon opposing counsel, although the Commision has provided them with copies as a courtesy. Extra copies of the modified findings of fact and conclusion and the modified order are herewith enclosed with such formal service in mind.

Accompanying this letter is a statement by Commissioner Lowell B. Mason expressing his dissent to the action of the Commission in certifying to the Court the modified findings of fact and conclusion and the modified order in this matter.

By direction of the Commission.

s/ D. C. Daniel,
Secretary.

Endorsed: Filed May 19, 1953. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

371. Memorandum Stating Dissent of Commissioner Mason (To Accompany Request of Majority of Commission to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit to Review Modified Findings and Order Issued In Standard Oil Company, Docket No. 4389).

Believing that the request by the majority of the Commission that the Court now review the modified findings as to the facts and modified order to cease and desist issued by the Commission in the above proceeding on January 16, 1953, is without warrant in law, I feel obliged to state my reasons for this view.

In its decision of March 11, 1949 (173 F. 2d at p. 211), the Court stated the three issues raised by the petition to review filed by Standard Oil Company were: (1) Whether or not the sales made by Standard were in interstate commerce; (2) whether or not the Commission was correct in treating as immaterial the showing made by Standard as to good faith in granting discriminations to meet equally low prices of competitors; and (3) whether or not Paragraph Six of the order to cease and desist was justified. All three of these issues were decided by the Court, with the result that the order to cease and desist (as slightly modified by the Court) was ordered enforced. The Supreme Court granted certiorari, and in its decision of January 8, 1951 (340 U. S. 231), held: (1) That the sales by Standard were in interstate commerce; and (2) that the Court of Appeals erred in holding that the showing made with respect to good faith in meeting the equally low prices of competitors was immaterial. As a result, the Supreme Court reversed the decision of the Court of Appeals and remanded the case to that Court, with instructions to remand it to the Federal Trade Commission to make findings "in conformity with this opinion." Thereafter, the Court of Appeals vacated and set aside its judgment and remanded the case to the Commission to make findings pursuant to the Supreme Court's opinion.

In this situation there is no authority for the Court to grant the request of the majority of the Commission for review of its modified findings and modified order. This is because (1) the full power of judicial review upon the proceeding instituted by the petition to review filed by Standard Oil Company was exhausted when all the issues involved therein were reviewed and the error of law in the proceeding pointed out; (2) there is not now any issue before the Court upon which the power of judicial review may be exercised; and (3) the case is now in the same status as though it had never been in court, and there is no power in the Court and no statutory procedure for the Court to review the findings and order as requested by the majority of the Commission.

The only way in which the case, which is now entirely different in legal issues from the original case, may properly come before the Court for review is: (1) By application filed by the Commission under Section 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended, for affirmance and enforcement of its new order to cease and desist, and in support thereof show that violation of the order has occurred; or (2) by petition for review filed by Standard Oil Company under Section 11 of the Clayton Act, as amended. The majority of the Commission, however, rely upon the action taken pursuant to the remand by this Court in A. E. Staley Manufacturing Company v. Federal Trade Commission (135 F. 2d 453), as a precedent for the present 372 request for review. In the Staley case this Court, without affirming, modifying, or setting aside the Commission's order, remanded the matter to the Commission "for further consideration and hearings, if necessary, in order to show with more clarity, if the Commission can, wherein the discriminations occur and how they substantially lessen competition and promote monopoly, and for proper findings thereon; and for consideration of the defense urged by the petitioners, and for findings in relation thereto." Clearly, the Court found that before passing upon the issues presented by the petition for review it wanted more information. This was a situation, therefore, in which judicial review was incomplete and the case had to be returned to the Court for completion of such review.

The present request of the Commission that the Court review its modified findings and modified order is clearly an action of expediency. The request is inconsistent with the action which the Commission itself took. The case is being certified to the Court on the theory that it was remanded merely to enable the Commission to supply a deficiency in the record after which the Court would complete its judicial review. If this were true, then the Commission's jurisdiction over the case was strictly qualified, and it would have had no power or authority whatever to make a new order and its action in issuing the modified order to cease and desist would be void. It is perfectly apparent that the change in the order had nothing to do with the question of good faith or the findings made with respect thereto. The modified findings and modified order were issued January 16, 1953. The action taken, as well as the lapse of time between that action and the time of making the present request shows that the Commission in making the modifications proceeded on the theory that the power of judicial review vested in the Court by the statute had been exhausted and that the Commission upon remand once again acquired full jurisdiction. It is also clear that on a review of the modified findings and order, the legal issues will not and cannot be the same as in the review which was completed. A review which does not take account of the new issues which have been created by the Commission's action cannot do justice to either party.

/s/ Lowell B. Mason,
Commissioner.

March 18, 1953.

(The dissenting opinions of Mason and Carretta are not printed here as they are printed as part of the Certified Record.)

Endorsed: Filed May 19, 1953. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

373 UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS.

For the Seventh Circuit,

Chicago 10, Illinois.

May 19, 1953

Before:

Hon. J. Earl Major, Chief Judge.
Hon. F. Ryan Duffy, Circuit Judge.
Hon. Walter C. Lindley, Circuit Judge.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner,
vs.
Federal Trade Commission,
Respondent.
No. 9215.

ORDER.

On August 9, 1946, the Federal Trade Commission, with one member dissenting, entered an order requiring that Standard Oil Company cease and desist from discriminating in the price of gasoline, among its customers in the Detroit, Michigan, area. 43 F. T. C. 56. Thereafter Standard Oil Company petitioned this court to review and set aside said order, and the Commission asked for enforcement of same. On October 11, 1949, this court directed that said order be modified and as thus modified ordered that same be enforced. 173 F, 2d 210. On appeal, the United States Supreme Court reversed the judgment of this court and remanded the case to us with instructions to remand same to the Federal Trade Commission to make findings in conformity with its opinion. 340 U. S. 231. On February 14, 1951, this court entered an order containing the following language: "It is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the judgment of this Court entered in this cause on March 11, 1949, be, and the same is, hereby vacated and set aside, and that this cause be, and the same is hereby remanded to the Federal Trade Commission with instructions to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States filed on January 8, 1951."

374 On March 26, 1953, the Federal Trade Commission re-certified to this court that part of the record which had been returned to said Commission, together with modified findings of fact and conclusions of law, a modified order, and dissenting opinions by two members of said Commission. The covering letter from the Commission stated: "It is respectfully requested that the Court direct that this matter be placed upon the calendar for re-briefing and re-argument, with such other procedure as the court may deem appropriate."

The petitioner objects to this court taking any action at this time, claiming that we are without jurisdiction so to do.

Now, Therefore, It Is Ordered: That the re-certified portion of the record, and the modified findings of fact and conclusions of law, together with the dissenting opinions of two members of the Federal Trade Commission be received and made a part of the official file of this case before this Court.

It Is Further Ordered: That, as the Federal Trade Commission, under the remand from this court, was without power or authority to issue its "modified order" dated January 16, 1953, the same is entirely void, but may be considered by this court as a suggestion by the Commission as to the form of a modification of the original order of said Commission dated August 9, 1946.

It Is Further Ordered: That the parties may proceed with the filing of briefs pursuant to the rules of this court, and that thereafter this case will be set for oral argument at some convenient date when this court is in session, and that thereafter, upon the record, and the modified findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Federal Trade Commission, this court will determine whether the cease and desist order of August 9, 1946, should be enforced, modified, or set aside.

378 IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS.

* * (Caption—9215) * *

PETITION TO REMAND CAUSE TO THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION FOR FURTHER CONSIDERATION, OR TO VACATE THE ORDER OF MAY 19, 1953.

(Filed October 14, 1953.)

To the Honorable Judges of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit:

Petitioner, hereinafter designated as "Standard", prays that the above-entitled proceedings be remanded to the Federal Trade Commission for the reason that the Commission subsequent to "certification" of its Findings and Order to this Court has substantially revised its interpretation of the statute governing this controversy, and thus cannot consistently support its Findings and Order before this Court.

379 In the alternative, petitioner urges this Court to vacate its Order of May 19, 1953, because petitioner gravely doubts this Court's present jurisdiction to entertain the Commission's modified findings "certified" for the Court's statutory review. In support of this petition, Standard respectfully shows:

I.

Origin of the Proceeding.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, the Federal Trade Commission on November 29, 1940, issued a complaint against Standard, subsequently amended on April 23, 1941, charging it with violations of Section 2(a) of the amended Clayton Act.

II.

The Original Findings.

The Commission in the original proceeding found, in substance, that during the period covered by the complaint Standard sold its Red Crown gasoline in tank car lots to four jobber customers in the Detroit area at tank car prices one and one-half cents (1½¢) per gallon lower than its prices to retail service station customers in the same area who took delivery in the smaller tank wagon lots. The jobber customers took the tank car deliveries at their bulk plants and thereafter redelivered tank wagon quantities to retail service stations.

280 Each of the four jobbers at some time redelivered some of this gasoline to its owned retail service stations and there resold directly to the public; one resold exclusively through its own retail outlets; the other jobbers resold largely at wholesale to independently owned retail service stations. One or more of Standard's jobber customers operating their own service stations at times sold gasoline to the public at less than prevailing retail prices as did also other retail service stations which were supplied by one or more of these jobbers. Standard's lower prices to its four jobber accounts, the Commission found, resulted in "injuring, destroying and preventing competition" between these jobbers and retail dealers marketing Standard's and other major brands of gasoline, within the meaning of Section 2(a) of the Act. 41 F. T. C. 263, 276.

III.

Original Treatment of the Meeting of Competition Defense.

Among other defenses, Standard justified its price reduction as good faith meeting of the equally low price of a competitor, the statutory defense authorized by Section 2(b) of the Act. Despite its own trial examiner's conclusion that Standard's price concessions "were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality," the Commission refused to acknowledge Standard's Section 2(b) meeting competition defense. It declined to enter pertinent findings because, even though Standard's lower prices 281 to the jobbers had been made in good faith to meet the equally low price of competitors, in the Commission's view of the Act a Section 2(b) defense was a mere procedural device which could not avail when met with affirmative proof of so-called "injury to competition" at the resale level. 41 F. T. C. 263, 281-283. A cease and desist order was accordingly entered on October 9, 1945, modified by the Commission on August 9, 1946. 41 F. T. C. 263, 284; 43 F. T. C. 56.

IV.

Previous Review By This Court.

On October 4, 1946, Standard filed with this Court its petition for review of the Commission's order to cease and desist; the Commission cross-petitioned for affirmance and enforcement. After hearing the cause on briefs and oral argument, this Court on April 29, 1949, modified in part the Commission's cease and desist order but upheld its basic validity and decreed its enforcement. 173 F. 2d 210. The Court's opinion significantly recognized that "There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that (Standard) made its low price (to the four jobbers) in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor;" that this showing "we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out;" and that "While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held * * * that this was not a defense." Id. at 213, 214, 216. But the Court adopted the Commission's 382 statutory interpretation by which Standard's concededly good faith meeting of competition became immaterial:

> "The discrimination * * * was properly condemned by the Commission's order, notwithstanding the petitioner's discrimination in price was made in good faith to meet competition of its own." Id. at 216.

This Court thus clearly recognized that Standard had established its good faith meeting of competitor's lower prices; on the other hand, the Court "agree(d) with the Commission that the showing of the petitioner that it made the discriminatory price in good faith to meet competition is not controlling * * *." Id. at 217. (All emphasis supplied.)

V.

Reversal By the Supreme Court.

The action of this Court and the Commission was reversed by the Supreme Court. 340 U. S. 231. The Supreme Court squarely upheld Standard's claim "that, under the Act, the lower price to the jobbers was justified if it was made to retain each of them as a customer and in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." Id. at 234.

Noting in its opinion that the trial examiner "in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense, and yet the Commission refuses, as a matter of law, to give them consideration," id. at 243 n. 9, the Supreme Court outlined the proper interpretation of Section 2(b) as follows:

> 383 "* * * where a seller sustains the burden of proof placed upon it to establish its defense under § 2(b), we find no reason to destroy that defense indirectly, merely because it also appears that the beneficiaries of the seller's price reductions may derive a competitive advantage from them or may, in a natural course of events, reduce their own resale prices to their customers. It must have been obvious to Congress that any price reduction to any dealer may always affect competition at that dealer's level as well as at the dealer's resale level, whether or not the reduction to the dealer is discriminatory. Likewise, it must have been obvious to Congress that any price reductions initiated by a seller's competitor would, if not met by the seller, affect competition at the beneficiary's level or among the beneficiary's customers just as much as if those reductions had been met by the seller. The proviso in § 2(b), as interpreted by the Commission, would not be available when there was or might be an injury to competition at a resale level. So interpreted, the proviso would have such little, if any, applicability as to be practically meaningless. We may, therefore, conclude that Congress meant to permit the natural consequences to follow the seller's action in meeting in good faith a lawful and equally low price of its competitor." Id. at 250. (Emphasis supplied.)

Concluding that the Section 2(b) defense was "absolute," id. at 251, the Supreme Court reversed this Court's judgment; the case was remanded with instructions to remand further to the Federal Trade Commission for findings in conformity with the Supreme Court's opinion.

384

VI.

The Remand By This Court To the Commission.

In response to the Supreme Court's opinion and mandate, this Court on February 14, 1951, ordered that:

> "The judgment of this Court entered in this cause on March 11, 1949, be, and the same is, hereby vacated and set aside, and that this cause be, and the same is, hereby remanded to the Federal Trade Commission with instructions to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States filed on January 8, 1951."

VII.

The Commission's New "Findings."

The matter was held under consideration by the Commission from February 14, 1951, until March 24, 1952, when the Commission without prior notice or hearing issued modified findings of fact and conclusions of law impugning Standard's statutory "good faith," primarily on legal grounds. After oral argument on an order to show cause, the Commission on January 16, 1953, officially promulgated these findings and conclusions, together with a revised order to cease and desist. Dkt. No. 4389. Two of the five Commissioners dissented by comprehensive and detailed written opinion which meticulously retraced the evidence in the record to conclude, consonant with the Supreme Court's mandate and the opinions of every tribunal which had considered the case, that Standard had fully established 385 its price reductions as "made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor." What had been obvious to the Trial Examiner, the Commission, this Court and the Supreme Court when the facts were originally appraised was conceded by even the three majority Commissioners, who made this finding after the remand:

> "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to (the four jobber customers) it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case * * *." Id. at par. 14.

Nevertheless, and despite the Supreme Court's admonitions not "to destroy that defense indirectly" and not to degrade the "meeting competition" clause of the Act from an "absolute" to a hollow "dubious defense", 340 U. S. at 251, the majority Commissioners undertook once again to throttle the Section 2(b) meeting competition defense. No longer able to nullify the defense by dismissing Standard's good faith meeting of competitors' equally low prices as "immaterial," the three majority Commissioners this time effectively accomplished that same result by legalistic manipulation of the statutory term "good faith." They purported to refute Standard's "good faith," because (par. 14):

> (i). Standard, according to the Commission majority, had "reason to know that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition * * *."
>
> > [Note: But this so-called "injury to competition" 386 test was the very core of the Commission's argument before the Supreme Court, and is precisely the criterion rejected by the Supreme Court as nullifying the meeting competition defense.]
>
> (ii) Standard, according to the Commission majority, "had reason to know that the price differences which it granted could not be justified on the basis of" cost differences.
>
> > [Note: But this consideration is obviously irrelevant to a "meeting competition" defense. Cost differences can be pertinent only to "cost justification," an alternative defense authorized by the Act.]
>
> (iii) According to the Commission majority, Standard's knowledge of (i) and (ii), above, at the time of the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act imposed on it "the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute."
>
> > [Note: But the record conclusively confirms that Standard long before adoption of the Robinson-Patman amendment had in the strictest sense conformed to its criteria as enunciated by the Supreme Court's decision in this case: Standard accorded the lower tank-car price in individual cases and only in economic self-defense to retain a particular customer solicited by competing sellers.]

(iv) With one exception, according to the Commission majority, "all the discriminations in price involved in this proceeding were made pursuant to [Standard's] established method of pricing. They were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale * * * but represented only the 387 continued application of the pricing standard * * * followed by [Standard] since long before 1936."

[Note: But in fact Standard initially sold only to retail customers in Detroit, and at its established uniform tank-wagon price. Lower tank-car prices were secured, even prior to the Robinson-Patman amendment, only by a few retailer customers who grew into jobbers, acquired jobber facilities, and proved their ability to obtain tank-car prices from Standard's competitors, threatening to buy elsewhere unless Standard met the competition. Moreover, the one exception noted by the Commission in this proceeding (which concerns a total of only four jobber customers) in itself illustrates that Standard considered the competitive circumstances characterizing each individual case. In that particular instance Standard at first reduced its price only one half cent (½¢) to Ned's when it deemed this concession sufficient to retain that business; it later accorded Ned's the one and one-half cent (1½¢) lower tank-car price only when Ned's once again threatened to buy elsewhere unless Standard acceded.]

(v) Standard, according to the Commission majority, necessarily knew that its major competitors similarly granted tank-car prices to some jobber accounts.

[Note: But this observation is not relevant at all. For how can one meet a competitor's price if he has no knowledge of what the competitive offers are? Perhaps it is intended to imply a spurious analogy between Standard's individual price reductions and a seller's arbitrary adoption of an industry-wide unlawful pricing system which foisted "phantom freight" and higher prices on many buyers, as in Federal Trade Commission v.

388 Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, 753, 756-757 (1945).
While the Staley case expressly cautions sellers to verify the competitors' prices which they are meeting, id. at 758-760, the Commission holds that Standard lacks good faith, as a matter of law, if it follows the Supreme Court's view.]

In sum, the three majority Commissioners—only one of whom is today a member of the Commission—again read the "meeting competition" defense out of the Act and on grounds substantially equivalent to those which the Supreme Court had expressly reversed. A passionate hostility to the Section 2(b) meeting competition defense pervades their findings in veritable definance of the Supreme Court's mandate.

This Court only recently in a not dissimilar situation admonished the Labor Board that once the applicable legal principles are established by the reviewing court,

> "* * * it behooves the inferior arbiter to exercise great care that 'the law of the case' is applied to the facts of the case when they have been precisely determined by it. This is so even when it finds itself in well founded disagreement with its reviewer." Morand Bros. Beverage Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 204 F. 2d 529, 532 (1953).

VIII.

"Certification" to This Court.

A letter dated March 26, 1953, by the Secretary of the Commission addressed to the Clerk of this Court advised of the "certification" for this Court's review of the 389 Commission's modified findings of fact and conclusion of March 24, 1952, and its newly modified order to cease and desist. In addition, that letter requested "that the Court direct that this matter be placed on its calendar for rebriefing and reargument with such other procedure as the Court may deem appropriate." Commissioner Mason dissented, maintaining that the statutory provisions prescribing procedures for review of Commission orders furnished no basis for the requested judicial review. Counsel for Standard on April 9, 1953, lodged a letter with the Clerk of this Court to suggest that jurisdiction of the cause could not be conferred in such unorthodox manner. However, on May 19, 1953, this Court issued an order captioned in the original proceeding, directing that the matters "re-certified" by the Commission "be received and made a part of the official file of this case before this Court," although it struck the Commission's "modified order" of January 16, 1953 as void because promulgated "without power or authority." The Court further directed that the parties proceed with the filing of briefs; that the case be set for oral argument; and that the Court upon the record and the modified findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Federal Trade Commission would determine whether the cease and desist order of August 9, 1946, should be enforced, modified or set aside.

390 Supervening Change of Law.

IX.

Revised Views of Reconstituted Federal Trade Commission.

The Commission "certified" the cause to this Court on the very eve of its reconstitution culminating in the replacement of two of the three Commissioners comprising the majority which made the "certified" findings in this case. Subsequent to this "certification," the reconstituted Commission officially articulated revised criteria governing the "meeting competition" defense which were stated to be a departure from previous Commission policy:

On April 8, 1953, the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, requested the Commission's views on pending legislation affecting the "meeting competition" defense of Section 2(b). In its reply of June 16, 1953, the Commission Chairman speaking for the new majority expressly reversed the Commission's former stand and declared:

> "We believe that the right to meet a lower price which a competitor is offering to a customer, when this is done in good faith, is the essence of competition and must be permitted in a free competitive economy, * * * If businessmen, large or small, cannot meet competition, the whole nature of our competitive economy would be recast or destroyed; business > 391 in some areas would bloom and prosper, while in others it would wither and die."

The new Commission repudiated "The view recently, but no longer, urged by a majority of the Commission * * * that meeting the equally low price of a competitor should not be a defense whenever it injures competition"—"The view formerly expressed for the Commission * * * on March 16, 1953, is withdrawn to the extent that it is inconsistent with that here expressed." This "former" view of the Commission expressed on March 16, 1953, is that reflected in the findings "certified" to this Court by the Commission on March 26, 1953. Consonant with the new policy announced by the Chairman, the Commission approved S. 1377, 83rd Congress, 1st Session, which proposes to amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act by adding in relevant part:

> "(g) In any proceeding involving an alleged violation of this section, it shall be a complete defense to a charge of discrimination in price * * * if the seller shows that his lower price * * * was made, regularly or otherwise, in good faith to meet what the seller reasonably believed to be an equally low price of * * * a competitor * * * provided, that a seller shall not be deemed to have acted in good faith if he knew or should have known that the competitor's offer was unlawful."

This bill, declared the Chairman for the new Commission, "would restate the language of the Robinson-Patman Act to provide for what a majority of the Supreme Court 392 has held is the existing law." Two members of the Commission dissented, expressly urging that the Supreme Court decision in this case be overruled. These members were two of the erstwhile majority of three which held against Standard after the remand.

The current draft of proposed Trade Practice Rules for the Athletic Goods Industry, for example, incorporates the revised criteria of the new Commission. Although perhaps a minor indication of the present Commission's views, these draft rules notably do not qualify the statute's meeting competition defense by the discarded "injury to competition" test, nor do they authorize resort to the other factors with which the former Commission majority's findings nullified Standard's good faith meeting of a competitor's equally low price. Instead they interpret the "good faith" element in the § 2(b) meeting competition defense as satisfied "when the industry member is free of knowledge of any fact which indicates that the competitor's price which he is meeting is discriminatory and unlawful." That construction accords with the relevant proviso in S. 1377 approved by the new Commission in its letter to the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee as restating the Supreme Court's interpretation of the law.

Quite obviously, the Commission fundamentally revised its conception of the basic aims and philosophy underlying the meeting competition defense in the Robinson-Patman Act subsequent to its action in "certifying" this matter to this Court. The former policy inevitably compelled 393 the destruction of the meeting competition defense;
today it is supplanted by the Commission's forthright recognition of that defense as a keystone of the competitive system supporting a free economy. Even the findings "certified" to this Court recognize that Standard granted lower prices to the four jobbers solely to retain their patronage in the face of competing offers. And the legality of the prices met by Standard, never challenged by the Commission, necessarily stands established in this proceeding. Cf. Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61, 69, 74, 78-79 (1953); E. Edelmann & Co., F. T. C. Docket No. 5770 (May 21, 1953). Consequently, adherence by the Commission to its newly announced policy and criteria would compel validation of Standard's defense and dismissal of this proceeding.

X.

Remand Required to Enable Commission to Reconsider.

Standard cannot now effectively address itself to the Federal Trade Commission, nor can the present Commission sua sponte conform the actions of its predecessors to prevailing law. This Court having asserted jurisdiction by its order of May 19, 1953, the Commission may not be expected to act until this Court's disposition by way of remand, vacation of that order, or final adjudication. E. g., Ford Motor Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 364, 368 (1939); In re National Labor Relations Board, 304 U. S. 486, 496 (1938); American Chain &
394 Cable Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F. 2d 909
(4th Cir. 1944); 15 U. S. C. Sec. 21.

Accordingly, the supervening legal developments subsequent to the Commission's most recent action in this cause render it both equitable and in the public interest for this Court now to remand the cause for further consideration by the administrative tribunal.

XI.

Court Confronted With Repudiated Commission Interpretation.

This Court is confronted with a patently obsolete interpretation in a policy matter of cardinal significance in the administration of the law. The former Commission majority accomplished its most recent actions in this cause on the eve of the Commission's reconstitution. With two subsequently appointed Commissioners now supplanting two members of the majority which rendered the three-two decision adverse to Standard's "meeting competition" defense, the Commission's "certified" findings and conclusions at best represent the views of only one remaining Commissioner. On the other hand, two remaining Commissioners vigorously dissented from these findings and conclusions; and the new Commission Chairman has emphatically announced his interpretation of the Section 2(b) defense as departing radically from his predecessor's views.

As a result, the present Commission cannot, consist-395 ent with its revised criteria, espouse the incongruous findings and order which its predecessors "certified" for this Court's review. Nor are courts authorized or normally inclined to review an administrative policy which has become academic because later repudiated by the agency itself.

XII.

Probability of Court Determination Becoming Moot in View of Revised Commission Interpretation.

Any determination by this Court as to the findings "certified" by the former Commission majority may be rendered moot by the present Commission. Although the Commission is without authority to act while the matter is within the Court's jurisdiction, supervening changes of law or fact authorize the Commission in the public interest to vacate its orders at any other time, even subsequent to their judicial approval. American Chain & Cable Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F. 2d 909 (4th Cir. 1944); American Drug Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 149 F. 2d 608 (8th Cir. 1945); see Federal Trade Commission Rule of Practice XXVII. Standard believes that the Commission, in consonance with elementary principles of fair play and justice and in accord with its annourced conception of public policy, would be compelled to set aside the findings and order as presently framed. Cf. P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 186 F. 2d 52, 55 (4th Cir. 1950). And a reviewing court obviously may di-396 rect the Commission to reconsider its actions where that agency might do so of its own accord. American Chain & Cable Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.

XIII.

Unfairness of Applying Discredited Interpretation Only to Standard and Not to Its Competitors.

If the Federal Trade Commission's modified findings of fact and conclusions of law were permitted to stand as presently framed, Standard would be materially and unfairly disadvantaged in its competition with rival sellers of gasoline. Complaints have been filed by the Federal Trade Commission against two competing gasoline sellers charging price discriminations banned by Section 2(a) of the amended Clayton Act. As the present Commission will test these asserted offenses with its revised legal criteria, Standard's pricing conduct will have been discriminatorily judged by a different application of the law than its direct rivals. Moreover, other competing sellers of gasoline may now price to meet competition, unfettered by the discarded legal interpretation of Section 2(b) applied to Standard's meeting competition defense. Indeed, the Federal Trade Commission itself recently recognized the elemental fairness of avoiding "unwarranted, unequal treatment of competing respondents." On a critical phase of adjudication it refused to enter findings or issue a cease and desist order against two sellers since their competitor who followed the identical trade practice had not been charged under the same controlling law. Champion 397 Spark Plug Co. Docket No. 3977, par. 12; Electric Auto-Lite Co., Docket No. 5624, par. 7 (July 10, 1953).

XIV.

Administrative Reconsideration Granted in Analogous Cases.

Analogous circumstances have dictated the remand of administrative orders for reconsideration. Where a supervening change in controlling law occurs, sound administrative procedure requires the reconciliation of extant agency orders with the new governing principles—even over a litigant's objection and even after the orders enter the channels of judicial review. E. g., Ford Motor Company v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 364 (1939). Reviewing courts accordingly remand proceedings to agencies for reconsideration to take account of intervening statutory change, National Labor Relations Board v. Brown & Sharpe Mfg. Co., 169 F. 2d 331, 336 (1st Cir. 1948), and, squarely controlling here, to apply an agency's newly articulated criteria of law, National Labor Relations Baord v. Service Trade Chauffeurs Local, 191 F. 2d 65, 68 (2 Cir. 1951). In that case the Court of Appeals remanded because the agency subsequent to issuance of the order under review had "evolved criteria" pertinent to disposition of the legal issues. Because "those criteria had not yet been formulated when the Board decided the instant case [and] the Board did not here apply them or make findings pertinent thereto," the Court deemed itself "now in no position adequately to review its decision."

398 In the foregoing cases the reviewing courts, desiring the benefit of the agency's judgment in the new legal context, ordered administrative reconsideration. Significantly, these cases arose under the National Labor Relations Act whose judicial review provisions are in all relevant aspects identical with those governing the Federal Trade Commission's orders. See Amalgamated Utility Workers v. Consolidated Edison Co., 309 U. S. 261, 268-269 (1940); Ford Motor Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, supra, at 373; P. Lorillard Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 186 F. 2d 52, 55-56 (4th Cir. 1950); American Chain & Cable Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 142 F. 2d 909, 911 (4th Cir. 1944); Davis, Administrative Law, 726 (1951).

The unfairness of agency treatment of one seller by a different standard of law than is accorded his rivals by subsequently revised administrative policy has precipitated full reconsideration of an agency order even after completion of statutory review. The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Indiana Quartered Oak Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 58 F. 2d 182 (1932), considered a Federal Trade Commission order to cease and desist which because of a supervening change in the Commission's view of the law subjected the respondent seller to more stringent marketing restrictions than its rivals. Because the Court viewed the situation as inequitably disabling the seller from competing freely on equal terms, it directly modified the Commission's order. Customarily, however, Courts remand for agency reconsideration in order to minimize friction between judicial and administrative adjudica-399 tions. Federal Power Commission v. Idaho Power

Co., 344 U. S. 17, 21 (1952); Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 55 (1948); Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U. S. 608, 614 (1946); Federal Trade Commission v. Royal Milling Co., 288 U. S. 212, 218 (1933); American Chain & Cable Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, supra, at 910-911.

Question of Jurisdiction.

XV.

Grave Doubt of Court's Jurisdiction.

Standard, moreover, gravely doubts this Court's present jurisdiction to entertain the merits of this cause. When this Court in 1949 modified and decreed enforcement of the Commission's cease and desist order, the "order of the Commission * * * merged in a decree of this Court." United States v. Morton Salt Co., 174 F. 2d 703, 708-709 (7th Cir. 1949), reiterated in the opinion of the Supreme Court, 338 U. S. 632, 641 (1950); see also L. B. Silver Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 292 Fed. 752, 753 (6th Cir. 1923); Butterick Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 F. 2d 910, 913 (2d Cir. 1925). When this Court pursuant to the Supreme Court's mandate subsequently vacated and set aside its decree, necessarily the Commission's order was extinguished together with the judicial decree into which it had merged. Consequently, since the Commission's 400 1946 order was modified by this Court itself, and this Court's modified order was vacated, as compelled by the Supreme Court's decision, no presently subsisting order is now before this Court for review.

Furthermore, this Court's remand to the Commission exhausted the only power conferred on the Court by the Clayton Act. The Court is expressly confined by Section 11 of that act to "affirming, modifying, or setting aside the order of the Commission." Whether the language of the Supreme Court's opinion in reversing this Court dictates a remand "with instructions to make findings," as here, or compels a remand "for such further action as is open under the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States," as in Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, order in Docket No. 10239 entered by this Court on August 1, 1953, the Court necessarily conforms to the third statutory course when it vacates its previous judgment in which the Commission's order is embedded. Nothing in the statute contemplates or supports any continuing jurisdiction in the Court once this statutory authority to affirm, modify, or set aside has been exercised. Having uncovered an error of law, the function of the reviewing court ended, and the matter once more devolved upon the Commission for reconsideration and findings consistent with the construction placed on the statute by the reviewing courts. Federal Power Commission v. Idaho Power Co., 344 U. S. 17, 20-21 (1952); Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134, 145 (1940); see Vom Bauer, Administrative Law, § 791 (1942).

401 If the Commission found in favor of Standard on the remand, no one would contend that its favorable findings must be certified to the Court in order to enable the Court to dispose of litigation. Yet, if somehow the Commission's original order survived within the province of the Court even after judicial reversal and remand, then logically the litigation could not terminate unless and until the Commission's new findings were certified to the Court as supplying the basis for judicial dismissal of the action. Rather, it is clear that the Commission, once having made its new findings, must proceed to enter an order in conformity with the revised findings directed by the Supreme Court's mandate, ordering the complaint dismissed if the findings uphold Standard's defense, or ordering Standard to cease and desist if its efense is found wanting. Any subsequent judicial review would then be de novo, following the procedures provided in Section 11 of the Clayton Act.

XVI.

Staley Case Not Analogous.

The customary judicial practice of remitting a pending proceeding, prior to adjudication, back to the agency to clarify or amplify its findings obviously does not imply a judicial authority to exceed the Clayton Act's limitations by exercise, post adjudication, of a residual reviewing authority. Because courts reviewing administrative orders may not usurp the fact-finding duty of the administrative tribunal, a reviewing court confronted with unclear or inadequate findings has authority to refer the matter 402 back to the agency to perform its duty properly. The court does not thereby exhaust its statutory power because in such a case the validity of the order has not yet been passed upon. Instead, jurisdiction of the administrative order may correctly be retained by the court, with the agency directed to report back findings so that the reviewing court may proceed to adjudication. E. g., Phelps Dodge Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 177, 196-197 (1941); Agwilines, Inc. v. National Labor Relations Board, 87 F. 2d 146, 155 (5th Cir. 1936). Similarly, reviewing courts may remit for further agency findings specific residual issues in pending cases, directing the administrative body to report back with findings enabling the court to complete the statutory reviewing process. Thus courts asked to enforce Federal Trade Commission orders to cease and desist may after affirming an order's validity remit the matter to the Commission for the finding of respondent's noncompliance held prerequisite to judicial enforcement under Section 11 of the Clayton Act. E. g., Federal Trade Commission v. Whitney & Co., 192 F. 2d 746, 747 (9th Cir. 1951); Federal Trade Commission v. Herzog, 150 F. 2d 450, 452 (2d Cir. 1945); Federal Trade Commission v. Baltimore Paint & Color Works, 41 F. 2d 474, 476 (4th Cir. 1930); cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Standard Education Society, 14 F. 2d 947, 948 (7th Cir. 1926); see also Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 478-479 (1952), and cases cited id. at notes 15 and 19; Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61, 63 n. 1 (1953).
403 Analogously, courts affirming the National Labor Relations Board's orders to cease and desist from an unfair labor practice may remit to the Board for computation of employees' compensatory awards, then reported back to the court prior to completion of judicial review. E. g., National Labor Relations Board v. Somerset Shoe Co., 111 F. 2d 681, 690 (1st Cir. 1940); National Labor Relations Board v. New York Mdse. Co., 134 F. 2d 949, 953 (2d Cir. 1943); Wallace Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 159 F. 2d 952, 955 (4th Cir. 1947).

The crux of the matter is that a court prior to completing its adjudication may direct the agency first clearly to find the necessary facts. This Court adopted this practice in A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 135 F. 2d 453, 456 (7th Cir. 1943), in proper reliance on the Supreme Court's decision in Phelps Dodge, supra. The Commission reported back as directed, though with inadequate findings once again. A. E. Staley Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 144 F. 2d 221, 222 (7th Cir. 1944), reversed, 324 U. S. 746 (1945). The "Staley" procedure is manifestly impossible here. While in Staley this Court prior to exercise of its judicial reviewing power requested Commission to make itself clear, the Commission's actions in the instant case left neither this Court nor the Supreme Court in doubt—the Supreme Court held that the Federal Trade Commission's interpretation of the meeting competition defense fundamentally misconceived Section 404 2(b) of the Act. With the Commission's error of law uncovered, the judicial reviewing function terminated. The proceeding was returned through this Court to the Commission for consideration afresh, and this Court upon executing the Supreme Court's mandate relinquished all jurisdiction of the cause. See XV, supra. The Court's proper procedure in Staley, in short, supplies no analogy for the wholly incomparable procedure here.

XVII.

Limitation of "Additional Evidence" Authority of Clayton Act, Section 11.

Nor does the "additional evidence" provision of the Clayton Act authorize the procedure for judicial review asserted here. The reviewing court, even after its exclusive statutory jurisdiction has attached, is empowered by Section 11 under certain circumstances and upon request of either litigant to order that additional evidence be heard by the Commission as a fact-finding tribunal which on the basis of any newly found facts may recommend that the reviewing court modify or set aside the original order. This procedure is "analogous to a motion for a new trial upon newly discovered evidence." Fashion Originators' Guild v. Federal Trade Commission, 114 F. 2d 80, 82 (2d Cir. 1940), aff'd. 312 U. S. 457 (1941); cf. Automatic Canteen v. Federal Trade Commission, 194 F. 2d 433, 439 (7th Cir. 1952). In such a proceeding the Commission may only recommend but not promulgate a 405 new order because it may not intrude upon the reviewing court's exclusive power over the original order once the filing of the record vests exclusive statutory jurisdiction in the court. Manifestly, this "additional evidence" provision of Section 11 is wholly beside the point in the present proceeding: (1) neither litigant ever applied to this Court for leave to adduce further evidence; (2) this Court never ordered that additional evidence be taken before the Commission; (3) the Commission upon remand in fact never took additional evidence. And no other provision of Section 11 remotely supports present jurisdiction in this Court.

The short of the matter is that Section 11 of the Clayton Act authorizes but two vehicles for judicial review of a Federal Trade Commission order: (1) the Commission's petition for enforcement; (2) a respondent's petition that the reviewing court set the order aside. To date neither party has, by means authorized in Section 11, properly invoked this Court's jurisdiction to review an extant order to cease and desist.

XVIII.

Court's Assumption of Jurisdiction Unprecedented.

Extensive research leads Standard to believe that this Court's apparent assumption of jurisdiction via the Commission's "certified" findings and "recommended" order is without precedent in the annals of administrative 406 law. The statutory review provisions governing cease and desist orders of the Federal Trade Commission served as the prototype for analogous provisions in some eighteen subsequent Congressional enactments prescribing procedures for the judicial review of orders issued by administrative agencies. The more prominent of these include the National Labor Relations Act, the Federal Power Act, the Federal Communications Act, the Public Utilities Holding Company Act, the Natural Gas Act, and the Securities Act. In examining the decisions in which the Supreme Court reversed a Court of Appeals' affirmance of an administrative order and directed a further remand to the administrative agency, Standard has discovered not a single reported case involving any of these eighteen statutes in which post-adjudication jurisdiction via "certification" was asserted by a Court of Appeals. See, e. g., Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 150 F. 2d 751, (2d Cir. 1944), 327 U. S. 608, 614 (1946), 43 F. T. C. 256; First Iowa Hydro-Electric Cooperative v. Federal Power Commission, 151 F. 2d 20 (D. C. Cir. 1945), 328 U. S. 152, 183 (1946), 6 F. P. C. 227, 7 F. P. C. 893, 179 F. 2d 421 (8th Cir. 1950); Colorado Interstate Gas Co. v. Federal Power Commission, 142 F. 2d 943 (10th Cir. 1944), 324 U. S. 626, 635 (1945), 5 F. P. C. 332; Ashbacker Radio Corp. v. Federal Communication Commission, 326 U. S. 327, 334 (1945), 11 F. C. C. 515 (1946). Likewise, when the Supreme Court sustains a Court of Appeals' reversal of the agency, judicial review of any 407 post-remand agency proceedings has universally been invoked only by litigants' compliance with statutory review provisions, not by "certification". See, e. g., Securities & Exchange Commission v. Chenery Corp., 318 U. S. 80 (1943), 128 F. 2d 303 (D. C. Cir. 1942), 13 S. E. C. 231 (1945), 154 F. 2d 6 (D. C. Cir. 1946), 332 U. S. 194 (1947). Certainly it appears to have been assumed heretofore that only a subsequent petition for review or enforcement as prescribed by the judicial review provisions of the governing Act can once again vest the Court with jurisdiction to review the administrative action. No discretion has been recognized in the agency to proceed by certification.

XIX.

Jurisdiction Not Conferrable by Consent.

Standard cannot lawfully acquiesce in this Court's assumption of jurisdiction. A court may not secure premature jurisdiction through means unauthorized by Section 11 of the Clayton Act. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 478-479 (1952); Crown Zellerbach Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 156 F. 2d 927 (9th Cir. 1946); Chamber of Commerce v. Federal Trade Commission, 80 Fed. 45 (8th Cir. 1922). Until jurisdiction is transferred from the Commission to the Court by procedures outlined in Section 11, the Court is utterly devoid of jurisdiction over the subject matter; it "must refrain from any adjudication of rights in connection therewith." In re National Labor Relations Board, 304 U. S.

408 486, 494 (1938). So fundamental a defect in jurisdiction cannot be cured by waiver or consent. American Fire & Casualty Co. v. Finn, 341 U. S. 6, 17-18 (1951); United States v. Griffin, 303 U. S. 226, 229 (1938). In fact, a court is obliged on its own accord to vitiate a proceeding in which review jurisdiction is invalidly exercised. See, e. g., Louisville & N. Ry. v. Mottley, 211 U. S. 149, 152 (1908); cf. Public Service Commission v. Wyckoff, 343 U. S. 975-976 (1952).

Conclusion.

XX.

The best interest of public and private litigant alike demands that this worn and battered litigation reach a just and speedy end. Thirteen years have elapsed since the Commission first challenged Standard's price reductions to the four Detroit jobbers. In these circumstances, the Court should be naturally loath to exercise a highly dubious jurisdiction, inviting further delay in the final resolution of this controversy. Cf. In re National Labor Relations Board, 304 U. S. 486 (1938); American Fire & Casualty Co. v. Finn, 341 U. S. 6, 17-18 (1951).

409 To avoid the risks of delay inherent in jurisdictionally dubious proceedings, and because its revised legal criteria would doubtless compel the present Federal Trade Commission to set aside its predecessors' findings and conclusions, Standard respectfully petitions the Court to vacate the Court's order of May 19, 1953 or, alternatively, to remand the cause to the Commission for reconsideration.

Dated: October 14, 1953.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner.

Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
John C. Butler,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Frederick M. Rowe,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert L. Green,
Of Counsel

410 UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit,

Chicago 10, Illinois.

Before:

Hon. J. Earl Major.
Hon. F. Ryan Duffy.
Hon. Walter C. Lindley.

* * (Caption—9215) * *

ORDER.

On August 9, 1946, the Federal Trade Commission entered a cease and desist order directed to Standard Oil Company. On October 11, 1949, this court directed that said order, as modified, be enforced. On appeal the United States Supreme Court reversed the judgment of this court and remanded the case to us with instructions to remand same to the Federal Trade Commission, to make findings in conformity with that court's opinion. On February 14, 1951, this court entered an order containing the following language: "It is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the judgment of this Court entered in this cause on March 11, 1949, be, and the same is, hereby vacated and set aside, and that this cause be, and the same is, hereby remanded to the Federal Trade Commission with instructions to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States filed on January 8, 1951."

On March 26, 1953, the Federal Trade Commission re-certified to this court "that part of record which had been returned to said Commission," together with modified findings of fact and conclusions of law, a modified order, and dissenting opinions by two members of the Commission. The Commission requested that this court place the matter on our calendar for rebriefing and re-argument.

411 On May 19, 1953, this court entered an order containing among others, the following provisions:

"* * * It Is Ordered: That the re-certified portion of the record, and the modified findings of fact and conclusions of law, together with the dissenting opinions of two members of the Federal Trade Commis> sion be received and made a part of the official file of this case before this court.

>
> "It Is Further Ordered: That, as the Federal Trade Commission, under the remand from this court, was without power or authority to issue its 'modified order' dated January 16, 1953, the same is entirely void, but may be considered by this court as a suggestion by the Commission as to the form of a modification of the original order of said Commission dated August 9, 1946."

On October 14, 1953, Standard Oil Company filed a petition with this court praying that this court vacate its order of May 19, 1953, on the ground that it was without jurisdiction to enter same, and that the cause be remanded to the Federal Trade Commission for further consideration. On November 10, 1953, the Federal Trade Commission filed an answer praying that said petition be denied. Thereafter Empire State Petroleum Association filed a petition asking for leave to intervene and to file a brief as amicus curiae; similar petitions were filed by National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc., by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and by National Oil Jobbers Council, Inc.

It Is Ordered: That the various petitions to intervene hereinbefore described be and the same are each hereby denied, but that the briefs filed by said petitioners as amici curiae be received and filed by the Clerk of this Court.

It Is Further Ordered: That the order of this court dated May 19, 1953, be and the same is hereby vacated and set aside, for the reason that this court was without jurisdiction to enter same. The Clerk of this Court is directed to return to the Federal Trade Commission the findings of fact and conclusions of law, orders, papers, and documents which said Commission "re-certified" to this court on March 26, 1953.

For the information of all concerned, this court is of the opinion that the only procedure by which it may in the future consider any modified findings of fact and conclusions of law or order of the Commission herein is in accordance with the provisions of Sec. 11 of the Clayton Act:

413 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Docket No. 4389.

In the Matter of
Standard Oil Company,
a Corporation.
} Docket No. 4389.

PETITION OF STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

The Commission's repeated failures to abide by the commands of the Clayton Act for the third time bring this controversy here. In 1946 the Commission attempted a strained construction of the meeting competition defense in Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act. The Supreme Court in 1951 disapproved the Commission's novel interpretation and remanded the case for entry of proper findings conforming to the law as construed by the Court. In March, 1953, the Commission attempted to "certify" its revised "findings" and order to the Court of Appeals. That court on January 18, 1954, ordered the case returned to the Commission for compliance with Section 11 of the Clayton Act.

Petitioner respectfully prays the Commission to take steps to ensure once and for all, full adherence to established procedural and substantive legal principles under the Clayton Act. The Commission should consider (1) whether any valid cease and desist order is now in effect; if so, (2) whether the so-called revised "findings" promulgated in 1953 conform to the judicial mandates returning the case to the Commission, (3) whether those "findings" do not in fact clash with the Commission's own legal interpretations of the scope, meaning, and purpose of the meeting competition defense, and finally, (4) whether the Commission's disregard of its trial examiner's fact findings—noted by the Supreme Court as determinative of this case—can be reconciled with recently defined and directly applicable doctrine of administrative law.

In support of its petition, Standard respectfully shows:

I.

Concise Judicial History of This Proceeding.

Pursuant to a complaint issued in 1940, the Commission in 1946 held that petitioner had violated Section 2 of the Clayton Act by selling gasoline to four Detroit jobber customers at tank-car prices 1½¢ per gallon lower than prices charged for tank-wagon quantities to its retailer customers in the Detroit area. Petitioner, among other statutory defenses, invoked the "good faith meeting of competition" proviso in Section 2(b), justifying its price reductions to the four jobbers as a bona fide effort to retain their substantial business in the face of equally low or lower price offers by competing sellers of gasoline. The Commission's trial examiner unequivocally found that petitioner's price reductions were "granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality," and that "the granting of the differentials was lawful"*—unless that statutory defense was unavailable to petitioner on other grounds. The Commission, however, seeking judicial test of a novel legal theory, deemed petitioner's good faith meeting of competition "immaterial." It contended that Section 2(b) authorized a mere procedural rebuttal which was of no consequence when the price discriminations resulted in so-called "injury" to competition at the buyer level. On judicial review of the Commission's order to cease and desist, the Court of Appeals concluded that petitioner's price reductions constituted "good faith meeting of a competitor's equally low price" within the plain meaning of Section 2(b) of the Act. But the Court, persuaded by the Commission's legal theory, held the defense "immaterial" and unavailable to petitioner.

On January 8, 1951, the Supreme Court rejected that interpretation of the Act and approved petitioner's contention that "the lower price to the jobbers was justified if it was made to retain each of them as a customer and 414 in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.'" 340 U. S. 231, 234. The Supreme Court's opinion expressly noted that the Commission's trial examiner "in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense, and yet the Commission refuses, as a matter of law, to give them consideration."

---

* Italics supplied throughout unless otherwise noted.

Id. at 243, n. 9. The Court therefore remanded the case "to the Federal Trade Commission to make findings in conformity with this opinion."

II.

Post-Remand Proceedings by the Commission.

On January 16, 1953, the Commission issued revised, so-called findings that once again defeated petitioner's meeting competition defense by resort to the same theory that the Supreme Court disapproved—but now claiming that this discredited theory proved lack of "good faith". At the same time, in the face of warnings from petitioner and intervenors that it lacked such authority, the Commission promulgated a new order to cease and desist which materially broadened the scope of previous prohibitions. A bare majority of the Commission subscribed to the new "findings" and the revised order which failed to accord the required consideration to the examiner's report, and ignored the legal limitations imposed by the judicial mandates on the Commission's power to expand its order.

While petitioner was preparing to bring these matters to its attention, the Commission without warning undertook its abortive "certification" which purported to transfer sole jurisdiction over this proceeding to the Court of Appeals.

III.

Latest Judicial Action.

The Commission's broadened 1953 order was promptly set aside by the Court of Appeals. On May 19, 1953, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit held that the Commission "was without power or authority to issue its 'modified order' dated January 16, 1953"; consequently, that order was "entirely void."

But because the Court had accepted jurisdiction to review the new "findings," petitioner on October 14, 1953, requested the Court to remand the cause to the Commission or, alternatively, to vacate the Court's order of May 19, 1953, pointing out that the unprecedented "certification" could not confer jurisdiction in disregard of pertinent procedural provisions of Section 11 of the Clayton Act. On January 18, 1954, the Court in a memorandum decision sustained petitioner and vacated its previous order of May 19, 1953.

IV.

No Valid Order Presently Exists.

No effective cease and desist order presently exists, since (1) the Commission's original 1946 order is long defunct; and (2) its revised order of 1953, declared a nullity by the Court of Appeals, is wholly void as exceeding the judicial mandate.

(1) Apart from the Commission's own efforts to supplant its 1946 order as legally defective, that order has been obliterated through action by the courts. When the Court of Appeals decreed enforcement of the Commission's 1946 cease and desist order, the "order of the Commission * * * merged in a decree of this Court." United States v. Morton Salt Co., 174 F. 2d 703, 708-709 (7th Cir. 1949), 338 U. S. 632, 641 (1950); International Union v. Eagle-Picher Co., 325 U. S. 335, 339 (1945); cf. L. B. Silver Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 292 Fed. 752, 753 (6th Cir. 1923); Butterick Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 4 F. 2d 910, 913 (2d Cir. 1925). By later setting aside that decree, pursuant to the Supreme Court reversal and mandate, the Court extinguished the Commission's order which had "merged" into the decree.

In any event, the Commission's 1946 cease and desist order could not survive once the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's ruling; for "an order may not stand if the agency has misconceived the law." Securities & Exchange Commission v. Chenery Corp., 318 U. S. 80, 94 (1943). As in Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61 (1953), the Supreme Court's disapproval of the Commission's fallacious theories destroyed the statutory basis and, hence, the legal force of its order to cease and desist. See Petition for the United States, p. 14 and fn., Federal Trade Commission v. Carter Products, Inc., No. 114, 1953 Term (U. S. Sup. Ct., Oct. 12, 1953).

415 (2) But while the Commission correctly recognized its duty to reenter a fresh order after re-examining the case in the light of the Supreme Court's opinion, its revised 1953 order exceeded the terms of the judicial mandate, and thus equally lacks legal force or effect. That the Commission's new order departs from the mandate is manifest:

(a) The 1953 order imposes entirely new legal and marketing burdens on petitioner. Paragraph 2 of this new order fantastically compels petitioner to charge its numerous retailers prices no higher than any of its wholesaler customers charge their retail buyers. If the original 1946 order—which in practical effect forced petitioner to police its wholesale customers' resale prices—is questionable (as the Commission evidently recognizes), far more objectionable is the new order in tying petitioner's prices to those set by its wholesalers. Such an arrangement for horizontal price fixing, if voluntarily devised by petitioner and its distributors, might well be held illegal per se under the Sherman Act. Kiefer-Stewart Co. v. Seagram & Sons, 340 U. S. 211 (1951); United States v. Bausch & Lomb Optical Co., 321 U. S. 707, 720 (1944); United States v. Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., 310 U. S. 150 (1940). Even an incidental element of horizontal price-fixing in a fair-trade plan under the McGuire Act was recently deemed sufficient by the Commission itself to taint an otherwise lawful program. Eastman Kodak Company, F. T. C. Dkt. 6040 (Oct. 9, 1953); Doubleday & Co., F. T. C. Dkt. 5897 (Sept. 25, 1953). Hence this prohibition of the new order is no more lawful than paragraph 6 of the previous order which it replaced.

Entirely apart from legal considerations, the new order contemplates a system of market surveillance by petitioner of unprecedented scope. The Commission's previous directive to police the pricing conduct of four Detroit jobbers is dwarfed by petitioner's duty under the revised order to adopt, in all its own sales to its retail customers, the prices set by others—thereby forfeiting its freedom to price in the open market.

(b) In addition, the revised 1953 order by deleting an express proviso in the previous order radically widens its scope and effect. The previous order was narrowly confined through a proviso which declared that none of the order's legal prohibitions could "be taken as inhibiting any price differentials by respondent that were not found under the facts herein to have a tendency to injure, destroy or prevent competition * * *." The previous order thus sought to regulate only petitioner's prices to its Detroit jobbers, and even then referred solely to the particular price differentials found objectionable by the Commission in the context of distinctive marketing facts prevailing in the Detroit area at that time. By eliminating this proviso, the new order imposes on petitioner a universal and unqualified system of price control by forbidding all price differentials everywhere and in any amount, irrespective of competitive "injury".

(c) Finally, the new order indirectly extends all previous prohibitions by striking out other provisos that expressly authorized, among other defenses, justification of differentials through savings in cost. Under the previous order, petitioner in any action instituted by the Commission could at all times justify any apparent violations of the order by a successful showing of cost savings in sales to jobbers, although having previously failed fully to make out this defense. It is, of course, true that Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470 (1952), holds that defensive provisos are necessarily implicit in each Commission order to cease and desist. However, the Commission's original order permitted petitioner to invoke the statutory defenses even when accused of price differentials substantially resembling those adjudicated in the instant proceeding. Elimination of the express provisos would bar such defenses under similar factual conditions, 343 U. S. at 476—thus, as recently recognized by the Commission itself, awarding the agency more extensive and broader relief. Holtite Mfg. Co., Dkt. No. 5828 (October 30, 1953).

Since the reviewing court's mandate instructed the Commission only to enter findings—and did not empower the Commission to enlarge its order—the expanded 1953 order under traditional legal principles is "entirely void". The Supreme Court only recently reaffirmed the elementary rule that inferior tribunals have "no power or authority to deviate from the mandate issued by an appellate court." Briggs v. Pennsylvania R. R. Co., 334 U. S. 304, 306 (1948). An established corollary of this principle holds that the inferior tribunal may award no relief beyond that expressly authorized in the mandate of the reviewing court. E.g., Ex parte Sibbald v. United States, 12 Pet. 488, 492 (U. S. 1838); Re Sanford Fork & Tool Co., U. S. 247, 255 (1895); Kansas City S. R. Co. v. Guardian Trust Co., 281 U. S. 1, 11 (1930). These limitations upon the inferior tribunal's authority apply in full force to administrative commissions, whose status in this respect "is much akin to that of a United States District Court." Morand Bros Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 204 F. 2d 529, 532 (7th Cir. 1953).[*]

416 These settled principles were disregarded by the Commission's action in entering an expanded cease and desist order in January, 1953. Without warrant in law, in the teeth of the mandate, and over petitioner's objections, the Commission proceeded to enlarge its order,[] even though the intervenor supporting the Commission's findings warned that a "surgical operation" on the order would incur grave legal risks of invalidity. E.g., Brief for Retail Gasoline Dealers Assn'n of Michigan, pp. 5, 11, 21; Transcript of Oral Argument before the Commission, p. 93.

The Court of Appeals in its order of May 19, 1953, declared that the Commission's 1953 order was "entirely void." Whatever the technical status of this declaration after the Court set aside its May, 1953, order on the jurisdictional grounds urged by petitioner, the Commission's new cease and desist order is in any event void as exceeding the restricted terms of the judicial mandate. Significantly, less than two weeks after its May 19, 1953, declaration nullifying the Commission's order, the Court castigated another administrative tribunal for ignoring the directions of a remand. Morand Bros. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 204 F. 2d 529, 532 (7th Cir. 1953).

---

[*] Nor was anything different decided in Federal Communications Commission v. Pottsville Broadcasting Co., 309 U. S. 134 (1940), which construed a judicial remand as implicitly authorizing the agency to consider those supervening factual developments essential for discharging its legislative mandate to award radio licenses to the applicant best qualified at the time of the award. See Easton Publishing Co. v. Federal Communications Commission, 185 F. 2d 987, 991 (D. C. Cir. 1950). No supervening factual issue is or could be involved here.

[] This case thus differs from Jacob Siegel Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 327 U. S. 608, 613-614 (1946), in which the Supreme Court's opinion expressly required the Commission to reconsider its outstanding order. See 43 FTC 256, 259 (1946). And see Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 55 (1948); 45 FTC 328, 329 (1948).

V.

The Revised "Findings" Manifestly Conflict With the Commission's Present Interpretation of the Meeting Competition Defense.

The Commission's own recent declarations brand the revised "findings" as unacceptable to the Commission itself.

Subsequent to issuance of the revised "findings", a public statement by the Commission expressly repudiated the admittedly hostile attitude toward the meeting competition defense which animated the key "finding" of petitioner's "bad faith." The Commission's official policy declaration of June 16, 1953, accepted the right in good faith to meet a competitor's lower price as "the essence of competition" in a free economy, and expressly revoked "the view recently, but no longer, urged by a majority of the Commission * * * that meeting the equally low price of a competitor should not be a defense whenever it injures competition." The inconsistent "view formerly expressed for the Commission * * * March 16, 1953, [was] withdrawn." Yet this discredited "injury to competition" legalism is the mainstay of the 1953 revised "finding" which denied petitioner's "good faith" as a matter of law.

Since such conflicting interpretations cannot consistently stand, the Commission must necessarily disavow the 1953 "findings" which no longer comport with prevailing law. The Commission's current policy declaring the meeting competition defense unaffected by any incidental "injury" to competitors is fundamentally irreconcilable with the purported "finding" which viewed such "injury" as incompatible with "good faith"—thereby indirectly destroying the statutory defense. The supervening changes in the Commission's membership are entirely irrelevant. Whatever its composition, the Commission as a quasi-judicial tribunal cannot maintain that "injury" does not bar the defense, while at the same time lending its official authority to a "finding" predicated on precisely the opposite premise. The heart of the matter is that in its 1953 revised "findings" the Commission devised a new legal theory which destroyed petitioner's defense through equating "injury" with "bad faith"—a theory now displaced by the Commission's current policy.*

---

* The close relationship between the previous view of the Commission which is now "withdrawn" and the purported "findings" of petitioner's "bad faith" is sharply demonstrated by the fact that those dissenting Commissioners who found petitioner's "good faith" later joined in the recent statement of Commission policy supporting the Section 2(b) defense.

Since the legal criteria applied to petitioner are today officially abandoned, the Commission's actions materially and unfairly prejudice petitioner in its competition with rival sellers of gasoline. For example, at least two major competitors stand charged by the Commission with price discriminations. These charges will doubtless be measured by the current interpretation of the "meeting competition" defense. Petitioner's pricing conduct accordingly will have been discriminatorily judged by a discarded legal interpretation, a condition unfairly favoring its direct rivals 417 which now may freely price to meet competition. In fact, in contrast to petitioner, the pricing freedom of all its business rivals is enhanced by the current construction of the law, unfettered by the repudiated philosophy which equates "injury" with "bad faith."

Actions by the Commission under such circumstances is not only essential but is supported by prior decisions guaranteeing equal legal treatment to all competitors. Precisely to avoid such manifest injustice, the Commission has in recent cases recognized the elemental fairness of refraining from that "unwarranted, unequal treatment of competing respondents" inherent in subjecting one competitor to legal restraints of which his rivals are free. Champion Spark Plug Co., Dkt. No. 3977, par. 12 (July 10, 1953); Electric Auto Lite Co., Dkt. No. 5624, par. 7 (July 19, 1953); cf. Holtite Mfg. Co., Dkt. No. 5828, p. 3 (October 30, 1953). Similarly, the Commission only recently decided that "it cannot in good conscience do other" than dismiss a series of complaints charging Clayton Act violations, in frank recognition of the "injustice of entering an order to cease and desist upon a state of facts permitted" by subsequent Commission reinterpretation of the law. Richard Hudnut, Dkt. 2973 (January 9, 1953); Elmo, Inc., Dkt. 2974 (January 9, 1953); Charles of the Ritz, Inc., Dkt. No. 3017 (January 9, 1953); Primrose House, Inc., Dkt. No. 3039 (January 9, 1953); Coty, Inc., Dkt. No. 4435 (January 9, 1953); Bourjois, Inc., Dkt. No. 4436 (January 9, 1953). In addition, the Commission has candidly conceded the necessity of revising prior Commission actions which, while in strict conformity with Commission policy when taken, no longer conform with prevailing law and thus impose restrictions on respondents "which would not be imposed on their competitors." Book-of-the-Month Club, Inc., Dkt. No. 5572, p. 2 (March 18, 1954); see Progress Tailoring Co., Dkt. No. 3747 (February 16, 1954). In fact, the Commission has recognized that its change of policy with respect to other Clayton Act interpretations should in all fairness permit a respondent even to withdraw a filed answer, an action permissible "only in the rarest of cases." Beltone Hearing Aid Co., Dkt. No. 5825 (Feburary 18, 1954); cf. Outboard, Marine & Mfg. Co., Dkt. No. 5882 (February 18, 1954).

Even more significantly, courts have remanded administrative proceedings in order to permit the agency to reconsider its determinations in the light of currently prevailing criteria of law. Thus in National Labor Relations Board v. Service Trade Chauffeurs Local, 191 F. 2d 65, 68 (2d Cir. 1951), the Court of Appeals remanded because subsequent to the proceedings under review the agency had "evolved criteria" which "had not yet been formulated when [it] decided the instant case and [thus] did not apply them or make findings pertinent thereto"—consequently the Court deemed itself "now in no position adequately to review its decision." Additionally, that Court in Indiana Quartered Oak Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 58 F. 2d. 182 (2d Cir. 1932), directly modified a Commission order which subjected one competitor to legal prohibitions more onerous than subsequently revised Commission criteria accorded to rival sellers. And most recently, of course, the Court of Appeals, even after once affirming the Commission's action, remanded the Book-of-the-Month Club, Inc., proceeding to the Commission for reconsideration "in the light of the present policy of the Federal Trade Commission regarding the use of the word 'free' in advertising"—as otherwise the petitioners might "be left at an unfair competitive disadvantage in the conduct of their business" through legal rules which the Commission would not in the future apply. Dkt. No. 22429 (2d Cir. Dec. 11, 1953). See also Progress Tailoring Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 8411 (7th Cir. December 9, 1953); Standard Distributors, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 22458 (2d Cir. March 23, 1954).

To be sure, several of these legal reinterpretations occurred in adjudications or formal rules rather than through a policy declaration such as that defining the present status of the "meeting competition" defense. But an "agency may announce policies in connection with deciding cases, or informally through press releases, or reports or speeches, or formally through regulations. The practical effect of each of these three courses is often almost the same * * *." Davis, Administrative Law, 186-187 (1951). "Announcements of general policies intended to be followed by administrative agencies" evidently can "take any one of various forms." Dissent of Mr. Justice Frankfurter in Columbia Broadcasting System v. United States, 316 U. S. 407, 431 (1942); see also Final Report of the Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure, 26-27 (1941). And "whatever form such announcements may take, their nature and effect is the same." 316 U. S. at 431.

418 Clearly, the Commission must accommodate its processes to ensure their adherence to legal reinterpretations promulgated in any form. Judicial remands as in the Service Trade Chauffeurs and Indiana Quartered Oak decisions, supra, abundantly establish that courts may well insist that the Commission declare itself on significant issues of statutory interpretation, deferring judicial review until prior expression from the expert agency which Congress has entrusted with the primary and initial policy-making role. This duty of a policy-making tribunal such as the Federal Trade Commission becomes all the more pressing when the legal change goes to the heart of a statute which controls the price mechanism of a free economy—an issue at least matching in public significance the ruling as to use of the term "free" in advertising claims.

VI.

The Commission's Revised "Findings" Transparently Circumvent the Supreme Court's Ruling.

Although the obvious clash between the Commission's revised "findings" and its currently declared policy of itself demands administrative consideration, the Commission's action also flouts the Supreme Court's opinion in this very case. For the Commission's purported "findings" in truth constitute transparent legalistic theorizations designed to circumvent the Supreme Court's ruling.

The Supreme Court's opinion, establishing "good faith meeting of competition" as an absolute defense to a price discrimination charge regardless of "injury" at the resale level, noted expressly that the record reflected all factual elements essential to petitioner's defense. The Court commented on petitioner's "evidence tending to prove that its tank-car price was made to each 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor". 340 U. S. 231, 238. And it stated that "the trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense * * *". Id. at 243, n. 9.

In view of the Court's directly pertinent observations, the Commission could not well avoid an express finding that

> "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to [the four jobber customers] it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case * * *."

Though no greater "good faith" can be imagined, the 3-2 majority sought to evade the consequence of this controlling fact. In the guise of fact finding, they improvised a theory by which petitioner's defense could again be rejected—for want of "good faith". The touchstone of this theory was petitioner's alleged "reason to know that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers * * *". Yet this so-called "injury to competition" element constituted the core of the Commission's previous statutory interpretation which was examined and disapproved by the United States Supreme Court, because, "So interpreted, the proviso would have such little, if any, applicability as to be practically meaningless". 340 U. S. at 250.

Such flagrant intrusion by a lower tribunal into areas settled by the Supreme Court's opinion violates "a basic tenet in our federal system of administrative practice and review" which binds lower tribunals to comply with the law as declared by a superior reviewing court. See, e.g., Morand Bros. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 204 F. 2d 529, 532 (7th Cir. 1953). There the Court excoriated another administrative agency for post-remand actions practically "on all fours" with the Commission majority's recent actions in this case. That Court declared (p. 532):

> "The pronouncements of the reviewing court are * * * known in the vernacular as 'the law of the case', i.e., they are the rules to govern the particular dispute at hand. * * * In such a situation it behooves the > inferior arbiter to exercise great care that 'the law of the case' is applied to the facts of the case when they have been precisely determined by it. This is so even when it finds itself in well founded disagreement with its reviewer * * *. In short, experience has taught that causes are disposed of most expeditiously when the correction of errors is left to the superior tribunals and those enjoying judicial or administrative inferiority studiously endeavor to comply with the mandate issued to them."

See also National Labor Relations Board v. Royal Palm Ice Company, 201 F. 2d 667, 668 (5th Cir. 1953).

419

VII.

The Revised "Findings" Violate Recently Established Law Defining the Weight to Be Accorded to a Trial Examiner's Report.

In entering its revised "findings", the Commission wholly disregarded the trial examiner's report which established petitioner's defense, and thus failed to apply recently established but unambiguous legal principles prescribing the weight that an agency must accord the examiner's determinations.

The Supreme Court's opinion in this case expressly noted that the Commission's trial examiner had resolved in petitioner's favor every essental element in its meeting competition defense. The Court observed that the Commission's "trial examiner made findings on [petitioner's Section 2(b) defense] but the Commission declined to do so," 340 U. S. 231, 238; in fact "the trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense * * *". Id. at 243, n. 9. Presumably because the Supreme Court could not sit as an administrative board initially entering those findings which an expert Commission erroneously omitted, Phelps Dodge Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 313 U. S. 177, 197 (1941); Morand Bros. Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 204 F. 2d 529, 534 (7th Cir. 1953), the judicial mandate instructed the Commission to supply the missing findings in the light of the Court's opinion—and necessarily also the examiner's report.

But the Commission's revised "findings" accorded no weight whatever to the determinations of "an impartial, experienced examiner" who had "lived with the case". Universal Camera Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 340 U. S. 474, 496 (1951).

The rules defining the trial examiner's status and the respect due his findings arise from statutes and cases evincing "a purpose to increase the importance of the role of examiners in the administrative process." Id. at 495. Accordingly, the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit has decisively held that when the examiner's findings "are supported by a preponderance of the evidence, the action of the Commission in rejecting them is arbitrary." Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F. 2d 786, 790 (7th Cir. 1951); see also Folds v. Federal Trade Commission, 187 F. 2d 658, 661 (7th Cir. 1951); Motor Products Corp. v. National Labor Relations Board, 33 LRRM 2757 (7th Cir. March 29, 1954). And only recently an agency decision which had rejected an examiner's finding of "good faith" was reversed by the Court of Appeals which reinstated the examiner's finding, cautioning that "few findings will not survive" the tests which the administrative agency may validly apply to an examiner's rulings. National Labor Relations Board v. James Thompson & Co., 208 F. 2d 743, 746 (2d Cir. 1953). Only weeks ago, moreover, another court reversed and remanded a Clayton Act proceeding by this Commission, emphasizing the importance of fact finding by hearing examiners who have "lived with the case". Gamble-Skogmo, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 211 F. 2d 106, 114 (8th Cir. 1954). This basic principle received recent firm recognition in the opinion of the Commission majority in General Foods Corporation, Dkt. No. 5675, p. 6 (April 27, 1954), as well as the minority opinion in Metal Lath Manufacturers Association, Dkt. No. 5449, p. 3 (March 3, 1954).

Not only are trial examiners' factual determinations based on intimate familiarity with the facts thus largely immune from reversal by the agency if supported by substantial facts in the record; an examiner's findings acquire even greater dignity when the agency's contrary conclusion also "fails to persuade an experienced member of the Commission who dissents from its findings and conclusions". Minneapolis-Honeywell v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F. 2d 786, 789 (7th Cir. 1951). Here the bare Commission majority responsible for the revised findings and conclusions of January, 1953, is contradicted by a trial examiner's determination deemed entirely complete by the Supreme Court; this determination is enhanced in significance by the detailed dissent of two experienced commissioners who on the basis of an independent review of the record agreed with the examiner, the Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court that all elements of petitioner's good faith meeting of competition defense were fully established. Consequently, the Commission's revised findings and conclusions when tested by the criteria of Universal Camera, Thompson, Minneapolis-Honeywell, and Folds, supra, encroach on the province of hearing examiners, and cannot stand.

In similar circumstances, agencies have taken prompt action to conform their administrative procedures to 420 governing legal principles promulgated by courts subsequent to a given agency ruling. After the Supreme Court in Morgan v. United States, 304 U. S. 1 (1938) had declared full and fair hearings before responsible agency officials a basic prerequisite to valid action, administrative tribunals readily recognized the impact of the decision and conscientiously accommodated their practices to the newly articulated procedural law. The National Labor Relations Board, for example, moved speedily to recall even orders already in the channels of judicial review, to cure all procedural deficiencies exposed by the supervening Supreme Court decision. See, e.g., Ford Motor Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 364, 366 (1939); Inland Steel Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 105 F. 2d 246, 249-250 (7th Cir. 1939). And in the Ford case the Supreme Court expressly commended the agency's diligence and sense of responsibility manifested by its prompt efforts to conform its orders with the Morgan rule.

Peculiarly pertinent here are the Supreme Court's observations in the Ford case that relate to the duties of a responsible administrative agency: "Petitioner had raised a serious question as to the validity of the findings and order. The board properly recognized the gravity of the contention and sought to meet it by voluntarily doing what the court could have compelled". 305 U. S. at 375. That, the Court emphasized, "was in the interest of a prompt disposition." Ibid. Nothing could more forcefully point the path to duty and public responsibility in the present proceeding, which due to the Commission's past legal errors has been bounced back and forth between courts and the Commission for well-nigh 14 years.

VIII.

Conclusion.

As a direct result of the abortive action of the Commission in hurriedly "certifying" this proceeding to the Court of Appeals, petitioner was deprived of a reasonable opportunity to seek re-examination of the Commission's revised findings and conclusions. A sixty-day extension of the due date of any Report of Compliance was granted to petitioner by the Commission on March 23, 1953—and then, only three days later, on March 26, 1953, the Commission took the unprecedented step of "certifying" the proceedings for judicial review to the Court of Appeals, thereby purporting to transfer exclusive jurisdiction to the reviewing court and disabling the Commission from further action. E.g., Ford Motor Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 305 U. S. 364, 368 (1939); In re National Labor Relations Board, 304 U. S. 486, 496 (1938). Petitioner's access to the Commission was thus blocked by the "certification" whose effects were only dissolved by the Court of Appeals' order of January 18, 1954.

Serious legal defects in this proceeding today threaten further judicial reversals and further remands. It is at best doubtful that any valid order is presently extant. The Commission's new cease and desist order faces the challenge that it radically exceeds the bounds fixed by the reviewing court's remand, and the original order is long defunct. Of equal importance, the Commission, entirely irrespective of its changes in membership, has unequivocally altered its official stand on the relation of competitive injury to "good faith", so that its revised "findings" represent a now repudiated legal view. Further, the evident design of the revised "findings" is to circumvent the Supreme Court's ruling. And the Commission in entering its revised "findings" has patently failed to accord proper weight to the trial examiner's findings favorable to petitioner, in utter disregard of unambiguous principles of administrative law.

Petitioner fully acknowledges the Commission's distinguished role as "an independent and continuing statutory body" which, "like the courts, operates prospectively, not retroactively". Chain Institute, Inc., Dkt. No. 4878 (December 28, 1953). Petitioner does not seek reconsideration of the Commission's action because of a change in the agency's membership. However, a direct corollary of the quasi-judicial status occupied by the Commission is a continuing responsibility for official legal action undertaken in the Federal Trade Commission's name. Congress, evidently recognizing this duty, vested the Commission in Section 11 of the Clayton Act with express powers to rectify prior erroneous action.

Petitioner realizes that "the terms of [the Commission's] members were arranged by Congress in a manner to prevent any abrupt dislocations in the discharge of its responsibilities". Chain Institute, Inc., supra. Petitioner as well as reviewing courts expect that the Commis-421 sion's determinations at all times adhere to prevailing law. Any change in the Commission's membership is hence wholly immaterial—petitioner's request addresses itself to legal principles by whomsoever applied. But while changes in the Commission's membership might not legally warrant reconsideration of administrative action, they equally must not defeat a litigant's rights through "abrupt dislocation" or abdication by a continuing tribunal of its continuing duties.

Before this case is again subjected to judicial review, the Commission should consider whether it can in good conscience espouse its orders or "findings" before the reviewing court. Its duty is to entertain this petition, grant petitioner an opportunity to present oral argument, and then take such action as the law and the public interest demand.

Respectfully submitted,
Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
John C. Butler,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Frederick M. Rowe,
of
Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle Street,
Chicago 2, Illinois,
Attorneys for Respondent-Petitioner.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert L. Green,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 80, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

May 14, 1954.

434 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

* * (Caption—4389) * *

ANSWER TO RESPONDENT'S PETITION FOR RECONSIDERATION OF THE COMMISSION'S MODIFIED FINDINGS AS TO THE FACTS AND CONCLUSION, AND MODIFIED ORDER.

I. Preliminary Statement.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Clayton Act, as amended, the Commission on November 29, 1940, issued its complaint in this proceeding charging respondent Standard Oil Company (Indiana), a corporation, with having violated the provisions of Section 2(a) of said Act. The complaint challenged the respondent's practice of granting its tank-car purchasers a lower discriminatory price of 1½c per gallon on the purchase of gasoline than it granted its tank-wagon service station customers in the same trade area. The respondent, among other defenses which are not material here, attempted to defend on the ground that it granted a lower price to its tank-car purchasers in order to meet in good faith equally low prices offered them by competitors.

On October 9, 1945, the Commission made findings as to the facts and conclusions and issued an order to cease and desist. This order was modified in certain respects on August 9, 1946. On October 4, 1946, the respondent filed a petition for review of the Commission's order with the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit. On April 29, 1949, the court issued its decree modifying paragraph 6 of said order and affirmed the order as thus modified. The judgment of the Court of Appeals was vacated by the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals was directed to; and did on February 14, 1951, issue a decree vacating and setting aside its former judgment and remanded the case to the Commission "to make findings in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court filed on January 8, 1951." The Commission, having further considered the matter of respondent's good faith meeting of competition as required by the Supreme Court opinion and in tative modified findings as to the facts and its conclusions drawn therefrom and its modified order on March 24, 1952. Prior to the issuance of final modified findings and order, the Commission issued orders affording the respondent and others an opportunity of presenting their views with respect to the tentative modified findings and order.
435 compliance with the aforesaid opinion, issued its ten-

On May 29, 1952, respondent filed its brief in opposition to the tentative findings and order and on June 30, 1952 counsel supporting the complaint filed a brief in support of said findings and order. On July 7, 1952, respondent presented oral argument in opposition to the tentative findings and order and the brief of counsel supporting the complaint. On January 16, 1953, the Commission issued its modified findings as to the facts and conclusions in which it found that the price differentials allowed by the respondent were not made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. At the same time it also issued an order to cease and desist which was identical to the order recommended in the brief of counsel supporting the complaint filed June 30, 1952.

On March 26, 1953, the Commission certified the modified findings of facts and conclusions and its modified order, together with dissenting opinions, to the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit for review by that Court. On May 19, 1953, the court entered an order receiving the record as certified by the Commission. At this time it also ordered that under remand from the court, the Commission "was without power or authority to issue its 'modified order' dated January 16, 1953," and that such order was "entirely void, but may be considered by this Court as a suggestion by the Commission as to the form of a modification of the original order of said Commission dated August 9, 1946." On August 14, 1953, respondent filed a petition with the court praying that the court vacate its order of May 19, 1953, on the ground that it was without jurisdiction to enter such order and that the cause be remanded to the Commission, and on November 10, 1953, the Commission filed an answer to respondent's petition. Thereafter petitions were filed by other interested parties. On January 18, 1954, the Court of Appeals, denying the various petitions to intervene in this matter, vacated and set aside its order of May 19, 1953, "for the reason that this court was without jurisdiction to enter same."

136 On March 17, 1954, the Commission confirmed the action of the Secretary in signing and dispatching, on March 15, 1954, a letter in answer to respondent's counsel's letter of March 9, 1954, advising that the Commission did not contemplate taking any further adverse action in connection with respendant's compliance report prior to May 15, 1954. On May 14, 1954, respondent filed the petition to which this answer is filed.

II. The Facts.

The respondent, from June 19, 1936, until the issuance of the complaint in this matter in 1940, supplied approximately 17% (R. 3315-16) of the gasoline sold in the Detroit metropolitan area (approximately 90% of which was sold under the brand name Red Crown, R. 108) directly to about 350 retailers, about 150 of which were parties to an exclusive dealing contract with respondent (Comm. Ex. 2), and three "jobbers," Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, and beginning March 7, 1938, to a fourth "jobber," Ned's Auto Supply Company, which had purchased respondent's gasoline at ½¢ per gallon off tank-wagon price from September 1, 1936, until March 7, 1938 (Comm. Ex. 128-A; Resp. Ex. 37 A-C; R. 29, 35-6, 52, 3081, 3247, 3742-3, 3745-6, 3748, 4852-3).

In order to qualify as a "jobber" of respondent it was necessary to: (1) maintain sufficient bulk storage to take delivery of gasoline in tank-car quantities (8,000 to 12,000 gallons) rather than in tank-wagon quantities (700 to 800 gallons) as is customary for service stations; (2) own and operate tank-wagons and other facilities for delivery of gasoline to service stations; (3) have an established business sufficient to insure purchases of from one million to two million gallons of gasoline per year; and (4) have adequate credit responsibility (R. 40). The "jobber" received a 1½¢ discount off the tank-wagon price on its purchases of gasoline from respondent (Comm. Ex. 3 A & B; R. 3230, 4849). The Commission found that this difference was not cost justified. This differential enabled one of these "jobbers," namely Ned's Auto Supply Company, a large gasoline retailer, to resell this gasoline at its own retail stations at substantially lower prices than the established prices at which the respondent's retail service station customers were able to sell such gasoline (R. 262-285, 3209). It enabled another "jobber," Citrin-

Kolb Oil Company, which sold both at wholesale and retail, to sell respondent's gasoline to consumers at a discount of 2¢ per gallon (R. 312) and to pass on as much as 1¢ per gallon of its favored price to independent retailers 437 who also undersold the respondent's retail service station customers (R. 315, 317). The respondent's two other "jobbers" in the Detroit area from time to time sold at both wholesale and retail but their retail sales were made at the standard tank-wagon prices. These four "jobbers" did not sell in competition with the respondent to respondent's retail service station customers, which, as a "captive market," were compelled to purchase their full requirements from the respondent (Comm. Ex. 2; R. 16, 197, 3587). These price discriminations by the respondent in favor of its four "jobbers" led to price-cutting and price-wars at the retail level in the gasoline market of the Detroit area because Ned's and the customers of Citrin-Kolb as well as others undercut the prevailing retail price of gasoline to customers by as much as 2¢ per gallon (Comm. Exs. 29, 30; R. 512-17). The Commission found in its initial findings that this price discrimination gave respondent's four "jobbers" a substantial competitive advantage over its retail service stations who were paying a 1½¢ higher price and that it had resulted and may result in serious injury to competition.

In its modified findings the Commission found that ~~the~~ respondent had not shown that the discriminatory prices allowed these four "jobbers" were lower prices granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. A principal basis for this finding was that the four criteria applied by respondent in determining those customers who were qualified to receive lower prices had no relation to respondent's competitors' prices.

III. Questions Presented.

The only new question presented by respondent is whether the Commission should reopen and reconsider a matter which has been previously adjudicated, upon the ground that there have been changes in the membership and the policy of the Commission. Respondent also argues, in opposition to the tentative modified findings and order, that the findings are not in compliance with the Supreme Court ruling and that the order is invalid.

IV. This Matter Has Been Adjudicated and Should Not Be Reopened.

A. The Modified Findings Are in Compliance With the Supreme Court's Ruling and Present Commission Policy.

The Supreme Court, in its opinion in this case (340 U. S. 231, 242) stated:

438 "* * * that wherever a lawful lower price of a competitor threatens to deprive a seller of a customer, the seller, to retain that customer, may in good faith meet that lower price."

The Supreme Court held, in effect, that the proviso in Section 2(b) protected individual competitors at the expense of injuring competition generally where the seller could show that it had met its competitor's lawful lower price in good faith. It held, as it had in F. T. C. v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Company, 324 U. S. 746, that a good faith showing of meeting a competitor's lower price was available only in individual competitive situations where the competitor's lower price was a lawful lower price and that the burden of showing that the competitor's price was lawful was upon the seller meeting that price.

Good faith includes all of the factors that enter into a business man's thinking and practices in dealing with his customers in relationship to competitive offers which these customers may receive from time to time. In the present case, the Supreme Court left the factors to be considered and the determination of good faith to the discretion of the Commission. The Commission, after much deliberation, determined that for the reasons stated in the modified findings of fact, this respondent had not acted in good faith in granting these lower discriminatory prices.

Respondent maintains that the Commission's modified findings were to the effect that when injury to competitors is shown to exist the good faith defense is barred. On the contrary, the Commission, in accordance with the mandate of the Supreme Court in this case, stated in paragraph 14 of its modified findings that:

"* * * The real question is whether or not the action of the respondent in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank-car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2(b)."

In paragraph 15 of these findings, the Commission stated that it was of > "* * * the opinion that the respondent has not shown that the discriminatory prices allowed Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., were lower prices granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. * * *".

439 This finding was directed specifically to respondent's lack of good faith. At no time since the decision of the Supreme Court in this matter has the Commission indicated any doubt that the good faith defense to meeting a lawful lower price of a competitor, as provided by Section 2(b), is a complete and absolute defense when established by proof.

Respondent contends that the Commission's official policy as stated in a letter dated June 16, 1953, to Senator Langer, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, differs with the policy applied in deciding this matter. In that letter Chairman Howrey, with reference to the pending Capehart bill, stated that:

"The Capehart bill would restate the language of the Robinson-Patman Act to provide for what a majority of the Supreme Court held is the existing law, and it would apply the same standard for competitive pricing to the Federal Trade Commission Act. This bill would permit sellers to meet the lower prices their competitors are offering to their customers, when they do so in good faith, * * *." The Chairman's statement in this letter was in accord both with the Commission's findings and the Supreme Court's opinion in this case. Thus it is clear that the Commission's policy in this connection has not changed since the issuance of the modified findings herein.

Respondent contends that the Commission's findings and order materially and unfairly prejudice it in its competition with its competitors and particularly with its two competitors which are presently charged in complaints by the Commission with unlawful price discriminations similar to those charged in the complaint issued in this matter. Inasmuch as there is no supervening change of law or Commission policy since the issuance of the modified findings in this proceeding, there is no merit to respondent's argument.

B. The Commission's Modified Order is Valid.

Respondent contends that no valid order presently exists because the Court of Appeals, in its intermediate order of May 19, 1953, stated that the Commission was without authority to issue its modified order. The respondent's contention in this connection, however, is not well-founded. As stated by Commissioner Mason in his dissent to the Commission action opposing respondent's petition to remand or to vacate the Court of Appeals' order of May 19, 1953:

440 "* * * If the Commission and Standard saw eye to eye on any one thing when in 1952 this case was here, they agreed that the Commission must issue some order on the bases of its reconsideration of facts compelled by the Supreme Court's mandate. Thus, a finding by the Commission that Standard had met competition in good faith required an order of dismissal, just as a finding against Standard on this issue would have called for reentry of an order to cease and desist. I do not see, therefore, how it consistently can be contended that jurisdiction now lawfully rests in the Court of Appeals when (1) the Court of Appeals struck out our order, although (2) in 1952 everyone agreed that an order must issue; and (3) no one dreamed that the Commission's findings directed by the Supreme Court's remand were to support the Commission's long-buried 1946 order which had, in fact, not only been disapproved and modified by the Court of Appeals in 1949 but also reversed by the Supreme Court in 1951."

As a matter of fact, the respondent argued in its brief (page 4) that "* * * the Commission's 1946 cease and desist order could not survive once the Supreme Court reversed the lower court's ruling * * ." The respondent also admitted the propriety of a new order at page 5 of its brief where it stated that " * * the Commission correctly recognized its duty to re-enter a fresh order after re-examining the case in the light of the Supreme Court's opinion, * * *." The Commission's modified order of January 16, 1953, was issued only after the Commission had deliberated and carefully considered the evidence of record, the briefs of counsel and oral arguments. In issuing this new order the Commission was cognizant of the arguments in opposition to such an order now reiterated by the respondent.

In any event, the Court of Appeals on January 18, 1954, ordered "That the order of this court dated May 19, 1953, be and the same is hereby vacated and set aside, for the reason that this court was without jurisdiction to enter same." Upon the entering of this order the court's order of May 19, 1953, became a nullity and cannot properly be considered in connection with the questions herein presented. The court's order of January 18 is a clear admission not only that the court was without jurisdiction but that juisdiction in this matter rested with the Commission for all purposes.

441 C. This Matter Has Been Adjudicated and Should Not be Reopened.

Modified findings as to the facts, conclusions and order to cease and desist were issued herein only after the Commission had deliberated and carefully considered the record and briefs of counsel and had heard oral arguments in support of an in opposition to the tentative modified findings, conclusions and order. During the course of such deliberation and careful consideration the Commission ruled upon and disposed of numerous contentions of respondent including its argument that the Commission had disregarded the examiner's recommended decision in which he found in effect that the respondent's good faith had been established.

The case was decided by the examiner upon the theory that the meeting of an equally low price of a competitor in good faith is not a defense to a charge of price discrimination where competitive injury is affirmatively shown. Any reference in the examiner's recommended decision that the respondent's price discriminations were made in good faith to meet competition was wholly immaterial to the issue and the theory of his decision. In its initial findings in this matter the Commission adopted the theory advanced by the examiner and concluded as a matter of law that Section 2(b) was not available to the respondent on the basis of the Commission's finding of competitive injury.

The only occasion on which the Commission considered respondent's good faith as a factual issue and made a finding of fact thereon was in the modified findings as to the facts. Having thus considered the facts of record relating to the issue to be resolved pursuant to the direction of the Supreme Court, and having made tentative findings upon that question and afforded respondent a hearing thereon, the Commission made the modified findings on the basis of the record herein in compliance with the Supreme Court's mandate. Thus respondent's objection to these modified findings have previously been thoroughly presented to and considered by the Commission.

Commissioner Mason, in his dissent to the Commission's opposition to respondent's petition to remand, stated that:

"Respondent alternatively wants us to consent to a remand because of a revised interpretation of 'meeting competition' announced by the new majority. The Commission has decided this would open up a floodgate of applications for revision of our cease and desist orders. My motion does not deal with that question. There can 442 be no public or judicial criticism of the Commission when it acts in the sincere belief that what it did was consonant with the law and statute. * * *"

The Commission in effect adopted this statement of Commissioner Mason in the matter of Chain Institute, Inc., et al., Docket 4878, wherein the respondents petitioned the Commission to modify or set aside its findings as to the facts, conclusions and order as previously entered therein upon the ground that there have been changes in the membership of the Commission. In that case Chairman Howrey, speaking for a majority of the Commission, stated:

"It appears to us that the controlling ground offered by respondents in support of the motion is this change in membership.

"We are not disposed to grant a motion predicated principally upon such a ground. The Commission is an independent and continuing statutory body. The terms of its members were arranged by Congress in a manner to prevent any abrupt dislocations in the discharge of its responsibilities.

"More importantly, the Commission, like the courts, operates prospectively, not retroactively. This principle is fundamental, we believe, to our system of law, both administrative and judicial. * * *

"The machinery of the quasi-judicial agency, like the courts, contemplates a continuing process; it looks to current litigation, not past litigation. If our procedures were otherwise, delay and inaction would surround enforcement of the statutes committed to the Commission's jurisdiction. To grant the present motion would be to require a third review of a voluminous record made many years ago." (Emphasis added.)

The Chairman continued by pointing out that although the questions raised by respondents therein were important, the above considerations were overriding. Likewise in this case, although the questions raised by respondent may seem important, the considerations stated by the Chairman override any importance these questions may have. The Commission's refusal to rehear this matter does not prejudice the respondent's right to receive a full hearing on the questions presented in the Court of Appeals.

In the Chain case Commissioner Carretta wrote a separate opinion dissenting in part and concurring in part, in which he pointed out that he could not reach the 443 same conclusion as the majority of the Commission because he felt that at least one ground for appeal cited by the respondents entitled them the privilege of being heard in oral argument. The particular ground referred to was the inclusion of a paragraph in the order to cease and desist on which the respondents had no opportunity to submit arguments to the Commission opposing the inclusion of such a paragraph in the order. Commissioner Carretta pointed out that:

"* * * This opportunity not having been afforded to the respondents and to counsel in support of the complaint by the then existing Commission, it appears to me imperative that the existing Commission should correct such defect in the proceedings. This position I would hold whether or not any change in the personnel of the Commission had occurred between the date of the order of the Commission and the date of filing of the motion for review."

The reasoning applied by Commissioner Carretta in the Chain case is clearly not applicable here because in this case the merits of the proceeding and the proposed order were carefully considered by the Commission after briefs had been filed and respondent had had an opportunity to be heard. There is no change between the findings and order briefed and argued and the findings and order issued by the Commission. Therefore, there is no reason to reopen the proceeding. The Commission should deny respondent's petition for permission to be heard in oral argument in this case for the reason that it has presented no matters which were not before the Commission at the time it made its decision.

The respondent will not be prejudiced by the denial of this petition. Respondent's remedy, if it has one in this proceeding, is provided by Section 11 of the Clayton Act under which the respondent may petition the Court of Appeals for a review of this proceeding.

V. Conclusion.

It is submitted that, for the above stated reasons, the respondent in its petition for reconsideration of the Commission's modified findings as to the facts, conclusions 444 and order to cease and desist failed to make such showing as would justify the Commission to reopen or rehear this matter.

Respectfully submitted,
/s/ L. E. Creel, Jr.,
/s/ J. Wallace Adair,
Counsel Supporting the Complaint.

Everette MacIntyre,
Chief, Division of Investigation and Litigation.

Joseph E. Sheehy,
Director,
Bureau of Antimonopoly.

577 UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

BEFORE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Commissioners:

Edward F. Howrey, Chairman
Lowell B. Mason
James M. Mead
John W. Gwynne
Robert T. Secrest

* * (Caption—4389) * *

ORDER DENYING RESPONDENT'S PETITION FOR RECONSIDERATION.

This matter coming on to be heard by the Commission upon the respondent's petition for reconsideration of the modified findings as to the facts, conclusion, and modified order to cease and desist issued in this proceeding on January 16, 1953, and the answer to said petition filed by counsel in support of the complaint, and upon briefs in support of the petition, filed on behalf of Empire State Petroleum Association, Inc., Ohio Petroleum Marketers Association, Inc., Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and National Oil Jobbers Council, Inc., and brief in opposition thereto, filed on behalf of National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc., and

The Commission being of the opinion that the principles and considerations set forth in its decision rendered December 28, 1953, disposing of certain motions for modification or setting aside of findings as to the facts, conclusion, and order to cease and desist in the matter of Chain Institute, Inc., et al., Docket No. 4878, are equally applicable to and govern the disposition of the pending petition:

578 It Is Ordered that the respondent's petition for reconsideration of the modified findings as to the facts, conclusion, and modified order to cease and desist issued in this proceeding on January 16, 1953, be, and it hereby is, denied.

By the Commission.

Robert M. Parrish,
Secretary.

(Seal)

Issued: January 7, 1955.

580 IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

For the Seventh Circuit.

No. ....

Standard Oil Company, Petitioner, vs. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent.	No. 11409

PETITION TO REVIEW AND SET ASIDE ORDER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

(Filed March 7, 1955. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.)

To the Honorable Judges of the United States Court of Appeals, for the Seventh Circuit:

Your petitioner, Standard Oil Company, brings this action under the provisions of Section 11 of the Clayton Act (15 U. S. C. § 21) to review and set aside the order of the Federal Trade Commission, and respectfully shows:

I.

Jurisdiction and Venue.

Petitioner is a corporation, organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of Indiana, with its principal office and place of business located at 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Petitioner is engaged, among other things, in the business of refining and distributing gasoline and other petroleum products.

Respondent, Federal Trade Commission, is a federal administrative agency created by Act of Congress.

This proceeding is brought by petitioner under Section 11 of the Clayton Act. Venue is based upon the provision of that section permitting any person, required by an order of the Federal Trade Commission to cease and desist, to obtain judicial review by filing a written petition with the Court of Appeals within the Circuit wherein such person resides or carries on business or wherein the violation is claimed to have been or is being committed. Petitioner's corporate domicile and its principal business office are both within the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, and it carries on business within this circuit.

II.

Preliminary Statement.

This petition follows upon the refusal of the Federal Trade Commission to reconsider its cease and desist order entered January 16, 1953, following receipt of the mandates of the Supreme Court and this Court.

The Commission in March, 1953, attempted to "certify" its order for this Court's review. Upon petitioner's showing that "certification" could not legally confer review jurisdiction, and that the Commission in any event must 581 re-examine its order in the light of its own change of policy as to prevailing law, this Court in January, 1954, remanded the case to the Commission. The Commission now has refused to reconsider its order, although it publicly announced a vital change of policy with respect to the meaning and proper interpretation of the applicable statute after its order was issued and would not enter a similar order in a comparable case today. Hence petitioner must seek recourse to this Court.

This petition is chiefly directed at the refusal of the Commission to hold that petitioner fully established its meeting competition defense under Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended (15 U. S. C., Sec. 13). The Commission made the factual finding that

> "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to [the four jobber customers] it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case * * *"

But a majority of the Commission (Commissioners Mason and Carretta dissenting) deemed this showing inadequate, and once again nullified petitioner's statutory meeting competition defense on virtually the same legal grounds as those previously rejected by the Supreme Court.

III.

Concise History of the Proceedings.

The Federal Trade Commission initiated proceedings in 1940 to invalidate certain price reductions granted by petitioner in the 1930's to four jobber customers in Detroit, Michigan, alleging them to be illegal discriminations under Section 2 of the Clayton Act. These jobber customers took delivery in tank car quantities at their own bulk plants, and transported the gasoline in their own tank wagons to retail service stations owned and operated by themselves or others. The core of the Commission's complaint charged that between 1936 and 1940 petitioner sold gasoline to these four jobber customers in tank car quantities at prices 1½¢ per gallon lower than the tank wagon prices charged to Detroit retail dealer customers who purchased smaller quantities delivered by petitioner directly to their retail service stations.

The evidence showed that the lower prices granted to these four customers in every instance represented only good faith efforts to meet lower price offers of competing gasoline suppliers. On the basis of this evidence, petitioner contended that its price reductions were lawful under the provisions of Section 2 (a) and (b).

Hearings before a Federal Trade Commission trial examiner were held between 1941 and 1943. The examiner concluded that petitioner's challenged price reductions were at all times granted to meet equally low prices offered 582 by petitioner's competitors on branded gasoline of comparable grade and quality. The examiner, nevertheless, rejected petitioner's Section 2(b) defense, holding the defense unavailable, as a matter of law, due to supposed "injury to competition" among resellers. As a result, he recommended that an order should issue prohibiting such price reductions in the future.

The Commission sustained the examiner's legal theory. But whereas the examiner had squarely determined that petitioner's price reductions in fact constituted in each instance meeting of a competitor's equally low price in order to retain its customer's business, the Commission refused to enter findings on this issue on the theory that the "meeting competition" defense was not available to petitioner as a matter of law. A cease and desist order was accordingly entered against petitioner on October 9, 1945, and modified on August 9, 1946.

On March 11, 1949, this Court affirmed the Commission's order, though modifying it in some respects.

It is significant that this Court in its 1949 opinion concluded that "There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that [petitioner] made its low price [to the four jobbers] in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor"; that this showing, "we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out"; and that "While the Commission made no finding on this point, it assumed its existence but held * * * that this was not a defense" (173 F. 2d 210, 213, 214, 216).* Nevertheless this Court upheld the Commission theory that the defense was not available as a matter of law.

The Supreme Court in 1951 reversed, squarely upholding the legal sufficiency of petitioner's defense "that, under the Act, the lower price to the jobbers was justified if it was made to retain each of them as a customer and in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." The Supreme Court's opinion noted that the trial examiner "in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense, and yet the Commission refuses, as a matter of law, to give them consideration." Accordingly the Supreme Court remanded the case to this Court with instructions to remand further to the Federal Trade Commission for entry of the omitted findings on the issue of good faith meeting of competition, in conformity with its opinion.

Despite this judicial directive, the Commission on remand once again nullified the meeting competition defense, to all intents and purposes on the basis that it was not available to petitioner as a matter of law. After holding the judicial mandate under advisement from February 14, 1951, until Januar 16, 1953, the Commission reissued findings of fact and conclusions. Its previous legal supposition as to "injury to competition" was reaffirmed. However, the Commission expressly made the following finding of fact:

583 "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to [the four job> ber customers] it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case * * *"

---

* Emphasis added.

But the three majority Commissioners went on to announce a legal theory designed to circumvent this conclusive finding of fact so as again to nullify petitioner's meeting competition defense. As noted above, the Supreme Court had previously overruled the Commission's earlier interpretation that asserted "injury to competition" made the meeting competition defense unavailable as a matter of law. Yet the three majority Commissioners this time announced that their legal conclusion, of competitive "injury", was sufficient to negative petitioner's "good faith" in meeting its competitors' equally low prices, therefore making the meeting competition defense still unavailable as a matter of law. Although the factual showing of good faith was not controverted, the Commission, nevertheless, invalidated petitioner's statutory defense on substantially the same legal theory the Supreme Court had ruled out. In a detailed and comprehensive dissent two Commissioners concluded that petitioner's meeting competition defense was decisively made out on the factual record.

Simultaneously with this renewed effort to destroy petitioner's meeting competition defense, the Commission recast its order to cease and desist. It rephrased one paragraph of its order which this Court in 1949 had modified—apparently trying to meet anticipated objections that it compelled illegal resale price fixing. Further, whereas all previous orders reached only the particular pricing practices at issue in the proceedings, this most recent order deleted all prior provisos so as to proscribe all price differentials of any kind and anywhere, irrespective of market impact or competitive effect. Petitioner protested the arbitrariness of the Commission's actions as flouting the judicial mandate but to no avail.

The Secretary of the Commission by letter dated March 26, 1953, addressed to the Clerk of this Court advised of the "certification' for judicial review of the modified findings and order entered by the Commission on January 16, 1953. Petitioner objected to the Clerk that judicial review of agency action could not be had in such unorthodox manner.

This 1953 cease and desist order was promptly set aside by this Court. On May 19, 1953, the Court declared the Commission "without power or authority to issue its 'modified order' dated January 16, 1953" under the judicial mandates. Consequently, this order was ruled "entirely void."

But because this Court retained jurisdiction to review the Commission's findings, petitioner requested the Court to remand the cause to the Commission or, alternatively, to vacate the Court's action of May 19, 1953. On January 18, 1954, the Court in a memorandum decision sustained petitioner's position and vacated its previous order of May 19, 1953, on jurisdictional grounds, admonishing 584 the Commission that future judicial review of its orders was obtainable only by strict adherence to the review provisions of the Clayton Act.

Petitioner again called upon the Commission to reconsider its rejection of the meeting competition defense in defiance of the judicial mandates. In addition, petitioner pointed out that this statutory interpretation was incompatible and irreconcilable with more recent policy pronouncements by the Commission itself. The Commission's new policy—expressly repudiating the views of the former three majority Commissioners who rejected petitioner's defense in this case—acknowledged that meeting a competitor's lower price in good faith "is the essence of competition and must be permitted in a free economy." Petitioner on these and other grounds urged the Commission to re-examine this case under prevailing legal standards, so as to accord petitioner equal legal treatment with its competitors, avert further judicial censure, and move this fifteen-year-old litigation toward a just and speedy end.

The Commission deliberated the matter nearly eight months, meanwhile having authorized interested parties to file briefs as to the merits. By order dated January 7, 1955, the Commission denied petitioner's request in its entirety, without oral hearing.

Hence this petition for judicial review and relief.

IV.

Grounds for Relief.

Petitioner's request for relief is based on the grounds that:

1. The Commission failed to sustain petitioner's meeting competition defense and dismiss the proceeding after it expressly found that

> "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to [the four jobber customers] it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case * * *"

2. Notwithstanding this acknowledgment that petitioner's price reductions were in fact granted in a good faith effort to retain its customers, the Commission again resorts to virtually the same legal theory which the Supreme Court reversed. Such action by the Commission is invalid under the opinion and mandate of the Supreme Court.

3. The Commission's ruling is unsupported by the evidence, is contrary to the trial examiner's finding supported by two dissenting Commissioners, and is contrary to this Court's previous conclusion (quoted at page 5, supra) that the record established petitioner's good faith meeting of a competitor's equally low price.

4. This record can sustain no finding other than of petitioner's good faith in meeting its competitors' equally low prices.

585 5. Petitioner's price reductions did not have the effect of "injuring" competition within the meaning of the statute.

6. The Commission issued an enlarged order to cease and desist, in excess of its authority under the Clayton Act and the judicial mandates.

7. This enlarged order contains a provision which compels petitioner to engage in resale price fixing with independent jobber customers, thereby compelling conduct illegal under the anti-trust laws.

8. The Commission failed to dismiss these proceedings as based upon a fifteen-year-old record that is stale and no longer responsive to present conditions.

9. The Commission arbitrarily refused to apply currently prevailing legal interpretations to this pending case.

10. The Commission has once again misapplied the price discrimination provisions in the amended Clayton Act so as to conflict with the objectives of anti-trust policy expressed in the Sherman Act, and to deny to petitioner the right guaranteed to it under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution to meet competition.

V.

Relief Prayed.

Wherefore, petitioner prays that this Court review the action of the Federal Trade Commission, enter a decree setting aside the agency's findings, conclusions, and order issued on January 16, 1953, as well as directing the Commission to dismiss its complaint against petitioner, and to award such further or alternative relief as the Court now deems equitable and just.

Dated: March 7, 1955.

Respectfully submitted,

Standard Oil Company, Petitioner,
Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Frederick M. Rowe,
of Kirkland, Fleming, Green, Martin & Ellis,
33 North La Salle St.,
Chicago 2, Illinois,
Attorneys for Petitioner.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert L. Green,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 8, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

586 UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS.

* * (Caption—11409) * *

Thursday, June 2, 1955.

Before: Hon. H. Nathan Swain, Circuit Judge.

On consideration of the motion and affidavit of counsel for petitioner, not objected to by counsel for respondent, it is ordered as follows:

1. That upon petitioner filing with the Clerk of this Court a minimum of five sets of the printed record in the case of Standard Oil Company, Petitioner vs. Federal Trade Commission, Respondent, United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, Case No. 9215, that said printed record in the aforesaid case No. 9215 be considered and made a part of the printed record in the instant and above-captioned case No. 11409, without the necessity of reprinting any portion of said printed record in case No. 9215; and that all parties be permitted to cite and refer to any portion of said printed record in their oral arguments, in their briefs and in any other proceedings in this Court or upon appeal or certiorari in the United States Supreme Court, the same as if said printed record in case No. 9215 had been reprinted as part of the printed record in the instant case.

2. That the Clerk of this Court be directed in the printing of any additional part of the record designated or to be designated by the parties hereto to print such additional record as may be designated by the parties in a separate volume designated as Volume 8, and paginated to continue the pagings of Volumes 1 to 7 of the printed record in case No. 9215.

587 3. That for the convenience of this Court, regardless of the order of designation of the additional record to be printed contained in the designations of the various parties hereto, the Clerk of this Court in supervising said printing cause such additional record to be printed in chronological order according to the filing dates of the various documents and proceedings designated.

588 In the United States Court of Appeals.

* * * (Caption—11409) * * *

DESIGNATION OF STANDARD OIL COMPANY, PETITIONER, OF ADDITIONAL PORTIONS OF THE RECORD TO BE CONTAINED IN THE PRINTED RECORD.

Standard Oil Company, petitioner herein, after taking into consideration the record heretofore printed in the former review of these proceedings in Case No. 9215 of this Court, designates the following additional portions of the recertified transcript of the record after remand filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission in this cause, to be contained in the printed record to be printed by the Clerk of this Court pursuant to Rules 14(b) and 14(f) of this Court:

1. Certification of Robert M. Parrish, Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission, relative to records recertified by said Commission in Federal Trade Commission case Docket No. 4389, said certificate being dated April 13, 1955.

2. Order granting respondent leave to present objections to modified findings as to the facts, issued March 24, 1952, appearing at page 1 of the recertified transcript.

589 3. Order to show cause why modified order to cease and desist should not be further modified, issued March 24, 1952, and appearing at page 34 of said recertified transcript.

4. Statement of Commissioner Mason with regard to the proposed modified findings as to the facts and conclusion, and order to show cause why modified order to cease and desist should not be further modified, appearing at page 36 of said recertified transcript.

5. Statement of respondent's objections to procedure, findings, conclusion, and modified order of Federal Trade Commission, filed May 29, 1952, and appearing at page 131 of said recertified transcript.

6. Modified findings as to the facts and conclusion, issued January 16, 1953, and appearing at page 284 of said recertified transcript. These modified findings as to the facts and conclusion are identical with those set forth beginning at page 3 of said recertified transcript, and the latter have, therefore, not been designated in order to avoid duplication.

7. Modified order to cease and desist issued January 16, 1953, appearing at page 315 of said recertified transcript.

8. Dissenting opinion of Commissioner Lowell B. Mason issued January 16, 1953, and appearing at page 318 of said recertified transcript.

9. Dissenting opinion of Commissioner Albert A. Carretta issued January 16, 1953, and appearing at page 320 of said recertified transcript.

590 10. Petition of Standard Oil Company dated and filed May 14, 1954, appearing at page 351 of said recertified transcript.

11. Order denying respondent's petition for reconsideration issued January 7, 1955, and appearing at page 525 of said recertified transcript.

The petitioner further designates the following additional documents and portions of the record, not included in the recertified transcript of the Federal Trade Commission and not heretofore contained in the printed record in Case 9215, to be contained in and added to the printed record:

12. Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Case 9215, dated March 11, 1949 (173 F. (2d) 210).

13. Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on the aforesaid opinion in Case 9215, dated March 11, 1949.

14. The final decree of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit in Case No. 9215, dated April 29, 1949.

15. Opinion and dissenting opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States issued January 8, 1951 (340 U. S. 231).

16. Mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States issued January 8, 1951, reversing the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit and remanding said cause to said Court with instructions to remand to the Federal Trade Commission.

17. Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit dated February 14, 1951, in Case 591 9215, vacating its former judgment and remanding to the Federal Trade Commission with instructions.

18. Attempted recertification of record to this Court in Case 9215 by letter of Secretary of Federal Trade Commission to the Clerk of this Court under date of March 26, 1953, together with dissent of Commissioner Mason to Commission's procedure. (This letter and Commissioner Mason's attached dissent were not a part of the transcript recertified by the Commission on April 13, 1955, and are therefore presumed to be a part of this court's record in Case 9215.)

19. Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit issued May 19, 1953, in Case 9215, relative to attempted recertification by the Federal Trade Commission.

20. Petition of Standard Oil Company filed with this Court on October 14, 1953, in Case 9215, to vacate the aforesaid order of May 19, 1953, and remand the proceedings to the Commission.

21. Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit issued January 18, 1954, in Case 9215,

22. Petition of Standard Oil Company to review and set aside order of the Federal Trade Commission filed in the United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, as Case No. 11409 on March 7, 1955.

23. Any order which may be issued by the United States Court of Appeals, Seventh Circuit, in Case No. 11409 relative to preservation and use of printed record in Case 9215, without necessity for reprinting of same.

592 24. This designation dated May 25, 1955.

Standard Oil Company,
Petitioner,
By Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Frederick M. Rowe,
Its Attorneys.

Dated: May 25, 1955.

Proof of Service.

The undersigned W. H. Van Oosterhout, one of the attorneys for the petitioner herein, upon oath deposes and says that he served a true and correct copy of the above designation upon the Federal Trade Commission by depositing such copy in the United States mail chute at 33 North La Salle Street, Chicago, Illinois, on May 25, 1955, in an envelope, postage prepaid, addressed to Robert B. Dawkins, Counsel for Federal Trade Commission,

....

Washington 25, D. C.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of May, 1955.

....

Notary Public.

593 Endorsed: In the United States Court of Appeals. * * (Caption—11409) * * Designation of Standard Oil Company, Petitioner, of additional portions of the record to be contained in the printed record. Filed May 26, 1955. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.

594 IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS.

* * (Caption—11409) * *

DESIGNATION BY RESPONDENT FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION OF ADDITIONAL PORTION OF THE TRANSCRIPT TO BE CONTAINED IN THE PRINTED RECORD.

(Filed June 2, 1955. Kenneth J. Carrick, Clerk.)

Comes now the Federal Trade Commission, respondent herein, and, after taking into account the portions of the transcript designated for printing by petitioner, hereby designates the following additional portion of the transcript filed by the Secretary of the Federal Trade Commission in this cause to be contained in the record to be printed by the Clerk of this court pursuant to Rule 14(b):

Answer by counsel supporting complaint to petition of Standard Oil Company for reconsideration of the Commission's modified findings and order, dated May 24, 1954, appearing at page 381 of the recertified transcript.

Respectfully submitted,

Federal Trade Commission,
By Robert B. Dawkins,
Assistant General Counsel.

Dated May 31, 1955.

5495 In the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

No. 11409. October Term, 1955, April Session, 1956

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, PETITIONER

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

PETITION FOR REVIEW OF ORDER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Before DUFFY, Chief Judge, MAJOR and LINDLEY, Circuit Judges

Opinion

May 3, 1956

MAJOR, Circuit Judge. This proceeding originated in a complaint filed by respondent against petitioner on November 29, 1940, charging a violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (49 Stat. 1526; 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 13, as amended). The case is now here on petition by Standard to review a modified order to cease and desist, issued by the Commission against Standard January 16, 1953. The proceeding has long been before the Commission and the courts, and a number of the original contested issues have been adjudicated. In fact, on the present review there are only two contested issues which, as stated by the Commission, are: (1) whether the Commission correctly concluded that petitioner failed to establish that its lower price was made in "good faith" to meet the equally low price of a competitor within the meaning of Section 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, and (2) whether the revised order to cease and edsist is warranted by the findings and properly issued.

As subsequently shown, we conclude that the first issue 5496 must be decided adversely to the Commission, which renders the second issue of no consequence.

The Commission's original cease and desist order was before this court for review, wherein its enforcement, with some modification, was allowed with judgment accordingly. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 173 F. 2d 210. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, with instructions to this court to remand the case to the Commission to make findings in conformity with its opinion. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231. A history of the proceeding has previously been set forth in detail both by this and the Supreme Court and need not be repeated here except insofar as it relates to the question now for decision. Also except for the same purpose, we need not be concerned with issues previously raised and decided by the Supreme Court.

Petitioner's sales of gasoline about which the "good faith" defense revolves were made to four customers, classified by petitioner as jobbers, namely, Ned's Auto Supply Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and Wayne Company. The Commission took the position originally that the "good faith" defense was not available to petitioner and, therefore, made no findings relative thereto. This court agreed with the Commissioner's position on that issue and affirmed. It was on this issue, however, that the Supreme Court reversed and remanded.

In response to the remandment the Commission from the original record made its modified findings, which conclude with the statement:

> "For the reasons stated, the Commission is of the opinion that the respondent has not shown that the discriminatory prices allowed [naming the four customers involved] were lower prices granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. The Commission, therefore, finds that the burden imposed upon the respondent by Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, has not been sustained and that the price discriminations referred to in these findings have not been justified." [1]

5497 Whether the decision of the Commission under the attending circumstances represents a finding of fact or a conclusion of law is of importance. We are of the view that it falls within the latter category, and this notwithstanding the statement in Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co. et al., 324 U. S. 746, 758:

> "Congress has left to the Commission the determination of fact in each case whether the person, charged with making discriminatory prices, acted in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence is for the Commission."

---

[1] Two Commissioners, based upon the findings of the Trial Examiner, dissented and expressed the view that the complaint against petitioner should be dismissed.

The Commission in its brief appears to recognize that its decision on this critical issue is a conclusion of law (for example, see Commission's statement of contested issues, supra). Certainly there is no dispute as to the evidentiary facts as found by the Examiner in the original proceeding. Referring thereto, the Commission in its brief states, "Here the facts as such are not in dispute, it is simply a matter of applying the law to the facts." Moreover, the Commission's decision on the "good faith" issue is the result of its process of reasoning, legal in nature, a portion of which, as we shall subsequently show, has been repudiated by the Supreme Court. Such being the case, the weight to be attached to its decision is dependent upon the reasoning by which it is reached.

Prior to a discussion of the Commission's findings now under review, we think it pertinent to observe that petitioner's good faith has been either recognized or assumed at all levels during the course of this protracted proceeding. Certainly the Examiner so found. (See footnote 7, page 238 of the Supreme Court opinion.) The Commission in its original findings took no issue with its Examiner on this score but concluded as a matter of law that the "good faith" defense was not available "in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy and prevent competition with the retail stations operated by the said named dealers and with stations operated by their retailer-customers." In fact, there is good reason to think that the Commission at that time acquiesced in petitioner's contention that the sales in controversy were made in good faith. This court in reviewing that record (173 F. 2d 210, 216) stated:

"The showing made here by the petitioner that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competi- 5498 tion, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out. The effect of it was to rebut the prima facie case made by the Commission's proof of the petitioner's discriminatory prices. If nothing further appeared in this record, the case might well have ended there."

This court also stated (page 213):

"There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner made its low price to Ned's Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor."

The Supreme Court stated (page 238):

"Petitioner presented evidence tending to prove that its tank-car price was made to each 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor."

After quoting from the findings of the Trial Examiner (footnote on same page), the same court on the following page, referring to the evidence, stated that it, "if accepted, would have established a complete defense to the charge of unlawful discrimination."

Moreover, in the findings now under review the Commission does not expressly repudiate the findings of the Examiner in the original proceeding that petitioner's reduction in price was granted to meet the equally low prices offered by competitors. The Commission, after a detailed discussion relative to the situation existing between petitioner and each of the four jobbers in controversy, states:

"It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman and continued to refuse the tank-car price to Ned's Auto Supply Company it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case, for all of these concerns, except Ned's Auto Supply Company, had already been recognized as entitled to the tank-car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it within the range where it was likely to be so recognized by a 5499 major oil company at any time." It thus appears evident even under this revised version of petitioner's situation that it was confronted with the problem of reducing its price to meet competitive offers or of forfeiting the business of the four jobbers.

An attempt to enter into a discussion of all of the ramifications contained in the Commission's reasoning and argument in support of its decision against the "good faith" defense would unduly prolong this opinion. We shall, therefore, limit our discussion to a few of the more salient points as contained in the modified findings. The Commission found:

"At all relevant times, respondent knew or had the means of knowing and should have known that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers who bought such gasoline at different prices and resold it in competition with one another."

This is the same theory upon which the Commission's previous order was bottomed and which was expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court (pages 249–250).

The Commission found:

"It [petitioner] also knew or should have known that the price differences which it granted could not be justified on the basis of differences in the cost of manufacture, sale and delivery resulting from differing methods or quantities in which its gasoline was sold or delivered."

We think this statement is irrelevant to the instant issue. A cost justification defense is available under Section 2 (a), but it is separate and distinct from the "good faith" defense provided in 2 (b). Both defenses were originally invoked by petitioner but the cost justification defense was abandoned (see footnote 2, Supreme Court opinion, page 234).

The Commission found that the Robinson-Patman amendment to the Clayton Act imposed upon petitioner "the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute." This reasoning also appears to have been dispelled by the Supreme Court, which discusses the changes produced by the amendment and concludes with the statement, "None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense." It would thus appear that a "good faith" defense available under the Clayton Act would still be available under the amended Act. If petitioner's pricing policy was lawful prior to the amendment the same policy was lawful afterward. Such being the case, the mere fact that it did not change its policy is of little, if any, consequence.

The sole contention of the Commission which has any semblance of merit, in fact the only contention which it is entitled to make in view of the Supreme Court decision, is that petitioner adhered to a pricing system in reducing its prices to the four jobbers and that as a result the "good faith" defense cannot prevail. We suspect, as petitioner asserts, that this contention was an afterthought on the part of the Commission, advanced in an attempt to bring the case within the rule of such cases as Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co. et al., 324 U. S. 746, Corn Products Refining Co. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726, and Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute et al., 333 U. S. 683.

Apropos to this contention the Commission found that with one exception "all of the discriminations in price involved in this proceeding were made pursuant to respondent's established method of pricing. They were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale which were made to meet lower prices of competitors, but represented only the continued application of the pricing standard previously adopted by respondent and followed by it since long before 1936."

We are not persuaded as to the accuracy of the statement contained in this quotation. The Commission, after finding that petitioner had a "method" of pricing, proceeds in its brief to a "policy" and from that to a "system." In its brief it states that petitioner had a "pricing system," irrespective of the words used to describe it. Obviously this characterization by the Commission is designed to bring the case within the scope of the system condemned by the Supreme Court in Staley and kindred cases. This effort must fail. The system described and condemned in Corn Products, later in Staley, and still later in Cement, bears not the slightest resemblance to the pricing system which the Commission purports to detect in the instant situation. 5501 The basing point system under scrutiny in those cases was labeled by the Supreme Court as unlawful and was employed by many and in some instances all members of the same industry. The system involved freight absorption and the collection of phantom freight. The system was utilized to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices. The system as pointed out in the Cement case eliminated all price competition and resulted in the sale of the product by all dealers at any given point at identical prices and terms. The gist of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in those cases was that the pricing system being illegal all prices determined thereby were illegal. It follows, according to such reasoning, that the meeting by the seller of a competitor's unlawful price precludes the seller from reliance upon a "good faith" defense.

It is interesting and highly significant that the statute employs the language, "made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor," but that the Supreme Court in the instant case adds the word "lawful," so that it reads, "made in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor" (pages 238 and 246). We do not know, of course, why the Supreme Court added the word "lawful," but we strongly suspect that it was for the purpose of giving emphasis to its previous decisions that a "good faith" defense was not available to a seller who had met an unlawful price. In this connection, it is also pertinent to note that in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful. Moreover, we are unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that petitioner's prices "were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale." The record affirmatively demonstrates to the contrary. Petitioner sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer. Petitioner had 362 Detroit customers, only four of which purchased at prices reduced from its uniform tank-wagon price.

The bargaining and haggling which took place between petitioner and the four involved "wholesalers" prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system.
5502 For instance, petitioner over many years refused to give Ned's, its "most valuable tank-wagon customer," any reduction at all despite persistent demands based upon competitive offers. Its reluctant grant of a ½¢ reduction in 1936, increased to 1½¢ in 1938 in response to an "ultimatum" by Ned's, would appear to dispel completely any idea that such reduction in price was systematic, as urged by the Commission. The Commission appears to discern something sinister in the fact that a reseller might obtain the tank car price only if it maintained a bulk plant with facilities for accepting delivery of gasoline in tank car quantities; had a business in excess of one million gallons of gasoline annually; had distribution equipment and adequate credit standing. Relative to making a reduced price to a large customer, the Supreme Court in this case stated (page 249):

"For example, if a large customer requests his seller to meet a temptingly lower price offered to him by one of his seller's competitors, the seller may well find it essential, as a matter of business survival, to meet that price rather than to lose the customer."

We think that a seller must be permitted in the exercise of a sound judgment to determine when and under what circumstances it will reduce its price in order to meet that of a competitor; and a right to require that a purchaser be possessed of the facilities for storing, handling and distributing the product. The law did not require petitioner to reduce prices in any instance, it only authorized it to do so under the limitation imposed. Petitioner had the same right to reduce its price in order to retain a customer as it did to refuse to reduce with the risk of losing a customer. The "good faith" defense would be meaningless if the seller was required, as the Commission appears to indicate, to reduce its price alike to all customers regardless of the quantity in which they buy, their facilities for handling the product and their ability to pay.

Finally, the Commission finds that the "good faith" defense is not available to petitioner because its "competitors, including the three against whom similar charges of price discriminations are pending, might also defend their similar price differences on the ground of meeting respondent's equally low prices or the equally low prices of other competitors. The Commission does not construe the words 'in good faith' 5503 in Section 2 (b) as permitting that result." We are not able to discern any logic in such reasoning. Evidently from the quoted statement the Commission does not know whether three of petitioner's competitors, against whom are pending charges of price discrimination, will invoke the "good faith" defense. If they should, it will be time enough to cross that bridge when it is reached. Moreover, we know of no reason why a competitor of petitioner should not have the right to meet petitioner's price or that of any other competitor providing, of course, it did so in good faith. It is strange reasoning that one seller should be deprived of the defense provided in 2 (b) because some other seller might also invoke its protection.

In our judgment and we so hold, petitioner's "good faith" defense was firmly established, and the Commission's reasoning by which it reached a contrary conclusion is untenable and must be rejected. A decree will be entered vacating and setting aside its findings, conclusions and order issued January 16, 1953.

5504 In United States Court of Appeals For the Seventh Circuit

Before Hon. F. RYAN DUFFY, Chief Judge; Hon. J. EARL MAJOR, Circuit Judge, Hon. WALTER C. LINDLEY, Circuit Judge

No. 11409.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, PETITIONER

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

PETITION FOR REVIEW OF ORDER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Judgment

May 3, 1956

This cause came on to be heard on the Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission and the transcript of the record from the Federal Trade Commission, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the findings, conclusions and order issued by the Federal Trade Commission on January 16, 1953, be vacated and set aside.

5505 [Clerk's certificate to foregoing transcript omitted in printing.]

5506 Supreme Court of the United States

No. —, OCTOBER TERM, 1956

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

Order extending time to file petition for writ of certiorari

July 21, 1956

Upon consideration of the application of counsel for petitioner,

5504

It is ordered that the time for filing petition for writ of certiorari in the above-entitled cause be, and the same is hereby, extended to and including September 29, 195[illegible].

STANLEY REED,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Dated this twenty-first day of July, 1956.

5508 Supreme Court of the United States

No. 465, OCTOBER TERM, 1956

[Title omitted.]

Order allowing certiorari

Filed December 17, 1956

The petition herein for a writ of certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit is granted.

And it is further ordered that the duly certified copy of the transcript of the proceedings below which accompanied the petition shall be treated as though filed in response to such writ.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1957

Office Supreme Court, U
FILED
SEP 28 1956
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

No. 465

In the Supreme Court of the United States

P

October Term, 1956

Federal Trade Commission, petitioner
v.
Standard Oil Company

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General,
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General,
Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.

EARL W. KINTNER,
General Counsel,
ROBERT B. DAWKINS,
Assistant General Counsel,
Federal Trade Commission,
Washington 25, D. C.

INDEX

Page
Opinion below 1
Jurisdiction 1
Question presented 2
Statute involved 2
Statement 3
Reasons for granting the writ 7
Conclusion 17
Appendix 18–30

CITATIONS

Cases:
  C. E. Niehoff & Co., ~~51 F. T. C. D~~ 17
  Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726 8, 13
  E. Edelmann & Co., ~~51 F. T. C. D~~ 17
  Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 9, 11, 13, 16, 17
  Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 9, 11, 12, 13, 17
  Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 9
  Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470 9
  Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 173 F. 2d 210, 340 U. S. 231 6, 8, 15
Statute:
  Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, Section 2, 15 U. S. C. 13 2, 3, 7, 11, 12, 17

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1956

No.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

The Solicitor General, on behalf of the Federal Trade Commission, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment entered in the above case by the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit on May 3, 1956, which set aside an order issued by the Federal Trade Commission.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals (Appendix, infra, p. 18) is reported at 233 F. 2d 649.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals (Appendix, infra, p. 29) was entered on May 3, 1956. The time for filing a petition for writ of certiorari was extended by Mr. Justice Reed on July 21, 1956, to September 29, 1956 (Appendix, infra, p. 29). The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. 1254 (1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Under Section 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, a seller may defend against a charge of illegal price discrimination by showing that his lower price was granted in "good faith" to meet the equally low price of a competitor. The question presented is whether the "good faith" defense can be used to justify a lower price regularly granted to certain large customers pursuant to a long established and inherently discriminatory pricing policy maintained by the seller and by major competitors.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. 13, provides in part:

* * * * *

> (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: * * *

* * * * *

(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

* * * * *

STATEMENT

The complaint issued by the Federal Trade Commission in this case (R. 2–5) charged the respondent Standard Oil Company with price discrimination in the sale of gasoline in the Detroit metropolitan area in violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. 13. It was alleged that Standard, since the date of the Robinson-Patman Act, had regularly sold at "tank-car" prices to four large reseller accounts (each of which made substantial retail sales) while selling at higher "tank-wagon" prices to numerous other reseller accounts (approximately 350 retail service stations) in the same area. It was also alleged that the effect of the discrimination had been, and "may be," to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with each of the four reseller accounts who obtained the benefit of the lower prices (R. 3).

By its answer (R. 5–28), Standard admitted the price differential (R. 11), but sought to justify it on the ground that the function performed by the four large resellers—called "jobber" accounts by Standard—was essentially different from that performed by the other resellers (R. 12–13). The answer alleged that it was Standard's "general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers" (R. 13); that Standard employed fixed criteria for making this classification (R. 13–14); that the four resellers receiving the "tank-car" price met these criteria (R. 14); and "that such system and practice of selection and classification of customers" was an integral part of the oil industry (R. 13). The principal requirements for a "jobber" status under this "system and practice" were stated to be: a large volume of distribution (usually one to two million gallons annually), a bulk plant capable of accepting deliveries in "tank-car" quantities, means of making deliveries from the bulk plant, and adequate credit rating (R. 13–14, 5388). Standard also alleged that the price differential between so-called "jobber" resellers and other resellers was justified on the basis of cost and that the lower prices accorded the "jobber" resellers were granted in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors.

At the conclusion of extensive proceedings, the Commission found that the classification of reseller accounts was arbitrary (R. 5168) [1]; that the various resellers, though differently classified, were actually in competition with each other (R. 5165); that the price differential occasioned competitive injury (R. 5170–5171); and that it was not justified by differences in cost (R. 5171–5178). Accordingly, the Commission issued an order to cease and desist (R. 5183–5185).

During the course of the proceedings, Standard had introduced evidence designed to show that its lower "tank-car" price had been granted in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors. The Commission found it unnecessary to determine this issue because of its view that under the statute the good faith defense was not available "in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy, and prevent competition with the retail stations operated by the said named dealers and with stations operated by their retailer customers." After the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed, with slight modification, the Commission's cease and desist order (173 F. 2d 210), this Court held that Section 2 (b) provides an absolute defense to a charge of illegal price discrimination (340 U. S. 231). This Court accordingly reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals and remanded the case to the Commission to make findings as to whether or not Standard's lower prices were made in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors (340 U. S. at 238, 251).

---

[1] Of Standard's four "jobber" customers in the Detroit area, three resold both at wholesale to service stations and at retail through owned or controlled service stations and the fourth resold exclusively at retail through its own service stations.

Pursuant to this remand, the Commission reviewed the evidence relating to the "good faith" defense and entered modified findings. It found that there was no evidence that the "tank-car" price was granted to any of the four "jobber" accounts in response to any specific competitive offer (R. 5387–5388). It found that under Standard's general method of pricing, which was established prior to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, the criteria used to determine (R. 5389) whether or not its "tank-car" price should be accorded to a particular customer took no account of the distributive function performed by the purchaser (R. 5388). The Commission found that this system of pricing was inherently discriminatory because based upon an arbitrary classification of competing customers (R. 5388). It found that the grant of the "tank-car" price to the four "jobber" customers was not a departure by reason of competition from Standard's established method of pricing but represented only the continued application of the pricing standard adopted by respondent and followed by it since long before 1936 (R. 5389).

In addition, the Commission found that Standard, by reason of its long familiarity with every phase of the refining and distribution of gasoline, knew or should have known that its method of pricing on sales of gasoline to reseller accounts would probably have the effect of injuring competition among its customers; that Standard knew or should have known that the lower "tank-car" price could not be justified on the basis of cost; and that accordingly Standard, following the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, had the duty and obligation to bring its pricing policy into conformity with the new statute (R. 5389). The Commission concluded that Standard's failure to make any bona fide attempt to do this also negatived its claim that it had granted the "tank-car" price to its four "jobber" customers in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors (R. 5389).

On review, the court below set aside the Commission's order. The court, while observing that there was no dispute as to the evidentiary facts, rejected the Commission's conclusion that respondent had not established its "good faith."

REASON FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

The decision below, involving the construction of Section 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act (supra, p. 3), is in conflict with the decisions of this Court on an important question in the administration of the Act.

1. It is now settled under Section 2 (b) that an otherwise illegal price discrimination is not prohibited by the statute if shown to have been made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231 (1950). It is also well established that the burden of showing such justification is on the price discriminator. Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726, 741 (1945).

This case is a sequel to Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.[2] There this Court, noting that the Commission had not made any findings as to whether or not Standard's ~~discount~~ to its so-called "jobber" customers had been granted in "good faith" to meet the equally low price of competitors (340 U. S. at 238–239), remanded the case to the Commission with directions to make those findings (340 U. S. at 238, 251).[3] The illegality of the discount, apart from the "good faith" defense, was undisputed since Standard regularly and contemporaneously denied the "tank-car" price to its many other Detroit customers, when both groups of customers in fact competed in reselling the gasoline, and since Standard did not seek review of the Commission's findings that the discount was not cost-justified and that Standard's "jobber" classification was arbitrary. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37; Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 475.

---

[2] In that posture of the case, the Department of Justice did not join in defending the Commission's order because of the Department's view that the Commission's construction of Section 2 (b)—to the effect that it did not provide a complete defense—was erroneous as a matter of law. On the other hand, it is the Department's view that the decision below, setting aside the Commission's decision on remand, is similarly erroneous. Since in its decision the Court of Appeals did not reach any questions relating to the scope of the Commission's order, no discussion of those questions appears necessary or appropriate in the present petition.

[3] The court below (Appendix, infra, pp. 21–22) appears to suggest that the Commission and this Court, at prior stages in this proceeding, impliedly recognized Standard's "good faith." Any such suggestion is without foundation. As pointed out in the Statement (supra, pp. 5–6) and in the text above, the issue was not decided by either the Commission or this Court because of the nature of the Commission's construction of the statute, and this

On remand, relying principally on Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, and Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, the Commission concluded that Standard had failed to prove its "good faith". The correctness of this ruling, set aside by the court below, is the question now presented. The Commission's underlying findings, we submit, support its conclusion.

The Commission found that Standard, because major competitors used the same dual price formula,[4] had substantial reasons for believing that it might lose its four "jobber" accounts if it refused them the lower "tank-car" price. But this finding, the Commission held, was not determinative, particularly in view of

---

Court remanded the case to the Commission for findings on that very issue. The court below (Appendix, infra, p. 21) is also in error in stating that the trial examiner ever recognized Standard's "good faith."

[4] Similar charges of illegal price discrimination in the Detroit area are now pending against three other gasoline companies—Gulf, Texas, and Shell. Proceedings thereon have been deferred until the disposition of this case.

its finding that the grant of the "tank-car" price to the four "jobber" customers was not a departure by reason of competition from Standard's established method of pricing but represented only the continued application of that method—a method, moreover, adopted by Standard and followed by it since long before passage of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936 (R. 5389).[5] In short, not once did Standard, in granting the lower "tank-car" price, ever make a reduction from its pre-existing price scale; the discrimination lay in the regular use of the price scale itself. Such discrimination, the Commission concluded, did not satisfy the "good faith" test enunciated in this Court's Staley and Cement decisions.

---

[5] On the question of Standard's "good faith," the Commission (Statement, supra, p. 7) also found: (1) that Standard knew or should have known of the probability of competitive injury resulting from its price policy; (2) that Standard knew or should have known that the price differential could not be cost-justified; (3) that passage of the Robinson-Patman Act imposed upon Standard the duty of reviewing its price policy. The court below (Appendix, infra, pp. 23–24) misconceived each of the three findings.

As to (1), supra, the court held that this theory had been repudiated by this Court in its 1949 decision. However, nothing in this Court's opinion (340 U. S. 231) even remotely indicates that knowledge of probability of competitive injury cannot be legitimately considered on the "good faith" issue. Presumably the court's reference is to the quite different matter of the completeness of the Section 2 (b) defense in the face of competitive injury.

As to (2), supra, the court below held that this finding was "irrelevant" because Standard had abandoned its defense of cost justification. The finding is not "irrelevant," however, on the issue of "good faith"; for example, if Standard reasonably believed the differential was cost-justified, this would help substantiate its "good faith" claim.

As to (3), supra, the court below held that this finding was of little consequence since "If petitioner's pricing policy was lawful prior to the [Robinson-Patman] amendment [to the Clayton Act] the same policy was lawful afterward." The court's statement, however, ignores the important changes brought about by passage of the Robinson-Patman Act.

In Staley, a similar question was presented. There, as in the instant case, the sellers involved "never attempted to establish their own non-discriminatory price system, and then reduce their price when necessary to meet competition. Instead they slavishly followed in the first instance a pricing policy which, in their case, resulted in systematic discriminations * * *" (324 U. S. at 754–755). There, too, the attempt was made under Section 2 (b) to justify this discriminatory pricing policy on the ground that the sellers' competitors maintained a similar pricing policy. In rejecting this defense, this Court pointed out (324 U. S. at 753):

> But § 2 (b) does not concern itself with pricing systems or even with all the seller's discriminatory prices to buyers. It speaks only of the seller's "lower" price and of that only to the extent that it is made "in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." The Act thus places emphasis on individual competitive situations, rather than upon a general system of competition.

The Court added (324 U. S. at 757): "We cannot say that a seller acts in good faith when it chooses to adopt such a clearly discriminatory pricing system, at least where it has never attempted to set up a non-discriminatory system * * *"

And, three years later in the Cement case, this Court said (333 U. S. at 725):

> Section 2 (b) permits a single company to sell one customer at a lower price than it sells to another if the price is "made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." But this does not mean that § 2 (b) permits a seller to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others. We held to the contrary in the Staley case. There we said that the Act "speaks only of the seller's 'lower' price and of that only to the extent that it is made 'in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.' The Act thus places emphasis on individual competitive situations, rather than upon a general system of competition."

Accordingly, the seller's Section 2(b) defense was rejected since the pricing policy involved there was employed "as a practice rather than as a good faith effort to meet 'individual competitive situations'" (ibid.):

The court below sought to distinguish Staley and Cement by comparison of the pricing system involved in those cases—the so-called basing point system—with Standard's pricing formula. This attempted distinction is without basis in principle. Standard's pricing policy represented a general method of competition used not only by Standard but also by major competitors (R. 5388).[8] Standard's "tank-car" prices were granted pursuant to, and were not variations from, Standard's established pricing policy. Whether prices are determined by a basing point system, or by a system of classifying customers for pricing purposes, is immaterial; for, as this Court emphasized in Staley and Cement, Section 2(b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems" (Staley, p. 753; Cement, p. 725), does not permit a seller "to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others" (Cement, p. 725), and relates only to "individual competitive situations" (Staley, p. 753; Cement, p. 725). This rationale is equally applicable here.

---

[8] See note 4, supra.

Nor can this case be distinguished on the ground, suggested by the court below, that the basing point system involved in Staley and Cement, "was utilized to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices." First, we believe the court's statement is inaccurate. With respect to many customers of a seller employing a basing point system, the effect of the system is to lower delivered prices. See Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726, 731, 732. Secondly, and in any event, there is completely lacking any showing by Standard—which has the burden of proving its "good faith" defense—that the result of its pricing method has been to lower prices. No such assurance can be deduced from the mere fact that a price discrimination exists. On the contrary, where the discrimination is a permanent part of a pre-existing system or formula, there is an inherent danger that a seller in Standard's position will attempt to manipulate its overall price scale (both the "tank-car" and "tank-wagon" prices) upward for the purpose of offsetting any reduction in its profits because of the relatively "lower" price granted to the "jobber" accounts. This danger is particularly serious where, as here, competitors employ the same dual price formula. On the other hand, where departures from a non-discriminatory price scale are made "in individual competitive situations", the probability that the consuming public will have to subsidize the price discrimination is considerably lessened.

Finally, although observing that there was no dispute as to the evidentiary facts, the court below asserted that it was "unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that petitioner's prices 'were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale'." This assertion, if it is intended to suggest that Standard did not maintain a dual price formula, is palpably erroneous. The fact is that Standard, in its answer to the Commission's complaint, frankly stated that it had a "general policy and practice" and "system and practice" "selecting and classifying customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers," listed what it required as qualifications for "jobber" customers, and conceded that the latter regularly received the lower "tank-car" price. See Statement, supra, p. 4. This was also the undisputed testimony of Standard's own witnesses.[7] And this was, moreover, the position taken by Standard in its brief in this Court when the case was last here.[8] At this point in the proceeding, the issue of whether Standard maintained such a price system can hardly be regarded as open.[9] The label applied to it is of little consequence—"system," "formula," "policy," "method," "practice." What is important is that it "constantly results in [Standard's] getting more money for like goods from some customers than [it] does from others" and that it is not directed to "individual competitive situations." Cement, supra, p. 725. Or, as this Court held in Staley, p. 757, "We cannot say that a seller acts in good faith when it chooses to adopt such a clearly [7] Standard introduced evidence showing that it had specific requirements for a "jobber" status (R. 1890–1891); that the four large reseller accounts involved here met those requirements (R.

---

1895); that it did not accord "jobber" status to any reseller that did not meet these requirements (R. 172–174, 2084–2088, 2124); that it would rather lose "jobber" accounts than depart from those requirements (R. 1912–1916); that it had but two prices for resellers' accounts—one for "jobber" accounts and one for ordinary resellers (R. 167–169, 1899). It was also emphasized by petitioner's witnesses that this system of pricing was used not only in Detroit (R. 1890, 1897, 2065) but elsewhere in the country (R. 943, 1060, 1064, 1075, 1890) and not only by petitioner but by some of petitioner's major competitors including Texas, Gulf, and Shell (R. 319–320, 941, 1072, 1897).

[8] See, e. g., pp. 3, 4, 7, 8, 42, 43 of Brief for Petitioner, Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commissioner, No. 1, 1950 Term.

[9] Equally misleading is the court's statement (Appendix, infra, p. 26) that "The bargaining and haggling which took place between [Standard] and the four involved ["jobber" accounts] prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system." The answer to this assertion is two-fold. First, any evidence of any "bargaining and haggling" relates to a period prior to the customers' compliance with Standard's requirements for a "jobber" status. Second, it was never "the Commission's theory that [Standard's] prices were reduced pursuant to a system." On the contrary, it is the Commission's position that Standard did not "reduce" its prices to its "jobber" accounts but rather merely applied a pre-existing discriminatory price formula.

discriminatory pricing system, at least where it has never attempted to set up a non-discriminatory system * * *."

2. The practical implications of the decision below are serious and important. According to Standard's own witnesses, Standard's dual price system is used in the Detroit area not only by Standard but also by major competitors—Gulf, Texas, and Shell—against whom similar complaints are now pending.[10] Indeed, it was on this basis that the Commission found that Standard had good reasons for believing that a refusal to continue the discount to its "jobber" accounts would mean the loss of these accounts. Under the decision below, the Commission's complaint against Standard must fall because of the availability of an "equally low price" from Gulf, Texas, or Shell. Similarly, under the court's rationale, Gulf, Texas, and Shell can defend the validity of their "jobber" discount because of the availability of Standard's discriminatory low price. In other words, as long as competing sellers follow the same discriminatory price policies, each is protected. The result is to insulate from attack a price pattern deeply entrenched in the industry—not only in the Detroit area, but also elsewhere in the country (R. 319–320, 941, 943, 1060, 1064, 1072, 1075, 1897)—long prior to passage of the Robinson-Patman Act. Moreover, the decision below actually provides a positive incentive to competing suppliers to adopt parallel pricing systems so that each can defend its own system on the basis of similar systems used by others. The Act, we believe, precludes such consequences. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746, 754.

---

[10] See note 1, supra.

Since the Commission's decision on remand in this case, the Commission has denied "good faith" defenses under Section 2 (b) in a number of similar cases involving other industries. In these cases, two of which are now pending upon petitions for review in the court below,[11] the "good faith" defenses related to discounts, as in this case, which were not departures from an established price scale but instead merely represented a continued application of a discriminatory pricing scale used alike by the seller and by competitors of the seller. As in this case, the Commission denied the protection of Section 2 (b) to such price discrimination under the criteria enunciated by this Court in Staley and Cement. Review in the instant case, therefore, will have a controlling effect on pending litigation involving other industries, as well as on the future administration of the Robinson-Patman Act.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated, it is respectfully submitted that this petition for certiorari should be granted.

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General.
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General.

EARL W. KINTNER,
General Counsel,
ROBERT B. DAWKINS,
Assistant General Counsel,
Federal Trade Commission.

SEPTEMBER 1956.

---

[11] E. Edelmann & Co., Dkt. 5770, CCH Trade Reg. Rep., ¶ 25,415; C. E. Niehoff & Co., Dkt. 5768, CCH Trade Reg. Rep. ¶ 25,467.

APPENDIX

---

1. OPINION OF THE COURT OF APPEALS

No. 11409

May 3, 1956

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, PETITIONER,

v.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT

PETITION FOR REVIEW OF ORDER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Before DUFFY, Chief Judge, MAJOR and LINDLEY, Circuit Judges.

MAJOR, Circuit Judge. This proceeding originated in a complaint filed by respondent against petitioner on November 29, 1940, charging a violation of Section 2 of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act (49 Stat. 1526; 15 U. S. C. A. Sec. 13, as amended). The case is now here on petition by Standard to review a modified order to cease and desist, issued by the Commission against Standard January 16, 1953. The proceeding has long been before the Commission and the courts, and a number of the original contested issues have been adjudicated. In fact, on the present review there are only two contested issues which, as stated by the Commission, are: (1) whether the Commission correctly concluded that petitioner failed to establish that its lower price was made in "good faith" to meet the equally low price of a competitor within the meaning of Section 2 (b) of the Robinson-Patman Act, and (2) whether the revised order to cease and desist is warranted by the findings and properly issued. As subsequently shown, we conclude that the first issue must be decided adversely to the Commission, which renders the second issue of no consequence.

The Commission's original cease and desist order was before this court for review, wherein its enforcement, with some modification, was allowed with judgment accordingly. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 173 F. 2d 210. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, with instructions to this court to remand the case to the Commission to make findings in conformity with its opinion. Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231. A history of the proceeding has previously been set forth in detail both by this and the Supreme Court and need not be repeated here except insofar as it relates to the question now for decision. Also, except for the same purpose, we need not be concerned with issues previously raised and decided by the Supreme Court.

Petitioner's sales of gasoline about which the "good faith" defense revolves were made to four customers, classified by petitioner as jobbers, namely, Ned's Auto Supply Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and Wayne Company. The Commission took the position originally that the "good faith" defense was not available to petitioner and therefore, made no findings relative thereto. This court agreed with the Commissioner's position on that issue and affirmed. It was on this issue, however, that the Supreme Court reversed and remanded.

In response to the remandment the Commission from the original record made its modified findings, which conclude with the statement:

> For the reasons stated, the Commission is of the opinion that the respondent has not shown that the discriminatory prices allowed [naming the four customers involved] were lower prices granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. The Commission, therefore, finds the the burden imposed upon the respondent by Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, has not been sustained and that the price discriminations referred to in these findings have not been justified.[1]

Whether the decision of the Commission under the attending circumstances represents a finding of fact or a conclusion of law is of importance. We are of the view that it falls within the latter category, and this notwithstanding the statement in Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co., et al., 324 U. S. 746, 758:

> Congress has left to the Commission to determination of fact in each case whether the person, charged with making discriminatory prices, acted in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence is for the Commission.

The Commission in its brief appears to recognize that its decision on this critical issue is a conclusion of law (for example, see Commission's statement of contested issues, supra). Certainly there is no dispute as to the evidentiary facts as found by the Examiner in the original proceeding. Referring thereto, the Commission in its brief states, "Here the facts as such are not in dispute, it is simply a matter of applying the law to the facts." Moreover, the Commission's decision on the "good faith" issue is the result of its process of reasoning, legal in nature, a portion of which, as we shall subsequently show, has been repudiated by the Supreme Court. Such being the case, the weight to be attached to its decision is dependent upon the reasoning by which it is reached.

---

[1] Two Commissioners, based upon the findings of the Trial Examiner, dissented and expressed the view that the complaint against petitioner should be dismissed.

Prior to a discussion of the Commission's findings now under review, we think it pertinent to observe that petitioner's good faith has been either recognized or assumed at all levels during the course of this protracted proceeding. Certainly the Examiner so found. (See footnote 7, page 238 of the Supreme Court opinion.) The Commission in its original findings took no issue with its Examiner on this score but concluded as a matter of law that the "good faith" defense was not available "in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy and prevent competition with the retail stations operated by the said named dealers and with stations operated by their retailer-customers." In fact, there is good reason to think that the Commission at that time acquiesced in petitioner's contention that the sales in controversy were made in good faith. This court in reviewing that record (173 F. 2d 210, 216) stated:

> The showing made here by the petitioner that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competition, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out. The effect of it was to rebut the prima facie case made by the Commission's proof of the petitioner's discriminatory prices. If nothing further appeared in this record, the case might well have ended there.

This court also stated (page 213):

> There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that the petitioner made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor.

The Supreme Court stated (page 238):

> Petitioner presented evidence tending to prove that its tank-car price was made to each "jobber" in order to retain that "jobber" as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor.

After quoting from the findings of the Trial Examiner (footnote on same page), the same court on the following page, referring to the evidence, stated that it, "if accepted, would have stablished a complete defense to the charge of unlawful discrimination."

Moreover, in the findings now under review the Commission does not expressly repudiate the findings of the Examiner in the original proceeding that petitioner's reduction in price was granted to meet the equally low prices offered by competitors. The Commission, after a detailed discussion relative to the situation existing between petitioner and each of the four jobbers in controversy, states:

> It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman and continued to refuse the tank-car price to Ned's Auto Supply Company it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case, for all of these concerns, except Ned's Auto Supply Company, had al> ready been recognized as entitled to the tank-car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it with the range where it was likely to be so recognized by a major oil company at any time.

It thus appears evident even under this revised version of petitioner's situation that it was confronted with the problem of reducing its price to meet competitive offers or of forfeiting the business of the four jobbers.

An attempt to enter into a discussion of all of the ramifications contained in the Commission's reasoning and argument in support of its decision against the "good faith" defense would unduly prolong this opinion. We shall, therefore, limit our discussion to a few of the more salient points as contained in the modified findings. The Commission found:

> At all relevant times, respondent knew or had the means of knowing and should have known that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers who bought such gasoline at different prices and resold it in competition with one another.

This is the same theory upon which the Commission's previous order was bottomed and which was expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court (pages 249–250).

The Commission found:

> It [petitioner] also knew or should have known that the price differences which it granted could not be justified on the basis of differences in the cost of manufacture, sale and delivery resulting from differing methods or quantities in which its gasoline was sold or delivered.

We think this statement is irrelevant to the instant issue. A cost justification defense is available under Section 2 (a), but it is separate and distinct from the "good faith" defense provided in 2 (b). Both defenses were originally invoked by petitioner but the cost justification defense was abandoned (see footnote 2, Supreme Court opinion, page 234).

The Commission found that the Robinson-Patman amendment to the Clayton Act imposed upon petitioner "the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute." This reasoning also appears to have been dispelled by the Supreme Court, which discusses the changes produced by the amendment and concludes with the statement, "None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense.". It would thus appear that a "good faith" defense available under the Clayton Act would still be available under the amended Act. If petitioner's pricing policy was lawful prior to the amendment the same policy was lawful afterward. Such being the case, the mere fact that it did not change its policy is of little, if any, consequence.

The sole contention of the Commission which has any semblance of merit, in fact the only contention which it is entitled to make in view of the Supreme Court decision, is that petitioner adhered to a pricing system in reducing its prices to the four jobbers and that as a result the "good faith" defense cannot prevail. We suspect, as petitioner asserts, that this contention was an afterthought on the part of the Commission, advanced in an attempt to bring the case within the rule of such cases as Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co. et al., 324 U. S. 746, Corn Products Refining Co. et al. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726, and Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute et al., 333 U. S. 683.

Apropos to this contention the Commission found that with one exception "all of the discriminations in price involved in this proceeding were made pursuant to respondent's established method of pricing. They were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale which were made to meet lower prices of competitors, but represented only the continued application of the pricing standard previously adopted by respondent and followed by it since long before 1936."

We are not persuaded as to the accuracy of the statement contained in this quotation. The Commission, after finding that petitioner had a "method" of pricing, proceeds in its brief to a "policy" and from that to a "system." In its brief it states that petitioner had a "pricing system," irrespective of the words used to describe it. Obviously this characterization by the Commission is designed to bring the case within the scope of the system condemned by the Supreme Court in Staley and kindred cases. This effort must fail. The system described and condemned in Corn Products, later in Staley, and still later in Cement, bears not the slightest resemblance to the pricing system which the Commission purports to detect in the instant situation. The basing point system under scrutiny in those cases was labeled by the Supreme Court as unlawful and was employed by many and in some instances all members of the same industry. The system involved freight absorption and the collection of phantom freight. The system was utilized to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices. The system as pointed out in the Cement case eliminated all price competition and resulted in the sale of the product by all dealers at any given point at identical prices and terms. The gist of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in those cases was that the pricing system being illegal all prices determined thereby were illegal. It follows, according to such reasoning, that the meeting by the seller of a competitor's unlawful price precludes the seller from reliance upon a "good faith" defense:

It is interesting and highly significant that the statute employs the language, "made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor," but that the Supreme Court in the instant case adds the word "lawful," so that it reads, "made in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor" (pages 238 and 246). We do not know, of course, why the Supreme Court added the word "lawful," but we strongly suspect that it was for the purpose of giving emphasis to its previous decisions that a "good faith" defense was not available to a seller who had met an unlawful price. In this connection, it is also pertinent to note that in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful. Moreover, we are unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that petitioner's prices "were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale." The record affirmatively demonstrates to the contrary. Petitioner sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer. Petitioner had 362 Detroit customers, only four of which purchased at prices reduced from its uniform tank-wagon price.

The bargaining and haggling which took place between petitioner and the four involved "wholesalers" prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system. For instance, petitioner over many years refused to give Ned's, its "most valuable tank-wagon customer," any reduction at all despite persistent demands based upon competitive offers. Its reluctant grant of a ½¢ reduction in 1936, increased to 1½¢ in 1938 in response to an "ultimatum" by Ned's, would appear to dispel completely any idea that such reduction in price was systematic, as urged by the Commission. The Commission appears to discern something sinister in the fact that a reseller might obtain the tank car price only if it maintained a bulk plant with facilities for accepting delivery of gasoline in tank car quantities; had a business in excess of one million gallons of gasoline annually; had distribution equipment and adequate credit standing. Relative to making a reduced price to a large customer, the Supreme Court in this case stated (page 249):

> For example, if a large customer requests his seller to meet a temptingly lower price offered to him by one of his seller's competitors, the seller may well find it essential, as a matter of business survival, to meet that price rather than to lose the customer.

We think that a seller must be permitted in the exercise of a sound judgment to determine when and under what circumstances it will reduce its price in order to meet that of a competitor, and a right to require that a purchaser be possessed of the facilities for storing, handling, and distributing the product. The law did not require petitioner to reduce prices in any instance, it only authorized it to do so under the limitation imposed. Petitioner had the same right to reduce its price in order to retain a customer as it did to refuse to reduce with the risk of losing a customer. The "good faith" defense would be meaningless if the seller was required, as the Commission appears to indicate, to reduce its price alike to all customers regardless of the quantity in which they buy, their facilities for handling the product, and their ability to pay.

Finally, the Commission finds that the "good faith" defense is not available to petitioner because its "competitors, including the three against whom similar charges of price discriminations are pending, might also defend their similar price differences on the ground of meeting respondent's equally low prices or the equally low prices of other competitors. The Commission does not construe the words 'in good faith' in Section 2 (b) as permitting that result." We are not able to discern any logic in such reasoning. Evidently from the quoted statement the Commission does not know whether three of petitioner's competitors, against whom are pending charges of price discrimination, will invoke the "good faith" defense. If they should, it will be time enough to cross that bridge when it is reached. Moreover, we know of no reason why a competitor of petitioner should not have the right to meet petitioner's price or that of any other competitor providing, of course, it did so in good faith. It is strange reasoning that one seller should be deprived of the defense provided in 2 (b) because some other seller might also invoke its protection.

In our judgment and we so hold, petitioner's "good faith" defense was firmly established, and the Commission's reasoning by which it reached a contrary conclusion is untenable and must be rejected. A decree will be entered vacating and setting aside its findings, conclusions and order issued January 16, 1953.

2. JUDGMENT OF THE COURT OF APPEALS

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, Chicago 10, Illinois

Thursday, May 3, 1956

No. 11409

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, PETITIONER.

vs.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, RESPONDENT.

PETITION FOR REVIEW OF ORDER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Before Hon. F. RYAN DUFFY, Chief Judge; Hon. J. EARL MAJOR, Circuit Judge; Hon. WALTER C. LINDLEY, Circuit Judge.

This cause came on to be heard on the Petition for Review of an Order of the Federal Trade Commission and the transcript of the record from the Federal Trade Commission, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is ordered and adjudged by this Court that the findings, conclusions and order issued by the Federal Trade Commission on January 16, 1953 be vacated and set aside.

A True Copy:
Teste:

(Sgd) KENNETH J. CARRICK,
Clerk of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

3. ORDER EXTENDING TIME FOR FILING PETITION FOR CERTIORARI

Supreme Court of the United States

No. —, October Term, 1956

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

ORDER EXTENDING TIME TO FILE PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

Upon consideration of the application of counsel for petitioner,

It is ordered that the time for filing petition for writ of certiorari in the above-entitled cause be, and the same is hereby, extended to and including September 29, 1956.

[S] STANLEY REED,
Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Dated this twenty-first day of July, 1956.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC 5 1956
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

No. ~~405~~ 24

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1956

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER
v.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY

REPLY BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR CERTIORARI

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General,
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General,
Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.

EARL W. KINTNER,
General Counsel,
ROBERT B. DAWKINS,
Assistant General Counsel,
Federal Trade Commission,
Washington 25, D. C.

INDEX.

Page

Appendix 12–45

Cases:

Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co., 231 F. 2d 356, certiorari denied, 350 U. S. 991 9

Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 ..... 2, 4, 8

Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 6

Federal Trade Commission v. Rubberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470 6

Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 ..... 2, 4, 5, 8

Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231 ..... 6, 9, 10

Watts v. Indiana, 338 U. S. 49 6

Statute:

Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. 13 ..... 2, 4, 6, 8

Miscellaneous:

Hearings before the Sub-Committee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 688–689 9

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1956

No. 465

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER
v.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY

REPLY BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR CERTIORARI

Notwithstanding the Government's usual reluctance to file reply briefs in support of petitions for certiorari, we feel obliged to do so in the instant case because of a number of inaccurate and misleading statements appearing in Standard's brief in opposition. Three such statements, each of which the Government believes to be demonstrably without foundation, are particularly deserving of answer: (1) that the issue presented by the petition is "hypothetical" and "was not adjudicated below" (Br. Opp. 6); (2) that review of the decision below would require this Court "to plow through a voluminous record" and make "a de novo appraisal" of the evidence (Br. Opp. 7–8); (3) that the Department of Justice "at first publicly accepted the ruling below as a sound statement of law" but "For reasons that are not apparent, there has now been a change of mind" (Br. Opp. 5–6, 13).

1. The basic issue presented by the Government's petition is whether regular and systematic price discrimination, otherwise plainly unlawful under the Robinson-Patman Act, can be justified under Section 2 (b) (as a "good faith" meeting of competition) on the ground that the seller's competitors employ the same pricing policy. Stated otherwise, the issue is whether such a pricing policy falls within the scope of the doctrine of the Staley and Cement cases (Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, 753; Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, 725), which ruled that Section 2 (b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems," does not permit a seller "to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others," and relates only to "individual competitive situations."

Standard does not seriously contend that this issue is not one of general importance warranting review by this Court. Rather, it argues that the issue is "hypothetical" and "was not adjudicated below" (Br. Opp. 6). This assertion, we submit, can not be supported. The issue which Standard terms "hypothetical" was the principal issue before the Commission in the proceedings after remand from this Court. And it was the principal issue before the court below. In these circumstances, it is surely not surprising to find that the court did in fact pass on the issue, as reference to the court's opinion will readily confirm. Indeed, the court was quite explicit as to what it conceived to be the scope of the Staley-Cement doctrine. The court, after setting forth the Commission's contention, stated (Pet. 25):

> * * * The basing point system under scrutiny in those cases was labeled by the Supreme Court as unlawful and was employed by many and in some instances all members of the same industry. The system involved freight absorption and the collection of phantom freight. The system was utilized to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices. The system as pointed out in the Cement case eliminated all price competition and resulted in the sale of the product by all dealers at any given point at identical prices and terms. The gist of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in those cases was that the pricing system being illegal all prices determined thereby were illegal. It follows, according to such reasoning, that the meeting by the seller of a competitor's unlawful price precludes the seller from reliance upon a "good faith" defense.

Given this restrictive interpretation of Staley and Cement, the Commission's contention was necessarily rejected since "The system described and condemned in Corn Products, later in Staley, and still later in Cement, bears not the slightest resemblance to the pricing system which the Commission purports to detect in the instant situation" (Pet. 25). The court added that "in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which [Standard] met were lawful" (Pet. 26).

Thus the opinion below (although the last-quoted statement is of dubious accuracy)[1] presents the issue squarely. It is the Government's position that the court below erred in holding (supra) that "The gist of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in [the Staley and Cement] cases was that the pricing system being illegal all prices determined thereby were illegal." In the Government's view, the Staley-Cement doctrine is not limited to cases involving basing-point systems and does not merely stand for the proposition (supra) "that the meeting by the seller of a competitor's unlawful price precludes the seller from reliance upon a 'good faith' defense." In short, it is the Government's position that the Staley and Cement decisions mean what they say—namely, that Section 2 (b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems," does not permit a seller "to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others," and relates only to "individual competitive situations." 324 U. S. at 753; 333 U. S. at 725.

---

[1] It is true that in this proceeding the Commission did not adjudicate the legality of the competing prices which Standard allegedly met. In the Commission's view, such a finding is not required under the Staley-Cement doctrine. See text, supra. But the Commission has issued similar complaints against Gulf, Texas, and Shell. In addition, Standard has insisted that its pricing policies—which the Commission did find to be unlawful—were identical to those of its competitors, and in fact based its Section 2 (b) defense on that ground. In these circumstances, it cannot be said that there is "no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which [Standard] met were lawful." Moreover, the court's statement implies that the burden was on the Commission to establish the unlawfulness of such prices. Under the Act, the burden of making out a defense under Section 2 (b) is upon the party charged with violation.

2. Standard also is in error in asserting that review of the decision below would require this Court "to plow through a voluminous record" and make a "de novo appraisal" of the evidence (Br. Opp. 7, 8).

At the outset, it should be noted that the court below took quite a different view of the appellate function in this case. The court stated (Pet. 20–21):

> * * * Certainly there is no dispute as to the evidentiary facts as found by the Examiner in the original proceeding. Referring thereto, the Commission in its brief states, "Here the facts as such are not in dispute, it is simply a matter of applying the law to the facts." Moreover, the Commission's decision on the "good faith" issue is the result of its process of reasoning, legal in nature, * * *. Such being the case, the weight to be attached to its decision is dependent upon the reasoning by which it is reached.

The court might also have referred to the following statement in Standard's brief below (p. 6): "The controlling facts are not in dispute. The trial examiner's report * * * sets out the facts essential to a resolution of this case." We are unaware of any reason why this case—which the court below and both parties agreed was a "law" case—should now become a "fact" case on reaching the Supreme Court.[2]

---

[2] Standard contends that the court below decided—as an issue of fact—that Standard had no such pricing system (Br. Opp. 6-8). "But 'issue of fact' is a coat of many colors. It Actually, the pertinent facts are not only undisputed but are, for the most part, set forth in Standard's own answer to the complaint in this proceeding. In Paragraphs 16 and 17 (reproduced in the Appendix, infra,[4] pp. 12–15), Standard frankly stated: that it had a "general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers"; that so-called "jobber" accounts must meet certain qualifications (e. g., a certain annual volume): that "jobber" accounts, "as a result of such necessary selection and classification of customers, and as an integral and basically essential part thereof", regularly received the lower "tank-car" price; and "that such system and practice of selection and classification of customers" was a common one in the oil industry. Standard's 1950 brief in this Court,[5] as well as the testimony of its own witnesses before the Commission,[6] are to like effect. At this juncture in the does not cover a conclusion drawn from uncontroverted happenings, when that conclusion incorporates standards of conduct or criteria for judgment * * *". Watts v. Indiana, 338 U. S. 49, 51 (per Frankfurter, J.). Particularly is this so in the instant case where (1) the court's conclusions relied upon by Standard as being "factual" are basically inconsistent with Standard's express admissions (see note 6, infra) and (2) the court itself did not regard the issue before it as evidentiary (see text, supra, p. 5).

---

[4] In many respects, Standard's dual price formula bears a striking similarity to the practice condemned in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37. See also Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 475.

[5] See Brief for Petitioner, Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 1, 1950 Term, pp. 3, 4, 43, 46.

[6] See petition for certiorari (note 7) in the instant case.

proceeding, Standard can scarcely be permitted to withdraw or disavow these admissions. And Standard can have no real objection to the Commission's reliance on these admissions. Thus, the fundamental issue presented by the Government's petition for certiorari is simply whether a pricing "system and practice" of the type admitted by Standard falls within the scope of the Staley-Cement doctrine. The resolution of this issue certainly does not require this Court "to plow through a voluminous record" (Br. Opp. 7) or to make "a de novo appraisal" of the evidence (Br. Opp. 8). Instead, as already pointed out, it requires only the drawing of certain inferences—essentially legal in nature—from the undisputed facts.[6] [6] See note 2, supra. Nor is any broader scope of review required by the assertion of the court below that Standard "sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced the price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer." This assertion, if it is intended to suggest that Standard did not maintain a dual price "system and practice" and did not regularly sell to its "jobber" customers at the lower "tank-car" price, is directly contradicted by Standard's admissions (see, e. g., Appendix, infra, pp. 12-15).

---

Standard also relies (Br. Opp. 6-7) on the court's statement that "The bargaining and haggling which took place between [Standard] and the four involved 'wholesalers' prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system" (Pet. 26). As pointed out in the petition for certiorari (Pet. 15, n. 9), the quoted statement distorts "the Commission's theory" and ignores the fact that any evidence of "bargaining and haggling" relates to a period prior to the customers' compliance with Standard's "jobber" requirements. In this connection, it may be noted that the court below acknowledges

3. Also without basis is Standard's assertion that "The Government [i. e., the Department of Justice] at first publicly accepted the ruling below as a sound statement of law in accord with this Court's 1951 decision" and that "For reasons that are not apparent, there has now been a change of mind" (Br. Opp. 5-6, 13). Contrary to this assertion, the Department of Justice, prior to petitioning for certiorari, took no position whatever on the correctness of the decision below.[7]

Standard's policy of refusing to grant its "tank-car" price to any customer who fails to comply with these requirements (Pet. 27).

[7] Equally misleading is Standard's description of the Commission's decision. According to Standard (Br. Opp. 2): "'Good faith' was denied due to (1) respondent's alleged knowledge that its prices would cause competitive 'injury'; (2) its inability to 'cost-justify' these prices; (3) the pricing 'policy' or 'method' pursuant to which it allegedly made the challenged reductions to its four 'jobber' customers in Detroit."

First of all, it was never the Commission's position that Standard made any "reductions" pursuant to a system; the exact converse is true (see petition for certiorari, note 9).

Secondly, what Standard labels "the first two grounds of the FTC ruling" (Br. Opp. 2) are but parts of a single ground which, in the Commission's decision, was ancillary to its Staley-Cement ground. See petition for certiorari, p. 7. With respect to this ancillary ground, the Commission found an absence of "good faith" because of Standard's failure to re-examine its pricing system after passage of the Robinson-Patman Act. In this connection, the Commission found that Standard knew its pricing system was not cost-justified and was inflicting competitive injury. For the treatment of this ancillary ground by the court below, see petition for certiorari, note 3. This matter was "relegated to a footnote" (Br. Opp. 2), not because it has been abandoned, but because of the relatively greater importance of the Staley-Cement issue.

Standard (Br. Opp. 13) relies wholly on a letter dated June 27, 1956, from Warren Olney III, Acting Deputy Attorney General, to the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. The letter is reprinted in Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 688–689. As the letter makes abundantly clear, its purpose was only to advise the Committee that the decision below (and Balian Ice Cream Co. v. Arden Farms Co., 231 F. 2d 356 (C. A. 9), certiorari denied, 350 U. S. 991) did not cause the Department to withdraw its long-standing opposition to proposed legislation (then under study by the Committee) which would overrule this Court's decision in Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231, holding that Section 2 (b) provides a complete defense to charges of price discrimination. The letter states in pertinent part:

> We have carefully analyzed the decisions in these two cases and do not feel that these holdings indicate a need for the proposed legislation.
>
> * * * * *
>
> It is our position that neither of the above cases furnishes sufficient basis for the Department to change its position of opposition to the so-called equality-of-opportunity legislation. They do not broaden the scope or adversely affect what we consider to be the merits of a Section 2 (b) defense. [Emphasis added.]

The italicized language, out of its context, is quoted by Standard to show that the Department "accepted the ruling below as a sound statement of law in accord with this Court's 1951 decision."

It is quite true, as the letter points out, that the decision below is "in accord with this Court's 1951 decision".[7] The two cases simply involve two different issues. If Standard meets the requirements of a "good faith" defense, the defense is of course a complete one under this Court's 1951 decision. But the issue here is whether Standard has met those requirements.

On this issue, the Commission and the Department of Justice are, and have been, in full accord.[8] Mr. Olney's letter, we believe, is not fairly subject to an inference that the Department of Justice has "accepted the decision below as a sound statement of law * * *." In its context, and in the light of the letter's purpose, the italicized language (supra) does no more than reflect the Department's view that this Court's 1951 decision, irrespective of anything in the decision below, should continue to be controlling as to the scope of a Section 2 (b) defense.[9] For the reasons already stated, there plainly is no inconsistency between opposing a bill which would overrule this Court's 1951 decision and urging that the court below misapplied this Court's Staley and Cement decisions.[13] [7] See also petition for certiorari, p. 8.

---

[8] See petition for certiorari, p. 8, n. 2.

[9] Similarly, Standard's (Br. Opp. 13) other quotation from the letter ("pricing differences may, we emphasize, be justified under existing law only in response to individual competitive situations and may not be extended beyond what is necessary to meet good faith offers of competitors") merely states the Department's understanding of the Staley and Cement decisions.

CONCLUSION

In the petition for certiorari (Pet. 16), it is pointed out that this case is of general importance, not only because of the ruling made by the court below in this proceeding against Standard, but also because of the direct impact of that ruling in proceedings against Standard's major competitors—Gulf, Texas, and Shell—against whom similar complaints are now pending. Standard's "meeting competition" defense is based squarely on a Commission finding (which in turn is based on Standard's own admissions) that major competitors use the same dual price formula as Standard (R. 5388). If Standard, on this basis, can defend its regular grant of a "tank-car" price to its "jobber" customers, it would seem to follow necessarily that Standard's competitors can defend their use of the same dual price formula on the ground that they were merely meeting Standard's "equally low price." As stated in the petition (Pet. 16): "In other words, as long as competing sellers follow the same discriminatory price policies, each is protected." This result is dismissed by Standard, without supporting reasons, as "wholly conjectural" (Br. Opp. 12, n. 13). We cannot agree. The problem, it is respectfully submitted, is a very real one which warrants review by this Court.

---

[13] It should also be noted that Mr. Olney's letter refers only to analysis of "the decisions in these two cases". The serious nature of the decision below can be understood only in relation to Standard's admissions, which for the most part were ignored in the decision itself.

J. Lee Rankin,
Solicitor General.
Victor R. Hansen,
Assistant Attorney General.

Earl W. Kintner,
General Counsel,
Robert B. Dawkins,
Assistant General Counsel,
Federal Trade Commission.

December, 1956.

APPENDIX

Paragraphs 16 and 17 of Standard's answer (R. 12–15) state:

> Respondent alleges that since the time each of the gasoline customers named in Paragraph Three of the Complaint acquired its own bulk storage, distribution equipment and wholesale facilities, that such customer is entitled to be classified as a wholesale or jobber buyer of gasoline as distinguished from a retail reseller or service station operator who purchases gasoline on an entirely different basis of taking frequent small deliveries by tank truck from a supplier who delivers into relatively small storage tanks in or upon the service station premises, which tanks are directly connected to the retail pumps. Further, that such wholesaler or jobber buyers perform a distinctly different service and function and operate upon a different basis from retail sellers, and that such differences and distinctions in services and functions and between methods of operation have been recognized for many decades last past and are presently recognized and have been so recognized since June 19, 1936 in Detroit and elsewhere throughout the entire United States by the entire oil industry as well as by other industries dealing in substantially all kinds of consumer goods, and that in consequence of such differences and distinctions in operations, functions and services, and the essential recognition thereof, the oil industry and other industries in Detroit and throughout the rest of the United States has and does classify and bona fidely select customers on the basis of functional services and of methods of operations entitling customers to be classified in distinctive and distinguishable classifications. Further, that such classifications are essential and necessary and appropriate to the existing and continuing business and commercial activity in consumer commodities, including oil products, in Detroit and throughout the United States, and that such system and practice of selection and classification of customers in the oil industry and other industries in Detroit and throughout the United States forms a necessary, indispensable and integral part of the commercial economy of this nation, and one which must be considered, recognized, met, and participated in by an operator engaged in the business of distribution and marketing of oil products if such business is to fairly and successfully survive in the market place in Detroit or elsewhere in the United States. Further, that as a result of such necessary selection and classification of customers, and as an integral and basically essential part thereof, and of the system of commercial economy which makes such classifications necessary, differences in prices of the same commodities are made to customers selected and falling within different classifications, and purchasers falling within the classification of wholesalers or jobbers of gasoline are entitled to purchase at tank car prices as distinguished from dealer tank wagon prices at which gasoline is sold to retail resellers.

17

Respondent alleges that its general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers, is as follows:

That such wholesale or jobber customer so classified shall have adequate bulk storage of his own; that he be equipped to receive bulk deliveries by tank car or truck train into such storage; that he have adequate distribution and delivery facilities; that he make tank car purchases in substantial volume and do a continuing substantial volume of business as a bona fide gasoline dealer maintaining and operating an established gasoline business; that he have satisfactory credit rating; that he maintain a sufficient personnel and all requisite facilities and equipment to adequately operate his business, service his customers, and perform his functions as a wholesaler or jobber, and assume the hazard and expense of fully operating his own business.

Respondent alleges that each of the four customers named in Paragraph Three of the Complaint fully, fairly, and reasonably falls within not only the requirements set forth in Paragraph 17 above but within all fair, reasonable, usual and proper requirements for classification as a wholesaler or jobber; and that each maintains its own adequate bulk storage, delivery tank trucks, salesmen and operating personnel; buys in substantial tank car or truck train lots; buys commodities other than gasoline in wholesale and carload lots; bears all expense of its own operations, no part of which are borne by Respondent; becomes immediately the absolute owner of the gasoline delivered into its storage by Respondent and controls its disposition; does not depend upon or desire that its customers be serviced by Respondent's salesmen, and Respondent's salesmen do not service or solicit such customers; assumes the risk of carrying its own inventories and of extending its own credits and making collections, and assumes all the hazards of its own operations. Further, that said four customers are each bona fidely qualified to be regarded and are regarded by the oil industry in Detroit as within the classification of wholesale or jobber customers, and they each are able to purchase as such from a great number of gasoline suppliers operating in Detroit competitively with Respondent. Further, that Respondent is without power to, and is neither entitled nor required to police, control or dictate the manner or method of disposition of such gasoline as may be employed by such customers, and that such gasoline becomes the absolute property of such customers upon their purchase thereof from Respondent. Further, that said four customers and each of them are legitimately and lawfully entitled to purchase gasoline, and Respondent is entitled to sell them gasoline, within their classification as wholesalers or jobbers and at prices which are or may be at the time different and lower than prices charged by Respondent for the same product to Respondent's retail reseller customers without regard to any other consideration and without regard to any relation which such price differential may or may not bear to Respondent's differing operating costs arising from differing costs of manufacture, differing costs arising out of different methods of sale or delivery, or otherwise, and that any such acts upon Respondent's part and the existence of any such facts have not and do not constitute a violation of the meaning and terms of Section 2 (A) of the Clayton Act as amended and are not unlawful thereunder or under any law.

10

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 10 1957
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

No. 24

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER
v.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General,
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General,
EARL E. POLLOCK,
Assistant to the Solicitor General,
Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.

EARL W. KINTNER,
General Counsel,
JAMES E. CORKEY,
Assistant General Counsel,
MILES J. BROWN,
Attorney,
Federal Trade Commission, Washington 25, D. C.

INDEX

Page

Opinion below 1
Jurisdiction 1
Question presented 2
Statute involved 2
Statement:
  Prior proceedings 3
  The Commission's findings on remand 8
  The Court of Appeals decision 12
Summary of argument 14
Argument:
  A seller's regular use of an inherently discriminatory pricing system cannot be justified as a "good faith" meeting of competition on the ground that competitors regularly use the same discriminatory system 21
    A. Section 2(b) affords no justification for Standard's use of a general pricing system 26
      1. The "good faith" defense applies only in individual competitive situations 26
        a. The doctrine of the Staley and Cement decisions 26
        b. The reasons underlying the Staley-Cement doctrine 28
        c. The applicability here of the Staley-Cement doctrine 30
      2. Standard's admissions in the prior proceedings establish that its price discriminations were pursuant to a general pricing system 36
        a. Standard's alleged "reductions" 37
        b. Standard's alleged "bargaining and haggling" 42
    B. In any event, the "good faith" requirement is not satisfied by a showing that Standard's pricing system is also used by some of its competitors 46
    C. Standard's failure to make a bona fide effort to establish a non-discriminatory pricing system further negatives its claim of "good faith" 52

Page
Conclusion 59
Appendix 60

CITATIONS

Cases:

Aetna Portland Cement Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 157 F. 2d 533 32, 33

C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 241 F. 2d 37, pending on writ of certiorari, No. 110, this Term 31, 49

Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726 32

E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152, pending on petition for certiorari, No. 101, this Term 31, 49, 56

Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 13, 15, 16, 17, 20, 21, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 46, 49, 50, 52, 54, 55.

Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 13, 15, 16, 17, 24, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 42, 46, 50

Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 22, 23, 51

Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419 15, 17, 28, 31, 32, 34, 42, 46

Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470 22, 31, 45, 52

Hill v. Federal Trade Commission, 124 F. 2d 104 41

Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231 4, 8, 14, 23, 29, 35, 40, 55, 57

Whitaker Cable Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 253, certiorari denied, 353 U. S. 938 31, 49

Statutes:

Administrative Procedure Act, Section 8, 60 Stat. 242, 5 U. S. C. 1007 24

Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, Section 2, 15 U. S. C. (1934 ed.) 13 55

Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, Section 2, 15 U. S. C. 13 2, 3, 7, 8, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 44, 46, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 56, 57, 58

MICRO CARD
TRADE MARK ®

354 -57

MATTHEW BENDER & COMPANY
MB

Miscellaneous:

	Page
16 C. F. R. § 2.20 (Cum. Supp. 1938–1943)	24
80 Cong. Rec.:
pp. 3113	30
6426, 6435	55
8139	55
9414	56
9416	30
5 Fed. Reg. 2423, as amended, 6 Fed. Reg. 832	24
11 Fed. Reg. 7069	24
H. Rep. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess.	55
H. Rep. 2951, 74th Cong., 2d Sess.	55–56
Press Release, Federal Trade Commission, June 18, 1957	48
IX Wigmore on Evidence (3d ed.) § 259	38, 41

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

No. 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals (R. 5495–5502) is reported at 233 F. 2d 649.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals (R. 5503) was entered on May 3, 1956. The time for filing a petition for writ of certiorari was extended by Mr. Justice Reed on July 21, 1956, to September 29, 1956 (R. 5503–5504). The petition for certiorari was filed on September 28, 1956, and was granted on December 17, 1956 (R. 5504). 352 U. S. 950. The jurisdiction of this Court is conferred by 28 U. S. C. 1254 (1).

QUESTION PRESENTED

Under Section 2 (b) of the Clayton Act, a seller may defend against a charge of illegal price discrimination by showing that "his lower price" was granted in "good faith" to meet an equally low price of a competitor. The question presented is whether a discount regularly granted to certain large customers pursuant to the seller's long established and inherently discriminatory pricing policy can be justified under Section 2 (b) (i. e., as a "good faith" meeting of competition) on the ground that some of the seller's major competitors employ the same pricing policy.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 38 Stat. 730, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, 15 U. S. C. 13, provides in part:

* * * * *

> (a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchases involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: * * *

* * * * *

(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section~~, and unless~~ justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor.

* * * * *

STATEMENT

PRIOR PROCEEDINGS

The complaint issued by the Federal Trade Commission in this case (R. 2–5) charged the respondent Standard Oil Company with price discrimination in the sale of gasoline in the Detroit metropolitan area in violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 15 U. S. C. 13. It was alleged that Standard, since the date of the Robinson-Patman Act, had regularly sold at the "tank-car" price to four large reseller accounts (each of which made substantial retail sales)[1] while selling at the higher "tank-wagon" price to numerous other reseller accounts (358 retail service stations) in the same area.[2] It was also alleged that the effect of the discrimination had been, and "may be," to injure, destroy, or prevent competition between the two classes of resellers in selling directly to the consuming public (R. 3).

Standard's answer (R. 5–28) admitted the existence of the price differential (R. 5, 11–12) and the competitive relationship between the two classes of resellers (R. 9), but sought to justify the differential on three main grounds: (1) that the function performed by the four large resellers—called "jobber" accounts by Standard—was essentially different from that performed by the other resellers (R. 12–15); (2) that the differential was justified on the basis of costs (R. 15–17); and finally (3) that the lower price accorded the "jobber" resellers was granted in good faith to meet or partially meet the equally low or lower prices of competitors (R. 17–22).

---

[1] The four are: Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Inc., Wayne Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company.

[2] Of these 358 retail service stations, approximately 60% are lessees of Standard under leases usually for one year (CX 1A to 1F, R. 104, 4702–4712; R. 107), which require that the lessees purchase their gasoline from Standard at the tank-wagon price (R. 2092, 2123–2124). Other service station operators purchasing gasoline from Standard are required by contracts to purchase all of their gasoline requirements from Standard at the tank-wagon price (CX 2, R. 106, 4713). All sales by Standard to service station customers in Detroit since 1936 have been under one of these leases or contracts (R. 210). See Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231, 235 n. 3.

In its answer, Standard described in some detail "its general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail sellers" (R. 13). Standard stated that "such system and practice of selection and classification of customers" was an integral part of the oil industry in Detroit (R. 13); that "* * * differences in prices of the same commodities are made to customers selected and falling within different classifications, and purchasers falling within the classification of wholesalers or jobbers of gasoline are entitled to purchase at tank-car prices as distinguished from dealer tank wagon prices at which gasoline is sold to retail resellers" (R. 13); that Standard employed fixed criteria for making this classification (R. 13–14); and that the four resellers receiving Standard's tank-car price met these criteria (R. 14). The principal requirements for "jobber" status under this "system and practice" were stated to be: a large volume of distribution (usually one or two million gallons annually), a bulk plant capable of accepting deliveries in tank-car quantities, means of making deliveries from the bulk plant, and an adequate credit rating (R. 13–14, 5388).

In the course of the hearings, Standard introduced evidence showing that "jobber" status and the tank-car price were first accorded to Citrin-Kolb in 1928 or 1929 (R. 1257); to Stikeman Oil Company about 1932 (RX 37–C, R. 1587, 4862; R. 5060); to Wayne Oil Company in 1935 (R. 379); and to Ned's Auto Supply Company in 1938 (R. 1895). Standard's witnesses testified that it had its own specific requirements for "jobber" status (R. 1890-1895); that the four large reseller accounts involved here met those requirements (R. 1895); that it did not accord "jobber" status to any reseller that did not meet those requirements (R. 172-174, 2084-2088, 2124); that it would rather lose "jobber" accounts than depart from those requirements (R. 1912, 1916); that it had but two prices for reseller accounts—the tank-car price for "jobber" accounts and the tank-wagon price for ordinary resellers (R. 167-169, 1899). According to Standard's witnesses, this method of pricing was used not only in Detroit (R. 1890, 1897, 2065) but elsewhere in the country (R. 943, 1060, 1064, 1075, 1890), and not only by Standard but by some of its major competitors, including Texas, Gulf, and Shell (R. 319-320, 941, 1072, 1897).[3] Standard also introduced evidence to show that, during the period involved, it departed from its dual pricing method in only one instance; its officials referred to this as an "exception" (R. 167-169).[4] [3] While some major oil companies sell and distribute in the Detroit area in a manner similar to the system employed by Standard, its two largest competitors in that area, Socony-Vacuum and Sun Oil Company, sell only at the tank-wagon price (R. 320, 2128-2130).

---

[4] The one exception is Standard's grant to Ned's on September 1, 1936, of a price one-half cent below the tank-wagon price. This arrangement continued until March 7, 1938, when Ned's, having acquired tank-car storage facilities, was designated a "jobber" by Standard and was granted the tank-car price (approximately 1½¢ below the tank-wagon price). (R. 5383.)

At the conclusion of the hearings, the Commission found inter alia that Standard's classification of these four reseller customers as "jobbers" was arbitrary (R. 5168);[5] that the four so-called "jobbers" were actually in competition with Standard's other reseller customers not so classified (R. 5165); that the differential in price accorded the two classes of accounts resulted in competitive injury (R. 5170–5171); and that the differential was not justified on the basis of cost (R. 5171–5178). Thereupon, the Commission issued an order to cease and desist (R. 5183–5185).

Although Standard had introduced evidence designed to show that its tank-car price had been granted in good faith to meet or partially meet the equally low or lower price of competitors, the Commission was of the view that, as a matter of law, the Section 2 (b) defense was not available to a seller "in the face of affirmative proof that the effect of the discrimination was to injure, destroy and prevent competition." Accordingly, no findings were made on the issue (R. 5179).

On petition for review in the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit (R. 5270–5279), Standard contended that the Commission had erred in its ruling as to the availability of the Section 2 (b) defense. The Court of Appeals approved the Commission's findings and conclusion, and with but slight modification affirmed the Commission's order to cease and desist (173 F.2d 210).

---

[5] The Commission found that Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman sold a substantial portion of Standard's gasoline directly to the consuming public, and that Ned's Auto Supply Company sold all of the gasoline directly to the public (R. 5369–5371).

However, this Court held that Section 2 (b) did provide a complete defense to a charge of price discrimination, reversed the judgment of the Court of Appeals, and remanded the case to the Commission to make findings as to whether or not Standard's lower prices were made in good faith to meet the equally low prices of competitors (340 U. S. at 238, 251).

THE COMMISSION'S FINDINGS ON REMAND

On review of the evidence, the Commission concluded that Standard had failed to sustain its burden of proving that its lower price was accorded in "good faith" to meet the equally low price of a competitor. (R. 5390).

The Commission found that Standard's "method of pricing its gasoline in the Detroit metropolitan area is to sell to its customers generally at what is designated in the oil industry as the 'tank-wagon price' and to sell to a much more limited number of purchasers at a 'tank-car price', the latter being 1½ cents per gallon lower than the former" (R. 5383). It found that under this method of pricing, which was established prior to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, the determination of whether or not the tank-car price should be accorded to a particular customer took no account of the distributive function performed by the purchaser (R. 5388). Instead, "[i]n selecting the customers or prospective customers to whom it will grant the tank-car price on gasoline, the respondent's criterion is now, and for many years has been, that the customer or prospective customer make annual purchases of not less than from one to two million gallons of gasoline, have storage facilities sufficient to accept delivery in tank-car quantities, and have a credit standing assuring payment for large volume purchases. This is the same criterion which for many years has also been applied by the respondent's major competitors * * *" (R. 5388). Standard's four "jobber" accounts, "except Ned's Auto Supply Company, had already been recognized as entitled to the tank-car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it within the range where it was likely to be so recognized by a major oil company at any time" (R. 5388). On the basis of the latter finding, the Commission acknowledged that "[i]t may well be [Standard] was convinced * * * it would lose these accounts" if they were not accorded the tank-car price and that Standard "had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case" (R. 5388).

"Thus," the Commission stated (R. 5388), "the real question is whether or not the actions of [Standard] in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank-car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2 (b)."

In deciding this question, the Commission found that there was no evidence that the tank-car price was granted to any of the four "jobber" accounts in response to any specific competitive offer (R. 5387–5388).[6] Instead, with one exception,[7] "all of the discriminations in price involved in this proceeding were made pursuant to respondent's established method of pricing. They were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale which were made to meet lower prices of competitors, but represented only the continued application of the pricing standard previously adopted by respondent and followed by it since long before 1936" (R. 5389).

---

[6] Standard had introduced evidence of offers made by competitors to its four "jobber" accounts. The Commission made detailed findings as to these offers (R. 5383–5388):

The six offers made to Citrin-Kolb were made subsequent to the time Standard accorded "jobber" status to that reseller in 1928 or 1929. The Commission found that, although these offers were communicated to Standard, Standard in fact never responded thereto and never receded from its policy and requirements (R. 1287, 1291, 1301).

Any specific offers made to either Wayne or Stikeman were made either before the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act or after issuance of the complaint in this proceeding. The record contains no evidence that Standard's price to these "jobbers" was granted pursuant to such offers.

Standard accorded "jobber" status to Ned's in March 1938 (R. 1895). The record shows that, prior to 1936, four specific offers were made to Ned's, none of which was accepted (R. 1803–1804, 1806–1809, 1810–1811, 1866). Subsequent thereto, at the time Ned's was accorded the tank-car price and "jobber" status, the only subsisting offer open was that of the Red Indian Oil Company on a gasoline which was not a major brand (R. 3098). The Commission found that this offer did not represent a serious competitive threat to Standard (R. 327, 5387) and that Standard in fact did not meet this particular offer when it accorded the tank-car price to Ned's, but instead granted the lower price on the understanding that Ned's would conform to Standard's requirements for "jobber" status (R. 1821, 1995), the volume requirement having already been satisfied (R. 119, 5372).

[7] See note 4, supra.

In addition, the Commission found that Standard, by reason of its long familiarity with every phase of the refining and distribution of gasoline, knew or should have known that its pricing method would probably have the effect of injuring competition among its customers, and knew or should have known that the price differential could not be cost-justified (R. 5389). "These circumstances," the Commission stated (R. 5389), "existed at the time the Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act became law, and their existence imposed upon respondent the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute." In the Commission's view, Standard's failure to make any bona fide attempt to do so further negatived its claim that it had granted the tank-car price to its four "jobber" customers in "good faith."

In conclusion, the Commission stated (R. 5389-5390):

> It is also important that the respondent necessarily knew at the time of the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, and at all times thereafter, that its standard for granting tank-car prices on its gasoline was in all substantial respects the same as the standard used by its major competitors. It was evidently then relying, as it is now relying, upon the position that so long as the pricing method in existence prior to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act remains unchanged it can defend its price discriminations on the ground that its lower prices were granted in good faith to meet equally low prices of its competitors. Upon this same theory, respondent's competitors, including the three against whom similar charges of price discriminations are pending, might also defend their similar price differences on the ground of meeting respondent's equally low prices or the equally low prices of other competitors. The Commission does not construe the words "in good faith" in Section 2 (b) as permitting that result. In the circumstances shown to exist, the Commission does not believe that the statute provides a means of effectively insulating any particular pricing pattern from attack or that it guarantees that so long as a pricing pattern in effect prior to 1936 remains undisturbed price discriminations made pursuant to that pattern may be lawfully continued.

On the basis of these findings, the Commission issued a modified cease-and-desist order (R. 5391-5393).[8]

THE COURT OF APPEALS DECISION

On review, the court below set aside the Commission's order. The court held (R. 5502) that Standard's "good faith" defense "was firmly established, and the Commission's reasoning by which it reached a contrary conclusion is untenable and must be rejected."

---

[8] Two Commissioners dissented. In their view, Standard's grant of "jobber" status to the four large resellers "was not an arbitrary classification * * * in order to favor these four jobbers with lower prices, inasmuch as the companies were qualified for such status according to the commonly accepted standard in the industry" (R. 5416; see also R. 5405). The dissenting Commissioners further concluded "that respondent would have lost Ned's as a customer if it had not met its competitors' offers" (R. 5417), and that, with respect to Citrin-Kolb, Stikeman, and Wayne, "the decision of the respondent to retain its existing [pre-1936] pricing policy was necessary to meet the competition of respondent's competitors and to prevent the loss of its customer[s]" (R. 5419, 5418, 5420).

The court acknowledged the "fact that a reseller might obtain the tank car price only if it maintained a bulk plant with facilities ~~for accepting delivery of~~ gasoline in tank car quantities; had a business in excess of one million gallons of gasoline annually; had distribution equipment and adequate credit standing" (R. 5501). The court also apparently recognized that this policy was in accord with "the commonly accepted standards of the industry" (R. 5498, 5502). The court, however, rejected the Commission's contention that the findings brought the case within the doctrine of Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, and Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683. The court stated (R. 5500): "The system described and condemned in [those decisions] bears not the slightest resemblance to the pricing system which the Commission purports to detect in the instant situation." In addition, the court stated that it was "unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that [Standard's] prices 'were not the result of departures from a nondiscriminatory price scale' " (R. 5501).

The court also rejected the Commission's determination that Standard's failure to review its pricing policy after enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act further negatived Standard's claim of "good faith." According to the court, "If [Standard's] pricing policy was lawful prior to the [Act] the same policy was lawful afterward" (R. 5499).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The illegality of Standard's price discrimination, apart from the Section 2 (b) defense, is undisputed. Section 2 (b) permits a seller to rebut a prima facie case against him "by showing that his lower price * * * was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor."

In order to qualify for this defense, it must be shown, not only that the meeting of a competitor's lower price was necessary to prevent the loss of business, but, furthermore, that the discrimination was "in good faith." The burden of showing such justification is, of course, on the price discriminator. On the other hand, if the price discriminator sustains that burden, it is now settled that Section 2 (b) affords a complete defense. Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231.

This case is a sequel to the Standard case, supra. There, this Court, after holding that the Commission could not reject Standard's Section 2 (b) defense as a matter of law, remanded the case to the Commission with directions to make findings as to whether or not Standard's lower price to its so-called "jobber" customers had been granted in good faith to meet the equally low price of competitors. 340 U. S. at 238–239. On remand, the Commission concluded that Standard had failed to sustain its burden of proving its "good faith." The correctness of this ruling, set aside by the court below, is the basic question now presented.

The Commission based its decision on three related grounds: (A) Section 2 (b) affords no justification for Standard's use of a general pricing system; (B) in any event, the "good faith" requirement is not satisfied by a showing that Standard's pricing system is also used by some of its competitors; (C) Standard's failure to make a bona fide effort to establish a non-discriminatory pricing system further negatives its claim of "good faith."

A

Section 2 (b) affords no justification for Standard's use of a general pricing system. Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746; Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683; Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419.

1. a. As this Court held in Staley and Cement, Section 2 (b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems" (Staley, p. 753; Cement, p. 725), does not permit a seller "to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others" (Cement, p. 725), and relates only to "individual competitive situations" (Staley, p. 753; Cement, p. 725). This doctrine was reaffirmed by the Supreme Court as recently as last Term in National Lead, supra. There this Court held (p. 431) that a seller could not "plead this section in defense of the use of an entire pricing system."

b. The very phraseology of Section 2 (b) shows a limitation of the defense to "individual competitive situations" as distinguished from "pricing systems."

Moreover, the indispensable prerequisite for applying the Section 2 (b) defense is a reduction from the seller's customary price scale. There is no such reduction where (as here) the seller's price scale is itself discriminatory and where the discrimination consists merely of the regular use of the price scale.

In those circumstances, there is also an inherent danger that the seller will attempt to manipulate its over-all price scale upward for the purpose of offsetting any reduction in its profits because of the relatively "lower" price regularly granted to the preferred customers.

c. Here, the Commission found that none of the discriminations in issue represented a departure by reason of competition from Standard's established system of pricing—a system, moreover, adopted and followed by Standard long before the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936. In short, not once did Standard, in granting the lower tank-car price, ever make a reduction from its customary price scale; the discrimination lay in the regular use of the dual price formula itself.

Nevertheless, the court below sought to distinguish Staley and Cement by a comparison of the pricing system involved in those cases— the so-called basing-point system—with Standard's pricing method. The attempted distinction is without basis in principle. As the explicit holdings of Staley and Cement make clear, the controlling factor is that Section 2 (b) cannot be used in defense of the use of a pricing system, regardless of differences which may exist among various types of pricing systems.

Nor can this case be properly distinguished on the ground, suggested by the court below, that the basing-point system involved in Staley and Cement was "utilized to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices." Even apart from probable inaccuracy of this description of the basing-point system as to some situations, the record is completely devoid of any showing by Standard—which has the burden of proving the "good faith" defense—that the result of its pricing method has been to lower prices.

Nor can Staley and Cement be distinguished on the ground that the prices allegedly being met by the sellers in those cases were a part of a pricing system which had been adjudicated to be unlawful. The explicit holding of those decisions is not nearly so restrictive. If any doubt ever existed on the matter, it was dispelled by National Lead, supra. Of course, if the competitor's price is found to be illegal, that ends the matter. But such a finding is surely not indispensable.

Any argument to the contrary, moreover, necessarily collides with the well-settled rule that the burden of proof as to every element of the Section 2 (b) defense is on the price discriminator—not the Commission.

And, finally, it should be noted that, to the extent that the pricing policies of Standard's competitors are in fact identical to Standard's policies, they of course suffer from the same legal infirmities.

2. a. The court below further stated that it was "unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that [Standard's] prices 'were not the result of departures from a nondiscriminatory price scale.'" This statement, if it is intended to suggest that the granting of the tank-car price to the four so-called "jobbers" represented departures from a non-discriminatory price scale, is palpably erroneous.

Any such suggestion is flatly contradicted, not only by the Commission's findings of fact, but also by Standard's own admissions in the prior proceedings in this case. Indeed, the Commission's findings of fact rest almost exclusively on these admissions. See Statement, supra, pp. 5–7, 10. And Standard's 1950 brief in this Court is to like effect. At this point in the proceeding, Standard can scarcely be allowed to disavow these admissions or deny their truthfulness.

b. According to those admissions, Standard departed in only one instance from its "system and practice of selection and classification of customers." This one instance, however, is no longer in issue; and the court below erred in relying on that conceded "exception" as a basis for suggesting that Standard did not employ a general pricing system.

Furthermore, any evidence of "bargaining and haggling" between Standard and the four large resellers prior to their classification as so-called "jobbers" would be completely consistent with the Commission's determination—and Standard's admission—that the discriminations charged in the complaint were part and parcel of a "system and practice of selection and classification of customers." So long as an inherently discriminatory price scale is "an integral and basically essential part thereof," it is only inevitable that "non-jobber" customers (assuming they could meet Standard's fixed requirements) will seek to be classified as "jobbers" (and thus obtain the relatively lower tank-car price). The mere fact that over the years there may be some slight change in the beneficiaries of Standard's "system and practice" certainly does not disprove Standard's use of such a "system and practice."

B

There are also other compelling reasons for rejecting Standard's Section 2 (b) defense. Of primary importance in this regard is the nature of the competitors' prices allegedly met by Standard. In the Commission's view, the "good faith" requirement is not satisfied by a showing that Standard's pricing system is also used by some of its competitors.

On the basis of substantially the same "system and practice" followed by Standard, these competitors likewise classify certain customers as "jobbers" and accord them the tank-car price. And, since both Standard and these competitors select "jobbers" on the basis of "the commonly accepted standards of the industry," it may well be the Standard would (at least temporarily) lose its four "jobber" customers if it stopped granting them the tank-car price. The reason, of course, is the strong possibility that these four "jobber" customers could obtain "jobber" classification—and hence the tank-car price—from Standard's competitors employing the same "system and practice."

The Commission, however, refused to accept Standard's possible loss of the four "jobber" customers under those circumstances as justifying Standard's continued adherence to its dual price formula. As this Court held in Staley, the Section 2 (b) defense is concerned with the matching of prices "in individual competitive situations," not the matching of pricing systems. To make the loss of customers the sole criterion of "good faith" is to extract all meaning from the "good faith" requirement.

Moreover, if a discriminatory pricing system could be justified as a "good faith" meeting of a competitor's equally low price merely because competitors are using a comparable system, the Robinson-Patman Act would be effectively nullified in large measure. Such a construction would immunize from the Act's requirements every established industry-wide systematic and discriminatory method of pricing. The Act, the Commission properly held, precludes such consequences.

C

The Commission further found that the circumstances which existed at the time of the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act "imposed upon [Standard] the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute" and that Standard "neither did this nor made any bona fide attempt to do so" (R. 5389). In this regard, the Commission found that at all relevant times Standard knew or should have known of the probability of competitive injury resulting from its pricing policy (R. 5389) and knew or should have known that the price differential could not be cost-justified (R. 5389). Thus, despite knowledge of the discriminatory and injurious nature of its pricing system, Standard took no steps after passage of the Robinson-Patman Act to rid itself of that system but instead simply followed the industry pattern. Compare Staley, 324 U. S. at 757. Such conduct, in the Commission's view, further negatived Standard's claim of "good faith."

The court below, however, held that, "If [Standard's] pricing policy was lawful prior to the [Robinson Patman] amendment the same policy was lawful afterward." This holding, which flatly ignores the important changes brought about by passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, cannot be sustained.

ARGUMENT

A SELLER'S REGULAR USE OF AN INHERENTLY DISCRIMINATORY PRICING SYSTEM CANNOT BE JUSTIFIED AS A "GOOD FAITH" MEETING OF COMPETITION ON THE GROUND THAT COMPETITORS REGULARLY USE THE SAME DISCRIMINATORY SYSTEM

At the outset, it should be emphasized that the illegality of Standard's price discrimination, apart from the Section 2 (b) defense, is undisputed.

In the Detroit area, Standard sold gasoline to 362 dealers who resold at retail to the general public. Of these 362, four large dealers (three of whom also sold at wholesale) were granted the so-called tank-car price; Standard charged the other 358 dealers the higher tank-wagon price. Although Standard designated the first group "jobbers," the fact is that members of the two classes directly competed one against another in selling at retail; indeed, one of the so-called "jobbers" sold exclusively at retail. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 473–475. Standard no longer challenges the Commission's findings that Standard's "jobber" classification was arbitrary, that the discrimination in favor of the four so-called "jobbers" was not cost-justified, and that the discrimination caused injury to competition. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37; Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., supra. Thus, unless the Section 2 (b) defense is applicable here, Standard's grant of the tank-car price to the so-called "jobber" retailers is plainly unlawful under the Clayton Act.

Section 2 (b) provides in pertinent part:

> (b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price * * *, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price * * * to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor * * *. [Emphasis added.]

In order to qualify for the defense set forth in the proviso, it must be shown, not only that the meeting of a competitor's lower price was necessary to prevent the loss of business, but furthermore that the discrimination was "in good faith." Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, 755, 757; Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231, 244.[9]

The burden of proving such justification is, of course, on the price discriminator. See, e. g., Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., supra, at 753; Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 45. On the other hand, if the price discriminator sustains that burden, it is now settled that Section 2 (b) affords a complete defense. Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231.

This case is a sequel to Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, supra.[10] There this Court, noting that the Commission had rejected Standard's Section 2 (b) defense as a matter of law and had not made any findings as to whether or not Standard's lower price to its so-called "jobber" customers had been granted in good faith to meet the equally low price of competitors (340 U. S. at 238-239), remanded the case to the Commission with directions to make those findings (340 U. S. at 238, 251).[11] On remand, relying principally on the doctrine of Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, and Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, the Commission concluded that Standard had failed to sustain its burden of proving its "good faith."

---

[9] As this Court stated in Standard (340 U. S. at 234):

> * * * under the Act, the lower price to the jobbers was justified if it was made to retain each of them as a customer and in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor. [Emphasis added.]

With respect to the Staley case, there is no doubt that Staley, when it entered the glucose business, found it necessary to meet the prices of competitors already established in that field; yet the Court emphasized that any such meeting of competition had to be "in good faith" (p. 757).

[10] In that posture of the case, the Department of Justice did not join in defending the Commission's order because of the Department's view that the Commission's construction of Section 2 (b)—to the effect that it did not provide a complete defense—was erroneous as a matter of law. On the other hand, it is the Department's view that the decision below, setting aside the Commission's decision on remand, is similarly erroneous.

---

Since in its decision the Court of Appeals did not reach any question relating to the scope of the Commission's order, no discussion of such questions appears necessary or appropriate at this stage.

[11] The court below (R. 5497-5498) appears to suggest that the Commission and this Court, at prior stages in this proceeding, impliedly recognized Standard's "good faith." Any such suggestion is without foundation. As pointed out in the Statement (supra, pp. 7-8) and in the text above, although Standard's "good faith" was assumed for argument purposes, the issue was not decided by either the Commission or this Court because of the nature of the Commission's construction of the statute. And this Court remanded the case to the Commission for findings on that very issue (340 U. S. at 238, 251).

The court below is also in error in stating that the trial examiner recognized Standard's "good faith." Such a finding, as the Commission noted (R. 5382), was not made by the examiner, although he did find that the discriminations were made to meet competition (R. 5104). Moreover, since the Staley case (1945) was decided subsequent to the examiner's report (1943), he could not possibly have considered the impact of that decision or the still later Cement decision (1948). In addition, under the Commission's rules then in effect, the examiner's report was only advisory, as the report itself states (R. 5128). 5 Fed. Reg. 2423, 2426, as amended, 6 Fed. Reg. 832, 833; 16 C. F. R. § 2.20 (Cum. Supp. 1938-1943). Such a report did not even have the effect of an initial decision, as is now the case under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U. S. C. 1007, enacted in 1946. See 11 Fed. Reg. 7069.

The correctness of this ruling, set aside by the court below, is the basic question now presented.

The Commission found that Standard, because major competitors used the same dual price formula, had substantial reasons for believing that it might lose its four "jobber" accounts if it refused them the lower tank-car price.[12] But this finding, the Commission held, was not determinative. In the Commission's view, "the real question is whether or not the actions of the respondent in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank-car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2 (b)" (R. 5388).

Resolving this question adversely to Standard, the Commission emphasized that the grant of the tank-car price to the "jobber" customers was not a departure by reason of competition from Standard's established method of pricing but represented only the continued application of that method—a method, moreover, adopted and followed by Standard long before the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936 (R. 5389). In short, not once did Standard, in granting the lower "tank-car" price, ever make a reduction from its pre-existing price scale; the discrimination lay in the regular use of the industry-wide dual price system itself.

---

[12] The Commission's statement is as follows (R. 5388):

> It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank-car prices to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman and continued to refuse the tank-car price to Ned's Auto Supply Company it would lose these accounts. It had substantial reasons for believing this to be the case; for all of these concerns, except Ned's Auto Supply Company, had already been recognized as entitled to the tank-car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it within the range where it was likely to be so recognized by a major oil company at any time. Thus, the real question is whether or not the actions of the respondent in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank-car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2 (b). [Emphasis added.]

"Good faith", the Commission concluded, was lacking here for three related reasons: (A) Section 2 (b) affords no justification for Standard's use of a general pricing system; (B) in any event, the "good faith" requirement is not satisfied by a showing that Standard's pricing system is also used by some of its competitors; (C) Standard's failure to make a bona fide effort to establish a non-discriminatory pricing system further negatives its claim of "good faith." These three reasons are discussed in the succeeding three sections of this brief.

A. SECTION 2 (b) AFFORDS NO JUSTIFICATION FOR STANDARD'S USE OF A GENERAL PRICING SYSTEM

1. The "good faith" defense applies only in individual competitive situations

a. The doctrine of the Staley and Cement decisions

The Staley case presented the same basic question. There, as in the instant case, the sellers "never attempted to establish their own non-discriminatory price system, and then reduce their price when necessary to meet competition. Instead, they slavishly followed in the first instance a pricing policy which, in their case, resulted in systematic discriminations * * *" (324 U. S. at 754–755). There, too, the ttempt was made under Section 2 (b) to justify this iscriminatory pricing policy on the ground that the ellers' competitors maintained a similar pricing pol-y. In rejecting this defense, this Court pointed out 324 U. S. at 753):

> But § 2 (b) does not concern itself with pricing systems or even with all the seller's discriminatory prices to buyers. It speaks only of the seller's "lower" price and of that only to the extent that it is made "in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." The Act thus places emphasis on individual competitive situations, rather than upon a general system of competition.

'he Court added (324 U. S. at 757): "We cannot say hat a seller acts in good faith when it chooses to dopt such a clearly discriminatory pricing system, at east where it has never attempted to set up a non-iscriminatory system * * *."

And, three years later in the Cement case, this 'ourt said (333 U. S. at 725):

> Section 2 (b) permits a single company to sell one customer at a lower price than it sells to another if the price is "made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor." But this does not mean that § 2 (b) permits a seller to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others. We held to the contrary in the Staley case. There we said that the Act "speaks only of the seller's 'lower' price and of that only to the extent that it is made 'in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor.' The Act > thus places emphasis on individual competitive situations, rather than upon a general system of competition."

Accordingly, the seller's Section 2 (b) defense was rejected since the discriminations involved there were employed "as a practice rather than as a good faith effort to meet 'individual competitive situations'" (ibid.).

The Staley-Cement doctrine was reaffirmed by this Court as recently as last Term. In Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419 (decided subsequent to the decision below), it was contended that the Commission's order, forbidding inter alia use of a zone pricing system for the purpose (or with the effect) of matching competitors' prices, deprived the seller of the benefits of Section 2 (b). While pointing out that Section 2 (b) was necessarily read into every Commission order, this Court warned that Section 2 (b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems" (p. 426) and that "[t]his is not to say that a seller may plead this section in defense of the use of an entire pricing system. The section is designed to protect competitors in individual transactions" (p. 431).

b. The reasons underlying the Staley-Cement doctrine

As the Court pointed out in Staley (324 U. S. at 753), the very phraseology of Section 2 (b) shows a limitation of the defense to "individual competitive situations" as distinguished from "pricing systems." See supra, p. 27. While this fact, coupled with this Court's decisions in Staley, Cement, and National Lead, would seem to be conclusive of the matter, it is nevertheless appropriate, we believe, to point out below some of the other reasons supporting this construction of the statute (see also infra, pp. 46–52).

The indispensable prerequisite for applying the Section 2 (b) defense is a reduction from a preexisting non-discriminatory price scale. See, e. g., the Staley case, 324 U. S. at 754–755. Stated otherwise, the theory of the Section 2 (b) defense is that a seller whose price scale is otherwise lawful should not be precluded from making a discriminatory departure from its price scale if the exemption is deemed necessary in order to retain a customer in the face of a competitive raid. The result is to sanction a degree of price flexibility; the importance of this flexibility in harmonizing the various antitrust laws was emphasized by this Court in its 1951 Standard decision (340 U. S. at 248–250).

However, where (as in the instant case) the seller's price scale is itself discriminatory and where the discrimination consists merely of the regular use of the price scale, there has been no reduction or departure in response to a competitive offer, and Section 2 (b) accordingly affords no justification for the seller's future adherence to its discriminatory price scale. Nor would it be material if it could be shown that subsequently a competitor offered the seller's preferred customers a price comparable to the seller's "lower" price. Even assuming arguendo that the seller's future adherence to its discriminatory price scale in those circumstances could be said to constitute meeting competition, it could not be said to be in "good faith," at least in the absence of a bona fide effort by the seller to adopt a non-discriminatory price scale. Staley, 324 U. S. at 754, 757.

In addition, where the discrimination is a permanent part of a pre-existing system or formula, there is an inherent danger that a seller in Standard's position will attempt to manipulate its overall price scale (both the tank-car and tank-wagon prices) upward for the purpose of offsetting any reduction in its profits because of the discount regularly granted to the "jobber" accounts.[13] (This danger is particularly serious where, as here, competitors employ the same dual price formula.) On the other hand, where actual reductions from a non-discriminatory price scale are made "in individual competitive situations," the probability that the consuming public will have to subsidize the price discrimination is considerably lessened; as to those transactions, it is more likely that the seller will itself bear any "loss."

c. The applicability here of the Staley-Cement doctrine

The court below sought to distinguish Staley and Cement by contrasting the pricing system involved in those cases—the so-called basing-point system—with [13] Cf. Senator Logan's comment on the Robinson-Patman bill: "Discriminations not in accord with sound economy generally involve an element of loss, either of the necessary minimum of profits or perhaps of actual cost, and this loss of profits must be recouped from the business of customers which do not receive the benefits of such discriminations." 80 Cong. Rec. 3113.

---

Similarly, Congressman Utterback said: "Discriminations of the kind forbidden by this bill involve a loss to the seller of his necessary profit and cost on the favored customer's business; and that loss the seller is compelled to make up in higher prices to his other customers, or his business will land in the red." 80 Cong. Rec. 9416.

Standard's pricing method.[14] The attempted distinction is without basis in principle. Both systems were found to be inherently discriminatory. The discriminations arise in the one by reason of location of customers and in the other by reason of classification of customers. But this difference does not warrant any difference in application of the underlying doctrine that Section 2 (b) does not provide justification for systems of pricing.

Standard's pricing policy (like the system in Staley and Cement) represented a general method of competition used not only by Standard but also by major competitors (R. 5388). Standard's tank-car price was granted to those reseller accounts that were classified by it as "jobbers" but without regard to the manner in which they resold (i. e., wholesale or retail).[15] This price was granted pursuant to, and was not a variation from, Standard's established pricing policy. Whether the discriminations arise from the use of a basing-point system, or from a system of arbitrarily classifying customers, is not controlling; for, as this Court emphasized in Staley, Cement, and National Lead, Section 2 (b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems" (Staley, p. 753; Cement, p. 725; National Lead, p. 431), does not permit a seller "to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others" (Cement, p. 725), and relates only to "individual competitive situations" (Staley, p. 753; Cement, p. 725; National Lead, p. 431). This rationale is equally applicable here.

---

[14] But cf. three recent decisions by differently composed panels of the Seventh Circuit: E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152, 155–156, pending on petition for certiorari, No. 101, this Term; Whitaker Cable Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 253, 255, certiorari denied, 353 U. S. 938; C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 241 F. 2d 37, 41, pending on writ of certiorari, No. 110, this Term.

[15] This Court has decided that discriminations cannot be disguised by classifications that do not follow real functional differences. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 474–475.

Nor can this case properly be distinguished on the ground, suggested by the court below, that the basing-point system involved in Staley and Cement "was utilized to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices." First, we believe the court's statement is probably inaccurate with respect to many customers of a seller employing a basing-point system. See Corn Products Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726, 731, 732.[16] Secondly, and in any event, the record is completely devoid of any showing by Standard—which has the burden of proving its "good faith" defense—that the result of its pricing method has been to lower prices. Certainly, no such assurance can be deduced from the mere fact that a price discrimination exists. On the contrary, as already pointed out (supra, p. 30);[3] there is an inherent danger that a seller in Standard's position will attempt to manipulate its over-all price scale (both the tank-car and tank-wagon prices) upward for the purpose of offsetting any reduction in its profits because of the relatively "lower" prices granted to the "jobber" accounts.

---

[16] The basing-point system commonly involves both "phantom freight" and "freight absorption." Where "phantom freight" is charged to the seller's nearby customers, the effect is to charge more than if the seller had charged on an "f. o. b. mill" basis. It is this type of discrimination which was emphasized by the Staley decision, 324 U. S. at 754. On the other hand, where there is "freight absorption" on sales to distant customers, the effect is to charge less than if the seller had charged on an "f. o. b. mill" basis. It was precisely this distinction which the court below, in the Cement case, relied upon in holding that systematic "freight absorption" was in "good faith." Aetna Portland Cement Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 157 F. 2d 533, 560-561 (C. A. 7). This Court, however, rejected the suggested distinction, stating "Nor can we discern under these circumstances any distinction between the 'good faith' proviso as

Finally, the court below stated (R. 5500):

> The gist of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in those cases [Staley and Cement] was that the pricing system being illegal all prices determined thereby were illegal. It follows, according to such reasoning, that the meeting by the seller of a competitor's unlawful price precludes the seller from reliance upon a "good faith" defense.

As the Staley and Cement opinions themselves make clear, the "gist of the reasoning" of those cases is not nearly so restrictive. Moreover, the evils involved are essentially the same regardless of whether there has been an adjudication that the competitor's "equally low price" is illegal. The controlling factor, we emphasize, is that Section 2 (b) "does not concern itself with pricing systems," does not permit applied to a situation involving only phantom freight and one involving only freight absorption. Neither comes within its terms." Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, 725.

---

It should also be noted that establishment of a "punitive base" may well result in lower delivered prices to certain customers. See, e. g., 157 F. 2d at 564–565.

a seller "to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others," and relates only to "individual competitive situations." 324 U. S. at 753; 333 U. S. at 725.

If any doubt ever existed on the matter, it was dispelled by this Court's recent National Lead decision. No adjudication has been made in that case that the individual non-collusive use of a zone-pricing system was illegal; in fact, the Commission expressly reserved decision on that issue (see 352 U. S. at 424). The sellers argued that, since there had been no adjudication of illegality, they should be permitted to use zone pricing to meet competition and that Section 2 (b) gave them that right. As we have already noted, this Court (p. 431) pointed out that Section 2 (b) is incorporated in every Commission order, but added (p. 431): "This is not to say that a seller may plead this section in defense of the use of an entire pricing system. The section is designed to protect competitors in individual transactions."

Thus, a finding of illegality of a competitor's "equally low price" is not a prerequisite to application of the Staley-Cement doctrine; "good faith" under Section 2 (b) and "the use of an entire pricing system" are simply incompatible. Of course, if the competitor's price is found to be unlawful, that ends the matter.[17] But such a finding is surely not indispensable.

---

[17] See also infra, pp. 46–52.

Any argument to the contrary, moreover, necessarily collides with the rule, well settled by both statute and decision, that the burden of proof as to every element of the Section 2 (b) defense is on the price discriminator—not the Commission.[18] See supra, p. 23. In this connection, it is significant, as the opinion below notes (R. 5500-5501), that this Court's 1951 opinion in Standard appears to suggest that proof of the lawfulness of the competitor's "equally low price" is an essential part of a seller's "good faith" defense. 340 U. S. at 238, 246, 247-249, n. 14. The Commission has not construed the 1951 decision in that manner, presumably in part because of difficulties which any seller might have in making such proof. But it certainly does not follow that the Commission should as a consequence be saddled with the contrary burden—i. e., the burden of proving the unlawfulness of the competitor's "equally low price." As already pointed out, it is the price discriminator—not the Commission—which has the burden as to every element of the Section 2 (b) defense. If Standard does not have the burden of proving the lawfulness of the "equally low price" it allegedly met, then a fortiori the Commission does not have the burden of proving the unlawfulness of that price.

---

[18] Obviously, as a practical matter, the price discriminator cannot be expected to adduce evidence of the unlawfulness of its competitor's price. Therefore, unless the Commission assumed that burden, there would be no evidence on which the Commission could make a finding that the competitor's price is unlawful. If such a finding were indispensable to application of the Staley-Cement doctrine, as the court below suggests, then the Commission would be required either to assume the burden in this regard or to let "good faith" defenses be established by default.

It should also be noted that, while it is true that in this proceeding the Commission did not actually adjudicate the legality of the competing prices which Standard allegedly met, the Commission issued similar complaints against three of Standard's competitors, and, after dismissal of those complaints without prejudice, initiated a new investigation based on essentially the same charges.[19] In addition, Standard has insisted that its pricing policies—which the Commission did find to be unlawful—were identical to those of its competitors, and in fact based its Section 2 (b) defense on that ground. In these circumstances, it cannot be said, as the court below remarked, that there is "no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which [Standard] met were lawful" (R. 5501). To the extent that the pricing policies of Standard's competitors are in fact identical to Standard's policies, they, of course, suffer from the same infirmities.

2. Standard's admissions in the prior proceedings establish that its price discriminations were pursuant to a general pricing system

In the Staley case, the court below had similarly set aside the Commission's order. In reinstating the Commission's order, this Court admonished reviewing tribunals that "Congress has left to the Commission the determination of fact in each case whether the person, charged with making discriminatory prices, acted in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence is for the Commission." 324 U. S. at 758. The Court added (p. 760) that "[t]he appraisal of the evidence and the inferences to be drawn from it are for the Commission, not the courts."

---

[19] See note 27, infra.

a. Standard's alleged "reductions"

In the instant case, after referring to the above-quoted statement, the court below found it inapplicable on the ground that "the Commission's decision on the 'good faith' issue is the result of its reasoning, legal in nature * * *" (R. 5497). Nevertheless, later in its opinion, the court stated (R. 5501):

> Moreover, we are unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that [Standard's] prices "were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale." The record affirmatively demonstrates to the contrary. [Standard] sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer. [Standard] had 362 Detroit customers, only four of which purchased at prices reduced from its uniform tank-wagon price.

This statement, if it is intended to suggest that the granting of the tank-car price to the four so-called "jobbers" represented departures from a non-discriminatory price scale or that the tank-car price was not an established part of Standard's price scale, is palpably erroneous. Any such suggestion is flatly contradicted, not only by the Commission's findings of fact, but also by Standard's own admissions in the prior proceedings in this case. Indeed, the Commission's findings of fact rest almost exclusively on these "judicial" admissions.[20]

Thus, in Paragraphs 16 and 17 of its answer (reproduced in the Appendix, infra, pp. 60–63), Standard described in some detail "its general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers" (emphasis added). Standard stated "that such system and practice of selection and classification of customers" was a common one in the oil industry; "that as a result of such necessary selection and classification of customers, and as an integral and basically essential part thereof, and of the system of commercial economy which makes such classifications necessary, differences in prices of the same commodities are made to customers selected and falling within different classifications, and purchasers falling within the classification of wholesalers or jobbers of gasoline are entitled to purchase at tank car prices as distinguished from dealer tank wagon prices at which gasoline is sold to retail resellers" (emphasis added).[21] Standard further stated that a customer, in order to be accorded a "jobber" classification, must meet certain requirements (e. g., a certain volume of business); that each of Standard's four "jobber" customers met those requirements; "that said four customers are each bona fidely qualified to be regarded and are regarded by the oil industry in Detroit as within the classification of wholesale or jobber customers"; and "that said four customers and each of them are legitimately and lawfully entitled to purchase gasoline, and Respondent [Standard] is entitled to sell them gasoline, within their classification as wholesalers or jobbers and at prices which are or may be at the time different and lower than prices charged by Respondent for the same product to Respondent's retail reseller customers without regard to any other consideration * * *."

---

[20] "Judicial" admissions (as distinguished from extra-judicial admissions) include admissions made by a party in the course of any adjudicative proceeding. See IX Wigmore on Evidence (3d ed.) § 2590.

[21] And note Standard's repeated reference in its answer to the "regular tank car price" and "regular tank car basis" (R. 10–11).

The Commission's basic findings do little more than rephrase these admissions, except that the Commission rejected Standard's conclusory allegation that its "system and practice of selection and classification of customers" was a lawful one under the Act.

Nor did Standard ever disavow these admissions during the course of the extensive hearings in the case. On the contrary, Standard introduced voluminous evidence supporting its statements in the answer. Standard's witnesses testified that there were specific requirements for a "jobber" status (R. 1890–1891); that the four large reseller accounts involved here met those requirements (R. 1895); that it did not accord "jobber" status to any reseller that did not meet those requirements (R. 172–174, 2084–2088, 2124); that it would rather lose "jobber" accounts than depart from those requirements (R. 1912–1916); that it had but two prices for resellers' accounts—one for "jobber" accounts and one for ordinary resellers (R. 167– 169, 1899).[22] This testimony, it should be repeated, was offered by Standard itself (the Commission's evidence was merely corroborative). And Standard's 1950 brief in this Court is to like effect.[23]

---

[22] For example, the manager of Standard's Detroit Division said of these four resellers: "We sell them on our regular reseller tank car basis * * " (R. 116). And, Marshall, the manager of Standard's gasoline and refined oil department, explained that: " * * In the oil industry we have a carload price [tank-car] and a tank wagon price and those who operate service stations have a service station price and these are the three units of purchase. We don't operate on the basis of a list price from which various deductions are made" (R. 1100).

It was also emphasized by Standard's witnesses that this system of pricing was used not only in Detroit (R. 1896, 1897, 2065) but elsewhere in the country (R. 943, 1060, 1064, 1075, 1890) and not only by Standard but also by some of its major competitors including Texas, Gulf, and Shell (R. 319-320, 941, 1072, 1897).

[23] Brief for Petitioner, Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 1, 1950 Term: "This case concerns exclusively petitioner's sale of gasoline in the region of Detroit, Michigan, to two classes of customers: (a) to approximately 358 independent retail service stations buying in tank wagon quantities; and (b) to the four jobbers buying in larger tank car quantities.

"Petitioner sold to all its service station customers at the same price—i. e.: the tank wagon price (R. 5058, 131, 161). The deliveries made by tank wagon to these service stations averaged 700 to 800 gallons (R. 112).

"Petitioner sold to all its jobber customers at the same price—i. e., the tank car price." (p. 3, footnote omitted.)

* * * * *

"Citrin, Wayne and Stikeman during 1936-40 and Ned's during 1938-40 'under industry practice and contemplation were bona fide jobbers' (R. 5098) because each of them maintained sufficient bulk storage to take delivery in tank car quantities, owned and operated tank wagons and other facilities for delivery to service stations, had an established business suffi-

At this point in the proceeding, Standard can scarcely be permitted to withdraw these admissions or deny their truthfulness. And Standard can have no real objection to the Commission's reliance on them. For, "it is fundamental that judicial admissions are proof possessing the highest possible probative value. Indeed, facts judicially admitted are facts established not only beyond the need of evidence to prove them, but beyond the power of evidence to controvert them. A fact admitted by answer is no longer a fact in issue." Hill v. Federal Trade Commission, 124 F. 2d 104, 106 (C. A. 5). As Wigmore states, "The vital feature of a judicial admission is universally conceded to be its conclusiveness upon the party making it, i. e., the prohibition of any further dispute of the fact by him, and of any use of evidence to disprove or contradict it" (italics in original). IX Wigmore on Evidence (3d ed.) § 2590 (citing numerous decisions).

---

cient to insure purchases of from one to two million gallons a year, and had adequate credit responsibility (R. 5096-7-8), notwithstanding the fact that Ned's resold entirely at its own service stations to the consuming public and that the other three resold in part in the same way." (p. 4.)

* * * * *

"* * * these customers all belonged to a distinct class of buyers, so recognized throughout the industry." (p. 42.)

* * * * *

"It is patent that the Commission's Order strikes primarily at dual distribution in the same territory (see Point III, infra, p. 45). It is only because petitioner sells to two classes of customers in the same area, admittedly at the going price to each of them, that petitioner, to avoid the restrictions of Paragraph 6 of the Order, may find it necessary to discontinue dealing with one or the other." (p. 43.)

In this case, it was not until after the Commission's decision on remand that Standard attempted to deny what it had previously sought to prove—namely, that the granting of the tank-car price to its four "jobber" customers was pursuant to, and not a departure from, its "system and practice of selection and classification of customers." The label applied to it is of little consequence—"system," "formula," "policy," "method," "practice." What is important is that it "constantly results in [Standard's] getting more money for like goods from some customers than [it] does from others," and that it is not directed to "individual competitive situations." Cement, supra, p. 725; National Lead, supra, p. 431.

b. Standard's alleged "bargaining and haggling."

The court below further stated (R. 5501):

> The bargaining and haggling which took place between [Standard] and the four involved "wholesalers" prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system. For instance, [Standard] over many years refused to give Ned's, its "most valuable tank-wagon customer," any reduction at all despite persistent demands based upon competitive offers. Its reluctant grant of a ½¢ reduction in 1936, increased to 1½¢ in 1938 in response to an "ultimatum" by Ned's, would appear to dispel completely any idea that such reduction in price was systematic, as urged by the Commission.

This statement likewise ignores the Commission's evidentiary findings and Standard's admissions. The tatement also misconceives "the Commission's eory"; for it was never "the Commission's theory at prices were reduced pursuant to a system." On e contrary, as pointed out above, the Commission ound—as Standard had urged—that the discriminaions charged in the complaint did not represent reuctions but rather only the regular application of a ong-established industry-wide "system and practice."

According to Standard's answer (R. 11) and the estimony of its witnesses (R. 126, 130, 167–169), tandard departed from this "system and practice" only one instance—i. e., when it granted Ned's a alf-cent reduction from the tank-wagon price in 936; its officials referred to this as an "exception" R. 167–169). This half-cent reduction to Ned's as accorded at a time when Ned's was still classified s a "non-jobber" dealer and is the only "lower price" this record which could possibly be construed to be "good faith" meeting of competition, since it does ppear to reflect a genuine effort to hold a customer nd it was not any part of Standard's regular sysem of pricing. However, this half-cent reduction is ot a matter now at issue in this proceeding, and the ourt below plainly erred in relying on the conceded "exception"—which is not material here—as a basis or suggesting that Standard did not employ a general ricing system. On the other hand, the tank-car price hich was later accorded to Ned's was found by the ommission to be granted, not in response to any ompetitive offer, but because Ned's at that time met he established requirements for classification as a jobber" by acquiring bulk storage facilities (R. 5389).

The Commission similarly found—as Standard had urged—that Standard's continuance of the tank-car price to the other three "jobbers" (Citrin-Kolb, Stikeman, and Wayne) merely reflected continued application of Standard's "system and practice." As to these three customers, each of whom had achieved "jobber" status and obtained the regular tank-car price some time before the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act, the record contains no evidence that Standard's "lower price" had been initially granted to meet a competitor's offer of an "equally low price."[24] In these circumstances, it is somewhat difficult to understand the reference of the court below (supra) to "bargaining and haggling which took place between [Standard] and the four involved 'wholesalers' prior to a reduction in price to them."

Moreover, any evidence of such "bargaining and haggling" would be completely consistent with the Commission's determination—and Standard's admission—that the discriminations now in issue were part and parcel of a "system and practice of selection and classification of customers." The principal vice of this "system and practice," according to the Commission, is the arbitrariness of the classification—i. e., Standard's designation of certain customers as so-called

---

[24] With respect to any offers made to these three customers subsequent to their being accorded "jobber" status but prior to the passage of the Act, the Commission was of the view that those "which were not continuing offers, are not relevant to show that the specific discriminations in price made by respondent subsequent to June 19, 1936, were made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors" (R. 5387). The two dissenting Commissioners concurred in this view (R. 5416). And see note 6, supra.

"jobbers" (with the resultant tank-car price on all sales to them) regardless of the scope of their retailing operations and in fact regardless of whether they performed any "jobber" function at all. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 474–475. In that economic situation, it would be most surprising indeed if Standard's larger "non-jobber" retailers did not actively seek to be classified as "jobbers." The natural result would be "bargaining and haggling" (i. e., negotiation), provided, of course, that the "non-jobber" could meet Standard's fixed requirements for "jobber" status. This type of "bargaining and haggling," however, does not disprove the existence of a "system and practice of selection and classification of customers," but on the contrary is perhaps an inevitable manifestation of it. Such a "system and practice" presupposes, by definition, some process "of selection and classification of customers"; any negotiation by non-favored customers to obtain "jobber" status is thus within the framework of the "system and practice," not outside it.[25] The mere fact that over the years there might be some slight change in the beneficiaries of Standard's "system and practice" is immaterial so long as an inherently discriminatory price scale is "an integral and basically essential part thereof" (R. 73).[26]

---

[25] In contrast, Standard's 1936 grant to Ned's of a half-cent reduction—which is not in issue here—was not pursuant to Standard's "system and practice." See supra, pp. 10, 43.

[26] This conclusion is reinforced by Standard's failure to make a bona fide effort to rid itself of this "system and practice." See infra, pp. 52–58.

B. IN ANY EVENT, THE "GOOD FAITH" REQUIREMENT IS NOT SATISFIED BY A SHOWING THAT STANDARD'S PRICING SYSTEM IS ALSO USED BY SOME OF ITS COMPETITORS

As already shown (supra, pp. 26–28), it is established by this Court's decisions that Section 2 (b) affords no justification for a seller's use of a general pricing system—i. e., "a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some customers than he does from others." It is also established by Standard's own admissions in the prior proceedings (supra, pp. 36–45) that the discriminations in issue here were pursuant to precisely such a system. Accordingly, we believe the Court need go no further and may reverse on that basis alone.

There are, however, other compelling reasons for rejecting Standard's "good faith" claim. Thus, even assuming arguendo (contrary to Staley, Cement, and National Lead) that Section 2 (b) could in some circumstances be employed in defense of a seller's general pricing system, it does not follow that Standard has sustained its burden. Of primary importance in this regard is the nature of the competitors' prices allegedly being met by Standard. In the Commission's view, the "good faith" requirement is not satisfied by a showing that Standard's pricing system is also used by some of its competitors.

According to Standard's admissions, Standard's dual price formula is used in the Detroit area not only by Standard but also by major competitors such as Gulf, Texas, and Shell.[27] See supra, pp. 6, 28. In other words, on the basis of substantially the same "system and practice" followed by Standard, these competitors likewise classify certain customers as "jobbers" and accord them the tank-car price (R. 5388). And, since both Standard and these competitors select "jobbers" on the basis of "the commonly accepted standards of the industry" (R. 5388, 5416), it may well be that Standard would (at least temporarily) lose its four "jobber" customers if it stopped granting them the tank-car price. The reason, of course, is the strong possibility that these four "jobber" customers could obtain "jobber" classification—and hence the tank-car price—from Standard's competitors employing the same "system and practice."

---

[27] Similar charges of price discrimination were filed against these three companies in 1940. Proceedings thereon, in view of the pendency of this litigation, were deferred until April 3, 1957. On that date, the three complaints were dismissed without prejudice. The Commission's order in each case stated:

> It appearing that the complaint in this proceeding was issued November 29, 1940, and that the acts and practices alleged to have been unlawful all occurred more than sixteen years ago; and
>
> It further appearing that trial of the case has been held in abeyance pending final disposition of the proceeding in the matter of Standard Oil Company, Docket No. 4389, which proceeding is now before the United States Supreme Court for the second time; and
>
> The Commission being of the opinion that irrespective of the final outcome of said proceeding in the matter of Standard Oil Company, Docket No. 4389, it will not now be practicable to try the issues raised by the pleadings in this case; and, accordingly:
>
> It Is Ordered that the complaint herein be, and it hereby is dismissed, it being understood, however, that no decision

The Commission, however, refused to accept Standard's possible loss of the four "jobber" customers > has been made on the merits of the case, and this action is without prejudice to the right of the Commission to conduct a further investigation into the respondent's business practices and to take such further action against the respondent at any time in the future as may be warranted by the then existing circumstances.

On June 18, 1957, the Commission announced a new investigation of the present conduct of the three companies in connection with essentially the same charges of price discrimination. The announcement stated:

> A dual system of pricing used by some major oil companies is currently being investigated by the Bureau of Investigation of the Federal Trade Commission, Harry A. Babcock, Chief of the Bureau, announced today.
>
> He said his office is investigating the effects of a system whereby oil producers sell to regular filling stations at one price and to some large competing operators, classified by the producers as "jobbers," at a lower price.
>
> In his announcement Mr. Babcock referred to the Commission's recent dismissal of complaints charging three major oil companies, Texas, Gulf and Shell, with engaging in this practice.
>
> Mr. Babcock said these complaints had been pending since 1939 awaiting a final decision in the Commission's similar proceeding against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. (A Court of Appeals decision setting aside the Commission's order in that case has been appealed to the Supreme Court.)
>
> Mr. Babcock said the complaints against Texas, Gulf and Shell were dismissed because many of the witnesses who had been scheduled to testify when the complaints were first issued were no longer available and because of difficulties other witnesses might have in testifying about events that took place in the 1930's. In the Standard case, Mr. Babcock pointed out, the evidence is already a matter of record. He also noted that the Commission's dismissal order, issued April 2, made no decision on the merits of the cases and was without prejudice to the Commission's right to conduct further investigations.

under those circumstances as justifying Standard's continued adherence to its dual price formula.[28] As this Court held in Staley, the Section 2 (b) defense is concerned with the matching of prices "in individual competitive situations," not the matching of pricing systems. See supra, pp. 26–27. To make the loss of customers the sole criterion of "good faith"—as Standard argued below [29]—is to extract all [28] Similar Commission rulings, although made on somewhat different facts, were recently upheld by another panel of the court below. E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152, 155–156 (C. A. 7), pending on petition for certiorari, No. 101, this Term; Whitaker Cable Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 253, 255 (C. A. 7), certiorari denied, 353 U. S. 938. Accord, C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 241 F. 2d 37, 41 (C. A. 7), pending on writ of certiorari, No. 110, this Term. In all three of these cases, the Commission found that each seller's discriminations were only a reflection of its nation-wide pricing system formulated to meet competition generally.

---

[29] In its brief (pp. 14–15) in the Court of Appeals, Standard contended: "The Commission's own factual finding affirmatively demonstrates petitioner's good faith. The Commission did not attempt to overturn the finding of the trial examiner that petitioner's price reductions were granted solely to retain the business of four valuable customers. Instead, the Commission affirmed the examiner's factual analysis, and acknowledged that petitioner had 'substantial reasons for believing' that without reducing its prices 'it would lose these accounts' (R. 5388). This finding fully satisfies the tests of the Section 2 (b) defense as defined by the Supreme Court."

The finding in question is set forth in full in note 12, supra. As reference to the full finding will confirm, it does no more than recognize that, since Standard's pricing system is also used by Standard's competitors, Standard's failure to adhere to "the commonly accepted standards of the industry" (emphasis meaning from the "good faith" requirement.[30] The argument also ignores what inevitably would be the practical consequences of its adoption.

If a discriminatory pricing system could be justified as a "good faith" meeting of a competitor's equally low price merely because competitors are using a comparable system, the Robinson-Patman Act would be effectively nullified in large measure. Such a construction would immunize from the Act's requirements every established industry-wide systematic method of price discrimination. It would, moreover, actually provide a positive incentive to competing suppliers to adopt parallel pricing systems so that each can defend its own system on the basis of similar systems used by others. The Act, the Commission properly held, precludes such consequences. See Staley, 324 U. S. at 754.[31] added) might (at least temporarily) cause the loss of its so-called "jobber" customers. Under the Staley-Cement doctrine, such a loss is in no sense determinative of Standard's "good faith," as the Commission held.

---

[30] See note 9, supra.

[31] In Staley, the Court rejected a comparable interpretation, pointing out (324 U. S. at 753-754): "* * * If respondents' argument is sound, it would seem to follow that even if the competitor's pricing system were wholly in violation of § 2 of the Clayton Act, respondents could adopt and follow it with impunity.

"This startling conclusion is admissible only upon the assumption that the statute permits a seller to maintain an otherwise unlawful system of discriminatory prices, merely because he had adopted it in its entirety, as a means of securing the benefits of a like unlawful system maintained by his competitors. * * * We think the conclusion is inadmissible, in view

For example, under the decision below, the Commission's complaint against Standard must fall because of the availability of an "equally low price" from Gulf, Texas, or Shell. Similarly, Gulf, Texas, and Shell can presumably defend the validity of their dual price formula because of the availability of Standard's "equally low price" (the tank-car price involved in this proceeding).[32] In other words, as long as competing sellers follow the same discriminatory price policies, each is protected. The result would be to insulate from attack a price pattern deeply entrenched in the industry—not only in the Detroit area, but also elsewhere in the country (R. 319–320, 941, 943, 1060, 1064, 1072, 1075, 1897)—long prior to passage of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Conversely, the anomalous effect of such a construction would be to limit the impact of the Robinson-Patman Act to industries in which price discrimination is not as deeply entrenched—i. e., industries where sellers do not follow parallel pricing policies. For example, in Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, this Court upheld a Commission cease-and-desist order against a seller's of the clear Congressional purpose not to sanction by § 2 (b) the excuse that the person charged with a violation of the law was merely adopting a similarly unlawful practice of another."

---

In the instant case, Standard—which has the burden of proof on the "good faith" issue—did not undertake to show the lawfulness of the dual price formulas of its competitors. See supra, pp. 35–36.

[32] See note 27, supra. Indeed, Standard's competitors would probably argue that Standard's "equally low price" had been adjudicated to be "lawful" if the decision below were affirmed.

use of a discriminatory "quantity discount system" (p. 41); and in Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, the Court upheld a Commission cease-and-desist order against an arbitrary system (as in this case) of classifying customers for functional discount purposes. But if Section 2 (b)—as the decision below apparently holds—immunizes a seller as long as his competitors employ the same pricing system, then it necessarily follows that the Morton Salt Company and the Ruberoid Company could also have avoided liability simply by showing that their discriminatory practices are common in their respective industries. There is no basis, we submit, for imputing to Congress an intention to exempt from the Act those industries where price discrimination is most rampant.[33]

C. STANDARD'S FAILURE TO MAKE A BONA FIDE EFFORT TO ESTABLISH A NON-DISCRIMINATORY PRICING SYSTEM FURTHER NEGATIVES ITS CLAIM OF "GOOD FAITH"

In Staley, as in the instant case, the sellers "never attempted to establish their own non-discriminatory price system, and then reduce their price when necessary to meet competition. Instead they have slavishly followed in the first instance a pricing policy which, in their case, resulted in systematic discriminations * * *" (324 U. S. at 754–755). The Court held in part (324 U. S. at 757): "We cannot say that a seller acts in good faith when it chooses to adopt such a clearly discriminatory pricing system, at least where it has never attempted to set up a non-discriminatory system * * *."

---

[33] See note 31, supra, and note 34, infra.

Similarly here, in the course of its lengthy findings on the "good faith" issue, the Commission inter alia found that the circumstances which existed at the time of the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act "imposed upon [Standard] the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute" and that Standard "neither did this nor made any bona fide attempt so to do" (R. 5389). In this regard, the Commission found that at all relevant times Standard knew or should have known of the probability of competitive injury resulting from its pricing policy (R. 5389) and knew or should have known that the price differential could not be cost-justified (R. 5389). The Commission's exact language is as follows (R. 5388–5389):

> Respondent has had long experience in the sale and distribution of gasoline, both through service stations which it owned or leased and operated and through its bulk plants to service station operators. It follows that respondent is thoroughly familiar with the costs of operating retail service stations and bulk plants, with the margins of gross profits available to retail service stations and to operators of bulk plants, and with the competitive results which may be expected when some retailers receive lower prices than competing retailers. At all relevant times, respondent knew or had the means of knowing and should have known that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers who bought such gasoline at different prices and resold it in competition with one another. It also knew or should have known that the price differences which it granted could not be justified on the basis of differences in the cost of manufacture, sale and delivery resulting from differing methods or quantities in which its gasoline was sold or delivered. These circumstances existed at the time the Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act became law, and their existence imposed upon respondent the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute. Respondent neither did this nor made any bona fide attempt so to do.

Thus, despite passage of the Robinson-Patman Act and despite knowledge of the discriminatory and injurious nature of its pricing system, Standard took no steps to rid itself of that system but instead simply followed the industry pattern. Compare Staley, supra. Such conduct, in the Commission's view, further negatived Standard's claim of "good faith."

The court below, however, denied that Standard had "the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute." According to the court (R. 5499): "If [Standard's] pricing policy was lawful prior to the [Robinson-Patman] amendment the same policy was lawful afterward." This holding completely ignores the important changes brought about by passage of the Robinson-Patman Act and recognized repeatedly by this Court. E. g., Staley, supra, 324 U. S. at 752-753. The court below referred to this Court's statement in the 1951 Standard decision (340 U. S. at 242) that "None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense." But the obvious meaning of this remark is shown by the further statement in the same opinion (340 U. S. at 251) that "* * * the proviso [2 (b)] is readily understandable as simply continuing in effect a defense which is equally absolute, but more limited in scope than that which existed under § 2 of the original Clayton Act" (emphasis added). See also 340 U. S. at 248, n. 14. Indeed, a mere comparison of the language of the Act before and after the amendment is sufficient to establish beyond question that the requisites of the "good faith" defense were substantially changed; and, if any possible doubt remained, the legislative history is fully dispositive.[34] [34] As introduced, neither the House nor the Senate bill contained a provision similar to that in the original Section 2 of the Clayton Act, which read: "Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent * * * discrimination in price in the same or different communities made in good faith to meet competition." In the Senate, an amendment was adopted incorporating this provision. 80 Cong. Rec. 6426, 6435. In the House, the Judiciary Committee reported the bill with a provision substantially like that finally adopted, avoiding the vague phrase "to meet competition" and substituting the narrower criterion "to meet an equally low price of a competitor." 80 Cong. Rec. 8139. The House report on the bill stated in this regard: "This proviso represents a contraction of an exemption now contained in Section 2 of the Clayton Act which permits discriminations without limit where made in good faith to meet competition." H. Rep. 2287, 74th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 16.

---

The conference rejected the Senate version and approved the House provision. The conference report stated (H. Rep. 2951, As the above quotation from the Commission's findings (supra, pp. 53–54) makes abundantly clear, there were two principal "circumstances" whose "existence" at the time of passage of the Robinson-Patman Act "imposed upon [Standard] the duty and obligation of reviewing its pricing policy and taking such action as might be necessary to bring that policy into conformity with the new statute." These two "circumstances" were: (a) that Standard knew or should have known of the probability of competitive injury resulting from its pricing policy; and (b) that Standard knew or should have known that its price differential could not be cost-justified.[35] In dealing with these subsidiary factual findings as to "circumstances," the court below treated each as if it had no connection whatever with the conclusion it was plainly designed to support.

74th Cong., 2d Sess., pp. 6–7; 80 Cong. Rec. 9414): "This language [of the Senate bill] is found in existing law, and in the opinion of the conferees is one of the obstacles to enforcement of the present Clayton Act. The Senate receded, and the language is stricken. A provision relating to the question of meeting competition * * * is included in subsection (b) in the conference text as follows: [quoting the present provision]."

As a different panel of the Seventh Circuit, subsequent to the decision below, stated in a somewhat different context: "it must be remembered that in enacting the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1528 (1936), 15 U. S. C. A. § 13, Congress undertook to strengthen this phase of the Clayton Act which it thought had been too restrictive in practice by directing emphasis to individual competitive situations rather than competition in general." E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152, 155, pending on petition for certiorari, No. 101, this Term.

[35] Standard's extraordinary assertion that these two subsidiary factual findings constitute "the first two grounds of the FTC ruling" (Br. Opp. 2) is wholly without substance, as even cursory examination of the Commission's findings will confirm.

As to the Commission's finding that Standard knew or should have known of the probability of competitive injury resulting from its pricing policy, the court below held that (R. 5499) "This is the same theory upon which the Commission's previous order was bottomed and which was expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court (pages 249-250)" in the 1951 Standard decision. However, nothing in that decision (340 U. S. 231) even remotely indicates that knowledge of probability of competitive injury cannot be legitimately considered on the "good faith" issue, particularly (as here) in determining whether a seller had an obligation to review its pricing policy on passage of the Robinson-Patman Act. Presumably the reference of the court below is to the quite different matter of the completeness of the Section 2 (b) defense in the face of competitive injury.

As to the Commission's finding that Standard knew or should have known that its price differential could not be cost-justified, the court below held that this finding was "irrelevant" because Standard had abandoned its defense of cost justification (R. 5499). Standard's knowledge of the lack of cost justification, however, is not "irrelevant" on the issue of "good faith." Here, for example, it was material in considering whether Standard evidenced "good faith" when it failed to make any bona fide effort to change its pricing policy after passage of the Robinson-Patman Act. Conversely, if Standard had reasonably believed the differential was cost-justified, its "good faith" claim might thereby have been strengthened.

It is not necessary to determine whether the Commission's rejection of Standard's Section 2 (b) defense may be placed solely on Standard's failure, in the face of the "circumstances" discussed above, to make a bona fide effort on passage of the Robinson-Patman Act to establish a non-discriminatory pricing policy. Instead of constituting a wholly independent ground, the Commission's findings in this regard constitute another aspect of what it characterized (R. 5388) as "the real question"—namely, "whether or not the actions of [Standard] in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank-car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2 (b)." For the reasons set forth in this and preceding sections of the brief, this question must, we believe, be answered in the negative, as the Commission held.

CONCLUSION.

It is respectfully submitted that the judgment below should be reversed and the case remanded to the Court of Appeals for consideration of the appropriateness of the terms of the Commission's order.

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General.
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General.
EARL E. POLLOCK,
Assistant to the Solicitor General.

EARL W. KINTER,
General Counsel,
JAMES E. CORKEY,
Assistant General Counsel,
MILES J. BROWN,
Attorney.
Federal Trade Commission.

SEPTEMBER 1957.

APPENDIX

Paragraphs 16 and 17 of Standard's answer (R. 12–15) state:

> Respondent alleges that since the time each of the gasoline customers named in Paragraph Three of the Complaint acquired its own bulk storage, distribution equipment and wholesale facilities, that such customer is entitled to be classified as a wholesale or jobber buyer of gasoline as distinguished from a retail reseller or service station operator who purchases gasoline on an entirely different basis of taking frequent small deliveries by tank truck from a supplier who delivers into relatively small storage tanks in or upon the service station premises, which tanks are directly connected to the retail pumps. Further, that such wholesaler or jobber buyers perform a distinctly different service and function and operate upon a different basis from retail sellers, and that such differences and distinctions in services and functions and between methods of operation have been recognized for many decades last past and are presently recognized and have been so recognized since June 19, 1936, in Detroit and elsewhere throughout the entire United States by the entire oil industry as well as by other industries dealing in substantially all kinds of consumer goods, and that in consequence of such differences and distinctions in operations, functions and services, and the essential recognition thereof, the oil industry and other industries in Detroit and throughout the rest of the United States has and does classify and bona fidely select customers on the basis of functional services and of methods of operations entitling customers to be classified in distinctive and distinguishable classifications. Further, that such classifications are essential and necessary and appropriate to the existing and continuing business and commercial activity in consumer commodities, including oil products, in Detroit and throughout the United States, and that such system and practice of selection and classification of customers in the oil industry and other industries in Detroit and throughout the United States forms a necessary, indispensable and integral part of the commercial economy of this nation, and one which must be considered, recognized, met, and participated in by an operator engaged in the business of distribution and marketing of oil products if such business is to fairly and successfully survive in the market place in Detroit or elsewhere in the United States. Further, that as a result of such necessary selection and classification of customers, and as an integral and basically essential part thereof, and of the system of commercial economy which makes such classifications necessary, differences in prices of the same commodities are made to customers selected and falling within different classifications, and purchasers falling within the classification of wholesalers or jobbers of gasoline are entitled to purchase at tank car prices as distinguished from dealer tank wagon prices at which gasoline is sold to retail resellers.

17

Respondent alleges that its general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers, is as follows:

That such wholesale or jobber customer so classified shall have adequate bulk storage of his own; that he be equipped to receive bulk deliveries by tank car or truck train into such storage; that he have adequate distribution and delivery facilities; that he make tank car purchases in substantial volume and do a continuing substantial volume of business as a bona fide gasoline dealer maintaining and operating an established gasoline business; that he have satisfactory credit rating; that he maintain a sufficient personnel and all requisite facilities and equipment to adequately operate his business, service his customers, and perform his functions as a wholesaler or jobber, and assume the hazard and expense of fully operating his own business.

Respondent alleges that each of the four customers named in Paragraph Three of the Complaint fully, fairly, and reasonably falls within not only the requirements set forth in Paragraph 17 above but within all fair, reasonable, usual and proper requirements for classification as a wholesaler or jobber, and that each maintains its own adequate bulk storage, delivery tank trucks, salesmen and operating personnel; buys in substantial tank car or truck train lots; buys commodities other than gasoline in wholesale and carload lots; bears all expense of its own operations, no part of which are borne by Respondent; becomes immediately the absolute owner of the gasoline delivered into its storage by Respondent and controls its disposition; does not depend upon or desire that its customers be serviced by Respondent's salesmen, and Respondent's salesmen do not service or solicit such customers; assumes the risk of carrying its own inventories and of extending its own credits and making collections, and assumes all the hazards of its own operations. Further, that said four customers are each bona fidely qualified to be regarded and are regarded by the oil industry in Detroit as within the classification of wholesale or jobber customers, and they each are able to purchase as such from a great number of gasoline suppliers operating in Detroit competitively with Respondent. Further, that Respondent is without power to, and is neither entitled nor required to police, control or dictate the manner or method of disposition of such gasoline as may be employed by such customers, and that such gasoline becomes the absolute property of such customers upon their purchase thereof from Respondent. Further, that said four customers and each of them are legitimately and lawfully entitled to purchase gasoline, and Respondent is entitled to sell them gasoline, within their classification as wholesalers or jobbers and at prices which are or may be at the time different and lower than prices charged by Respondent for the same product to Respondent's retail reseller customers without regard to any other consideration and without regard to any relation which such price differential may or may not bear to Respondent's differing operating costs arising from differing costs of manufacture, differing costs arising out of different methods of sale or delivery, or otherwise, and that any such acts upon Respondent's part and the existence of any such facts have not and do not constitute a violation of the meaning and terms of Section 2 (A) of the Clayton Act as amended and are not unlawful thereunder or under any law.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE 1957

FILED

NOV 7 1957

JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

No. 24

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER

v.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General,
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General,
EARL E. POLLOCK,
Assistant to the Solicitor General,
Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.

EARL W. KINTNER,
General Counsel,
JAMES E. CORKEY,
Assistant General Counsel,
MILES J. BROWN,
Attorney,
Federal Trade Commission, Washington 25, D. C.

INDEX

Page

I. The brief of Standard Oil Company 1

    A. The court below expressly denied that the case presented a "factual" question 2

    B. The alleged "factual" holdings of the court below as to specific offers made by Standard's competitors, are either immaterial or clearly erroneous 5

    C. Standard's use of a dual price "policy," "practice," "system," is fully established by Standard's admissions throughout the prior proceedings 12

    D. The report of the hearing examiner is basically in accord with the Commission's findings 20

    E. Apart from the Section 2 (b) defense Standard's dual price "policy," "practice," "system" is clearly unlawful 25

II. The brief of the "jobber" amici 30

CITATIONS

Cases:

Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61 32

Doubleday & Co., Inc., Dkt. 5897, CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, par. 25,634 28

Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U. S. 67 5

Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 .... 16, 24

Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 .... 25-26, 27

Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419 .... 16, 29

Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470 .... 18, 28, 29, 31

Cases—Continued Page

Ford Motor Co. v. Labor Board, 305 U. S. 364 — 21
General Foods Corporation, Dkt. 6018, CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, par. 25,888 — 29
Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580 — 21
Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498 — 21
Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co., et al., 324 U. S. 746 — 5, 16, 24
Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 340 U. S. 231 — 22, 24, 25
Watts v. Indiana, 338 U. S. 49 — 2

Statute:

Administrative Procedure Act, 60 Stat. 237:
Section 8 (5 U. S. C. 1007) — 21
Section 11 (5 U. S. C. 1010) — 21
Section 12 (5 U. S. C. 1011) — 21

Miscellaneous:

Cassady, Price Making and Price Behavior in the Petroleum Industry (Yale University Press, 1954), pp. 199-200 — 10, 14
16 C. F. R. § 2.20 (Cum. Supp. 1938–1943) — 20
5 Fed. Reg. 2423, as amended, 6 Fed. Reg. 832 — 20
11 Fed. Reg. 7069 — 21
Fleming, Oil Prices and Competition (American Petroleum Institute, 1953), pp. 26–28 — 14
H. Rep. No. 1980, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 47 — 21
Shniderman, "The Tyranny of Labels"—A Study of Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 60 Harv. L. Rev. 571 — 29
S. Rep. No. 752, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 29–30 — 21

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

No. 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, PETITIONER
v.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY

REPLY BRIEF FOR THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

I. THE BRIEF OF STANDARD OIL COMPANY

The brief filed by Standard is, in large measure, unresponsive to the Government's contentions. By stating those contentions incorrectly (infra, pp. 13, 19–20), and by once again attempting to disavow its prior repeated admissions (infra, pp. 12–19), Standard now apparently seeks to obscure—under a haze of alleged "factual" questions—the issue on which certiorari was granted.[1] Standard (Br. 2, 14–15, 20, 24–28) argues that these alleged "factual" questions were the basis of the Court of Appeals' decision, that "This Court Should Accept the Conclusion Below That Respondent's Defense Was 'Firmly Established' by the Record" (Br. 64), and that "This Court Will Not Supplant the Court of Appeals as the Initial Reviewer of Administrative Action" (Br. 66). Therefore, Standard argues, this Court must affirm.

---

[1] This issue, Standard contends (Br. Opp. 6), "was not adjudicated below". See the Commission's Reply Brief in Support of Petition for Certiorari, pp. 2–5.

"But 'issue of fact' is a coat of many colors. It does not cover a conclusion drawn from uncontroverted happenings, when that conclusion incorporates standards of conduct or criteria for judgment * * *." Watts v. Indiana, 338 U. S. 49, 51 (per Frankfurter, J.). Particularly is this so in the instant case since the court below expressly denied that the case presented any "factual" question (infra, pp. 2–5). Moreover, the court's statements relied upon by Standard as being "factual" are either immaterial or clearly erroneous (infra, pp. 5–12).

Indeed, the only "factual" conflict in this case, we shall show, is between Standard's present version of the facts, on the one hand, and Standard's prior admissions (including its formal answer and the testimony of its key officials), on the other.

A. THE COURT BELOW EXPRESSLY DENIED THAT THE CASE PRESENTED A "FACTUAL" QUESTION

In determining whether the court below based its decision on "legal" or "factual" grounds, certainly the court itself would be in the best position to know its own intention. On this matter, the court was quite explicit. At virtually the outset of its opinion, after quoting the decision of the Commission that Standard had failed to meet its burden of proving "good faith," the court stated (R. 5496–5497):

> Whether the decision of the Commission under the attending circumstances represents a finding of fact or a conclusion of law is of importance. We are of the view that it falls within the latter category, and this notwithstanding the statement in Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Manufacturing Co., et al., 324 U. S. 746, 758:
>
> "Congress has left to the Commission the determination of fact in each case whether the person, charged with making discriminatory prices, acted in good faith to meet a competitor's equally low prices. The determination of this fact from the evidence is for the Commission."
>
> The Commission in its brief appears to recognize that its decision on this critical issue is a conclusion of law * * * Certainly there is no dispute as to the evidentiary facts as found by the Examiner in the original proceeding. Referring thereto, the Commission in its brief states, "Here the facts as such are not in dispute, it is simply a matter of applying the law to the facts." Moreover, the Commission's decision on the "good faith" issue is the result of its process of reasoning, legal in nature, a portion of which, as we shall subsequently show, has been repudiated by the Supreme Court. Such being the case, the weight to be attached to its decision is dependent upon the reasoning by which it is reached. [Emphasis added.]

The court might also have referred to the following statement in Standard's brief below (p. 6): "The con- trolling facts are not in dispute. The trial examiner's report * * * sets out the facts essential to a resolution of this case." (Emphasis added.) In addition, Standard's brief below (pp. 3, 14–16) repeatedly emphasized that the Commission's "own factual findings * * * establish [Standard's] 'good faith' as a matter of law." (Emphasis added.)

We are unaware of any reason why this case—which the court below and both parties agreed was a "law" case—should now become a "fact" case on reaching the Supreme Court. The only supervening development is the action of the court below (after being assured by Standard that the controlling facts are not in dispute and that the Commission's own findings established "good faith") in setting aside the Commission's order. Thus Standard is no longer petitioning for relief but is seeking to protect its victory below. But that difference surely is insufficient to change the basic nature of the case. If a "de novo appraisal of the record" (Br. 29) was not essential in the court below, it likewise is not essential now.

Moreover, as the above-quoted excerpt from the opinion makes clear, the court regarded the "fact"-or-"law" question as one of "importance" because the answer to that question was, in the court's view, largely determinative of its scope of review over the Commission decision on the "good faith" issue. Having concluded that the Commission decision on that issue was "a conclusion of law" and "the result of its process of reasoning, legal in nature," the court stated that "the weight to be attached to [the Commission's] decision is dependent upon the reasoning by which it is reached." The court thus found that it was unfettered by the limitations which would have been otherwise applicable and in particular rejected the pointed admonition in the Staley opinion (324 U. S. 746, 758) against judicial interference with the Commission's fact-finding function in connection with the "good faith" issue.[2]

But Standard's argument—an extraordinary one in the circumstances—is that the court then proceeded to dispose of the "good faith" issue on "factual" grounds. If Standard were correct in that argument, it would mean that the court treated the "good faith" issue as one of "law" for the purpose of justifying freer review and then treated the issue as one of "fact" in deciding the case. Such action would in itself constitute reversible error. Surely it would be difficult to conceive of a clearer abuse of judicial power calling for correction by this Court in the exercise of its supervisory power. But the Court of Appeals, we believe, cannot be charged with having taken such action.

B. THE ALLEGED "FACTUAL" HOLDINGS OF THE COURT BELOW AS TO SPECIFIC OFFERS MADE BY STANDARD'S COMPETITORS ARE EITHER IMMATERIAL OR CLEARLY ERRONEOUS

While there are doubtless some statements of an apparently "factual" nature in the latter part of the opinion, those statements cannot be read as anything more than ambiguous dicta. Certainly they cannot be accepted as findings based upon a "de novo appraisal of the record."

---

[2] See also Federal Trade Commission v. Algoma Lumber Co., 291 U. S. 67, 73. In Algoma, this Court held that it was error for a reviewing court, in passing on the validity of a Federal Trade Commission order, "to make its own appraisal of the testimony, picking and choosing for itself among uncertain and conflicting inferences. Statute and decision (Federal Trade Comm'n v. Pacific States Paper Trade Assn., 273 U. S. 52, 61, 63) forbid that exercise of power."

For example, Standard (Br. 2, 25, 27, 48) places principal reliance on the following statement in the opinion: "[Standard] sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer." Standard (Br. 28) even argues that it is "on the basis of these facts" [Standard's italics] that the Staley-Cement doctrine was properly applied here. After quoting the court's statement, Standard asserts (ibid.) that "These price reductions made by [Standard] on widely separate occasions over a period of years to retain the business of four of its several hundred Detroit customers are surely 'individual competitive transactions' and 'situations' within the meaning of this Court's guides [in Staley and Cement]."

This contention can readily be shown to be clearly erroneous on three grounds.

1. Three of the four "jobbers" (Citrin-Kolb, Stikeman, and Wayne) were first granted the tank-car price by Standard prior to the enactment of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936 (R. 5385-5386). Therefore, as was held by the hearing examiner (R. 1241) and by the unanimous Commission (including the two dissenting Commissioners on whom Standard relies) (R. 5387, 5416), any competitive offers on those "widely separate occasions" are wholly immaterial to

MICRO CARD
TRADE MARK ®

355 -57

MATTHEW BENDER & COMPANY
MB

prove justification for Standard's continuance of its discriminatory pricing policy after 1936.[3]

2. In any event, the record contains no evidence that Standard's tank-car price had been initially granted to these three "jobbers" to meet a competitor's offer of an "equally low price." Thus, Citrin-Kolb was initially granted "jobber" status and the tank-car price in 1928 (or 1929), but the first competitive offer was not made to Citrin-Kolb until 1930 (R. 1260–1269, 2003).[4] Stikeman was granted "jobber" status and the tank-car price in 1932, but there is no evidence of any competitive offer prior to that time.[5] More-

---

[3] Inconsistently, Standard later (Br. 41) recognizes that it is the post-1936 price discriminations which must be justified.

[4] This offer was by the Hicock Oil Company after Standard ~~had ac~~corded "jobber" status and the tank-car price to Citrin-Kolb (R. 1261). Raupagh, Standard's Detroit Division Manager, testified concerning this "jobber" that "The first offer that I remember was about 1930" (i. e., the Hicock offer) (R. 2002; see also R. 1321). Citrin testified that he had earlier questioned the Paragon Oil Company with respect to the availability of the tank-car price, but there is no evidence of any offer by Paragon to Citrin-Kolb (R. 1253–1254). As Citrin testified, "there was no price discussed at all" and Paragon's representative "was going to investigate" (R. 1254).

Nor is there anything in the record to indicate that the practice first got under way with the grant of the tank-car price to Citrin-Kolb. Raupagh testified that the "jobber" method had been an integral part of the gasoline marketing structure "ever since I have been in the oil business" (R. 1892). Dyer, another Standard witness, said the same (R. 940).

[5] The record does not show any competitive offer to Stikeman until after it had been accorded "jobber" status and the tank-car price. Standard subsequently lost this customer for a short time prior to 1936 (R. 2013). But its original classification as a "jobber" was apparently not preceded by any competitive offer.

over, as pointed out in Standard's answer (R. 9) and the dissenting Commission opinion (R. 5412), Standard granted Stikeman the tank-car price at the very inception of Stikeman's business. Standard therefore is quite in error in repeatedly asserting (Br. 2, 4, 6, 20, 27, 28, 31–32, 48, 65) that it only granted the tank-car price to retain a customer; for, with respect to Stikeman, Standard had no customer to retain when it granted the tank-car price. Similarly, there is no evidence of a competitive offer to Wayne prior to Standard's grant of "jobber" status and the tank-car price to Wayne in 1935.[6]

In these circumstances, it is apparent that the court below could not have made a "de novo appraisal of the record" as a basis for its assertion that "[Standard] sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer.[7] This assertion—which suggests that Standard accorded "jobber" status only involuntarily—is also in basic conflict with the extensive testimony of Standard's witnesses as to the commercial desirability of using "jobbers" (R. 1013–1023), including Marshall's acknowledgment that the question of whether to sell direct or through jobbers "was resolved on the economies and advantages of distribution, as the particular company viewed it at the time in the locality" (R. 1125; see also R. 1109). Another Standard witness,

---

[6] Ledbetter, the president of Wayne, testified that his company "became a Standard Oil jobber" and thus obtained the tank-car price "when the volume increased to approximately 1,000,000 gallons per annum" (R. 983). He said (R. 984): "Well, the reason I got on that basis, or the principal reason, I believe, was the fact that I succeeded after two years' effort in selling them on the idea that I could do a better job for less money." Neither Ledbetter (R. 378–380, 982–985) nor Raupagh (R. 2011–2012) testified as to a competitive offer to supply the needs of Wayne's numerous stations.

It may also be noted that the record contains no evidence of any competitive offers to Stikeman or Wayne from the time of the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act to the filing of the complaint in this proceeding (R. 5386).

---

[7] For the same reasons, there is no foundation for Standard's assertion (Br. 48) that "Respondent's Lower Prices, Granted in Sporadic Instances to Hold Its Own Customers, Could Hardly Be Relied on by Competitors to Defend Their Price Discriminations."

It may also be noted that Standard's argument in the court below was quite different. There, Standard (Br. 12, 14) vigorously contended that its "good faith" was "conclusively documented" and "affirmatively demonstrate[d]" by the Commission's finding (see infra, pp. 22–23) that Standard's denial of the tank-car price to the four "jobber" accounts might result in their loss as customers since all four qualified for "jobber" status "under the commonly accepted standards of the industry" (R. 5388). As pointed out in our main brief (pp. 49–52), adoption of Standard's argument would immunize from the Act's requirements every discriminatory price formula followed by two or more sellers in the same industry; for, in those circumstances, each seller could justify his price formula on the basis of the availability of "an equally low price" from his competitor. Conversely, as we pointed out, adoption of Standard's argument would limit the Robinson-Patman Act to industries where sellers do not follow parallel pricing policies.

Dyer, detailed the advantages to a supplier of selling through "jobbers" (R. 959-960).[8]

3. Finally, even assuming arguendo that pre-1936 offers were material and that each of the four "jobbers" had been initially granted the tank-car price in response to a competitor's offer of an "equally low

---

[8] Among the advantages he enumerated were the following: "the local jobber is usually a long-time citizen in the community" and hence can buy or lease property more advantageously "than some large company that comes in from the outside"; "[h]e is usually able to make a better selection of his employees," "get a higher degree of loyal and cooperative response" from them, and "frequently works his employees longer hours than his larger competitor"; "[h]e frequently doesn't have to pay the general market level of wages; and frequently doesn't pay it"; "he is not amenable or answerable to many laws" such as "chain store tax laws"; "[t]he Robinson-Patman Act, which has been the bane of most marketers' lives since it was passed some years ago, rests very lightly upon the local independent jobber."

This list of advantages is corroborated in large part by Cassady, Price Making and Price Behavior in the Petroleum Industry, pp. 199-200 (published in 1954 by the Yale University Press on a grant by the American Petroleum Institute). Professor Cassady states the following reasons for using "jobbers":

"1. Extensive distribution can be effected without large capital investment. As a corollary, suppliers may be able to secure important distribution facilities at minimum development costs by taking over established distributors.

"2. The jobber frequently is a power in his own community and may produce more business than would a salaried employee.

"3. The use of a distributor system may result in valuable jobber good will.

"4. Local distributors who own their own businesses have greater incentive to work hard and hence may be more productive.

"5. Jobber operations are advantageous if the need for price price," it certainly does not follow that Standard would thereby be justified in continuing to grant the tank-car price regularly for an indefinite period. Typically, competitive offers are of limited duration; once such an offer expires, Standard can hardly say that it is only "meeting competition" in "individual competitive situations" if thereafter it accords the tank-car price to the customer year after year after year. The Section 2 (b) defense does not provide a seller with an irrevocable license to discriminate after the "individual competitive situations" are past. Thus, if Standard (as its brief, pp. 28, 48, suggests) is now relying exclusively on specific competitive offers and not on "the mere 'availability' of lower prices" from competitors (Br. 48), then Standard must show that specific offers were kept open to each of the four "jobber" customers throughout the years in question. No such showing has been—or can be—made on this record.[9]

It should also be noted that, if Standard is now relying exclusively on specific competitive offers and not on "the mere 'availability' of lower prices" from cutting is indicated, since such operations can be utilized by suppliers as 'bargain basements.'

---

"6. Distributor operations eliminate the need for a great deal of accounting and sales supervision.

"It should be emphasized that no one plan of wholesale distribution is better than another under all circumstances. The question is, which one will deliver the highest overall realization under given circumstances? The answer is that companies are differently situated, with the result that different types of systems are called for depending on the circumstances."

[9] As to the alleged continuing offer of Red Indian to Ned's, see note 16, infra.

competitors (ibid.), then it necessarily follows that a reversal, without even the necessity of reaching the Staley-Cement issue, would be required in the event that the Court accepts the Commission's findings that Standard did not grant the tank-car price to any of the four "jobbers" in response to a specific competitive offer. The Staley-Cement issue arises from the Commission's further finding (R. 5388) that Standard had "substantial reasons for believing" that denial of the tank-car price to the four "jobbers" would result in their loss as customers; and that finding rests, not on any evidence of specific offers, but instead rests expressly and solely on the fact that all four qualified for "jobber" status "under the commonly accepted standards of the industry" and thus could probably obtain "recognition" as a "jobber" from a competitor following the same pricing policy (ibid.). Therefore, if we now are to confine ourselves to evidence of specific offers, this Court need go no further than decide (as we believe we have shown supra, pp. 5–11) that the court below clearly erred in stating that Standard "sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer" (R. 5501).

C. STANDARD'S USE OF A DUAL PRICE "POLICY," "PRACTICE," "SYSTEM" IS FULLY ESTABLISHED BY STANDARD'S ADMISSIONS THROUGHOUT THE PRIOR PROCEEDINGS

Equally without merit are the apparent assertions (R. 5500–5501) of the court below that the granting of the tank-car price to the four so-called "jobbers" represented departures from a non-discriminatory price scale and that the tank-car price was not an established part of Standard's price scale. As demonstrated in our main brief (pp. 36–42), these "factual" assertions are flatly contradicted by Standard's admissions in the prior proceedings in this case.

Nor are we relying in this connection, as Standard (Br. 39) suggests, only on its formal answer. Although obviously the admissions in that answer are of great importance, it is only one of many items in the record (including extensive testimony by Standard key officials and Standard's statements to this Court in its 1950 brief) which cannot be reconciled with Standard's present version of the facts. For example, see Appendix A, infra, setting forth Standard's Exhibit 52–B, which details the operation of Standard's dual price formula during the 1936–1940 period. So inflexible was this formula that Marshall, the manager of Standard's gasoline department (R. 1058), testified that the four "jobber" customers "under general industry practice [were] absolutely entitled to buy on the tank-car basis" (R. 1062); that "it would seem almost an absurdity for any supplier to approach such a purchaser on any other basis" (R. 1086); that such a purchaser "couldn't be sold on any other basis" (R. 1117); and that "he would just be silly to continue to pay us a higher price" (R. 1104).[10]

---

[10] See also Marshall's testimony that "[i]n the oil industry we have a carload price and a tank wagon price and those who operate service stations have a service station price and these are the three units of purchase" (R. 1100). Again: "we have a tank wagon price, we have a tank car price, we don't have any

With respect to its answer, Standard does not, and cannot, deny that it made the detailed factual admissions concerning "its general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers." But it argues (Br. 21, 39, 44) that those admissions were wholly directed to a separate defense of "functional customer classificaservice station price ourselves today because we don't operate service stations", (R. 1105; see also R. 1061–1062). And Raupagh, Standard's Detroit Division Manager, testified that Standard never departed from these two prices with the single "exception" (not material here) of the half-cent reduction to Ned's (R. 130, 167–169).

---

This testimony is in substantial accord with Fleming, Oil Prices and Competition, pp. 26–28 (published in 1953 by the American Petroleum Institute) (Italics in original):

"* * * another designation of prices is closer related to the retail or consumer-demand end. This includes the tank-wagon price and its usual corollary, the tank-car price.

"Competing methods long ago blurred the original meaning of these terms. But the tank-wagon price is still the established price of gasoline as delivered, originally by wagon, to the service station. It is, next to the price at the pump itself, the grass-roots price in the business, sensitive to all the influences which affect the ultimate consumer.

"Next before it, the tank-car price was originally, as the name indicates, the price in tank-car (that is, much larger) lots. Today the tank-car price is usually the contractual price made by suppliers to jobbers or wholesalers, regardless of whether the gasoline comes by rail, barge, pipeline or tanker.

* * * * *

"Tank-wagon prices have a powerful influence on tank-car prices. They usually move up and down fairly closely. The supplier's tank-car price to the jobber generally reflects what the supplier feels is a reasonable margin under the prevailing tank-wagon price."

See also Cassady, supra note 8, pp. 180–181, 198, 307.

tion." Even if this claim were so, it would have no significance; a respondent cannot adjust the facts to suit the requirements of various defenses. We need not concern ourselves with that problem, though, since the section of Standard's answer dealing with its "good faith" defense (R. 17) specifically "realleges by reference" those paragraphs dealing with Standard's defense of "functional customer classification." In addition, as pointed out above, the Government is relying here, not only on Standard's answer, but rather its admissions throughout the prior proceedings.

As we stated in our main brief (p. 42), it is immaterial what words are used to describe Standard's pricing of gasoline to its 362 Detroit customers (although Standard's present objections to "policy," "practice", "system" are somewhat surprising since it was Standard itself which first introduced those descriptions of its pricing).[11] The important factor, we repeat, is not the label but the content—namely, that Standard's pricing is not directed to "individual competitive situations" and that it "constantly results in [11] Its answer (R. 13) referred to "its general policy and practice of bona fidely selecting and classifying gasoline customers" and "such system and practice of selection and classification of customers." See also, e. g., the testimony of Marshall, the manager of Standard's gasoline department (R. 1060—"system") (R. 1062—"practice"); Boatwright, a Standard economist (R. 1375—"system"); Suffert, an official of the Texas Company (R. 1622—"practice"); Raupagh, Standard's Detroit Division Manager (R. 1887, 2065—"practice"). And, even in its exceptions to the trial examiner's report, Standard defended "the system of price differentials in the gasoline industry" (R. 5158).

---

[Standard's] getting more money for like goods from some customers than [it] does from others." Staley, 324 U. S. at 753; Cement, 333 U. S. at 725; National Lead, 352 U. S. at 431.

In the instant case, the admitted facts establish that Standard's pricing of gasoline to its 362 Detroit customers was pursuant to a discriminatory "policy", "practice", or "system" within the meaning of the Staley-Cement-National Lead doctrine:

> 1. Standard had but two prices for resellers: a "tank wagon" price to retail service stations, and a "tank car" price to so-called "jobbers" which was 1½ cents per gallon less than the "tank wagon" price.
>
> 2. Standard had fixed standards for determining which resellers would be charged the tank wagon price and which the tank car price.
>
> 3. The requirements for classification as a "jobber" were: a large volume of distribution (1 to 2 million gallons annually), a bulk plant capable of accepting deliveries of gasoline in tank car quantities, means of making deliveries from the bulk plant, and adequate credit standing.
>
> 4. These requirements were inflexible and rigidly followed; Standard would lose a customer before it would depart in any way from them or before it would increase the 1½¢ differential.
>
> 5. Every price found to be discriminatory in this proceeding was in exact accord with this pricing formula.

These five elements can add up to nothing other than a pricing "policy", "practice", or "system".

As a corollary to its denial that its pricing was pursuant to a "policy", "practice", or "system," Standard (Br. 39–40) denies that such pricing is common in the oil industry. But this too is directly contrary to the testimony of Standard's officials (R. 1073–1074, 1887). It is also contrary to the examiner's report (see infra, pp. 22–23), which Standard accepted in the court below (see supra, pp. 3–4). And, not content with the examiner's findings in this connection, Standard filed an exception (R. 5159):

> To the failure of the Trial Examiner to report on the following questions necessary to the decision of this case, to wit:
>
> (a) Is the trade practice complained of in these proceedings one which is widespread throughout the whole oil trade or industry in the United States, as well as in the Detroit, Michigan, area?
>
> This exception is made upon the ground that testimony was introduced to show that in the oil industry (1504, 1717, 1723, 2766, 2768, 2771) and in industry generally (1651), the dual type of merchandising operation here complained of is universal throughout the United States; thereby indicating the propriety of a Trade Practice Conference, in lieu of this proceeding. [Emphasis added.]

In addition, Standard stated (R. 5158) that:

> The evidence is uncontradicted in this proceeding that there are literally thousands of > situations in the middle west, and in the entire United States, comparable to the operations of the four jobbers of Respondent in Detroit (1723). It is also established by the record (1764) that the system of price differentials in the gasoline industry is economically sound and fundamentally essential in the conduct of the business. [Emphasis added.]

Even the Commission dissenting opinion, on which Standard (Br. 64–65) now places so much emphasis, recognized that the discriminations involved here were pursuant to an industry "policy." The dissent urged that Section 2 (b) entitled Standard to continue adhering to the "policy" (R. 5418, 5419, 5420)—not that no such "policy" existed. And the dissent stated (R. 5416): "it was not an arbitrary classification by [Standard] * * * to favor these four jobbers with lower prices, inasmuch as the companies were qualified for ["jobber"] status according to the commonly accepted standard in the industry."[12] (Emphasis added.) The dissent also pointed out (R. 5405) that "The basic, customary and prevailing standards for qualification as a 'jobber' in the gasoline industry are that the applicant for this status must possess a bulk storage plant, must possess a good credit rating, and must have some established business enabling it to purchase from one million to two million gallons per year" (emphasis added).

---

[12] The Commission majority, of course, rejected industry practice as a justification for Standard's alleged functional classification (R. 5371–5372). This Court has since confirmed the correctness of the Commission's conclusion that competition in reselling is the decisive factor. Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 474–475. See p. 28, infra.

On the other hand, the Commission in this case has never charged, as Standard now intimates (Br. 39–40, 43–44), that all suppliers in the industry follow this practice,[13] or that those who do are in collusion, or that their prices are at all times precisely identical. By rebutting these fictitious contentions, Standard would presumably convey the impression of having undercut the Government's basic premise. But the Government has never made those contentions and does not make them now. Accordingly, Standard's arguments (Br. 29–35) that "The Competitive Turmoil in Detroit Tolerated No Pricing System" and "The Wide Range of Aggressive Competitive Offers Contradicts Any Systematic Industry Pricing" are directed at issues foreign to this case. We have set forth, both above (pp. 16–17) and in our main brief (pp. 36–42), those elements of Standard's pricing which preclude Standard's "good faith" defense here.[14]

---

[13] Even the Commission's "Question Presented" (Br. 2) states only "that some of the seller's major competitors employ the same pricing policy". (Emphasis added.) See also p. 6, n. 3, of our main brief, pointing out that Socony-Vacuum and Sun sell in Detroit only at the tank-wagon price.

[14] Of course, if this Court affirms the Commission's decision and if other refiners thereafter presist in the same discriminatory practice, the Commission will take the necessary steps to enforce compliance. Standard (Br. 18–19), in attempting to treat the dismissal "without prejudice" of the three related com-

Standard's effort to impute a more drastic position to the Commission can only serve to becloud the real issues.

D. THE REPORT OF THE HEARING EXAMINER IS BASICALLY IN ACCORD WITH THE COMMISSION'S FINDINGS

Throughout Standard's brief (e. g., pp. 13, 53) recurs the suggestion that there is a conflict on the "good faith" issue between the Commission's findings and the report of the hearing examiner. No such conflict exists, as we shall show.

But it should first be pointed out that, under the Commission's rules then in effect (1943), the examiner's report was "advisory only", and the report itself so states (R. 5128). 5 Fed. Reg. 2423, 2426, as amended, 6 Fed. Reg. 832, 833; 16 C. F. R. § 2.20 (Cum. Supp. 1938–1943). Such a report did not even have the effect of an initial decision, as is now the plaints (against Shell, Texas, and Gulf) as an abandonment of the proceedings, ignores the terms of the Commission's dismissal order and the fact of the Commission's initiation of an up-to-date investigation against the three companies. See our main brief, pp. 36, 47–48, n. 27. As there pointed out, it accordingly cannot be said, as the court below remarked (R. 5501), that there is "no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which [Standard] met were lawful." On the other hand, the court was obviously correct in stating that the Commission made "no finding" of illegality of competitors' prices. The Commission could not have done so since Standard—which has the burden of proof on the "good faith" issue—adduced no evidence as to the legality of its competitor's prices (although it did claim that its price policy was identical to the policies of some of its major competitors). See our main brief, pp. 6, 33–36.

---

case under the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U. S. C. 1007, enacted in 1946. See 11 Fed. Reg. 7069. And Section 12 of the Administrative Procedure Act expressly provides that the Act's procedural requirements shall not apply retroactively to agency proceedings initiated prior to the effective date of those requirements. 5 U. S. C. 1011.[15]

In any event, the examiner's report is basically in accord with the Commission's findings. The examiner described Standard's "jobber" pricing policy (R. 5121), noted that each of the four "jobbers" met

---

[15] See Harisiades v. Shaughnessy, 342 U. S. 580, 583. See also the committee reports accompanying the Administrative Procedure Act: "The word 'initiated' in the final clause of the section means a proceeding formally begun as by the issuance of a complaint by the agency (irrespective of prior charges or investigations) or of notice of a rule-making hearing." S. Rep. No. 752, 79th Cong., 1st Sess., pp. 29–30; H. Rep. No. 1980, 79th Cong., 2d Sess., p. 47.

The decision in Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498, on which Standard relies (Br. 65), is certainly not to the contrary. In that case, both the Taft-Hartley Act and the Administrative Procedure Act had supervened between the Board's order and the Court of Appeals decision; this Court did no more than hold "that the scope of the court's reviewing power was governed by the legislation in force at the time that power was exercised" (p. 500). By the same token, the scope of the hearing examiner's power in the instant case "was governed by the legislation in force at the time that power was exercised"—i. e., before the Administrative Procedure Act. The mere fact of the remand after passage of that Act cannot retroactively change the status of the examiner's report under Section 8 any more than it could retroactively qualify the examiner under Section 11. Cf. Ford Motor Co. v. Labor Board, 305 U. S. 364, 374.

Standard's criteria for the tank-car price (R. 5097-5098), and characterized all four (including Ned's, which resold exclusively at retail) as being, "under industry practice and contemplation, bona fide jobbers" (R. 5098). (Emphasis added.) As to the three "jobbers" other than Ned's, the examiner found that their selection and recognition by Standard as "jobbers" "were and are in conformity with industry practice" (R. 5098). (Emphasis added.) As to Ned's, the examiner was of the view that its recognition as a "jobber" was a "forced recognition given to retain that company's business" (R. 5098). The latter statement concerning Ned's was not accepted by the Commission, which found that the only subsisting offer open to Ned's— i. e., from the Red Indian Oil Company on a gasoline ("Fleet Wing") which was a non-major "off brand"[16]—did not represent a serious competitive threat to Standard and that Standard did not meet this offer when it granted the tank-car price to Ned's (R. 5387). On the other hand, the Commission (R. 5388) recognized that Standard "had substantial reasons for believing" that it might lose the four "jobber" accounts if it did not regularly accord them the tank-car price, for the three other than [16] The president of Red Indian Oil Company testified (R. 3098): "My opinion is that Fleet Wing could not or is not considered a major brand gasoline and does not have the public acceptance of the four major brands previously mentioned." See also R. 1809 1810, 1815–1816, 1866.

---

Only nine bona fide "majors" operated in the Detroit area (R. 5106). See also Brief for Petitioner, Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 1, 1950 Term, p. 6.

Ned's "had already been recognized as entitled to the tank car price under the commonly accepted standards of the industry, and Ned's had achieved a volume of distribution which brought it within the range where it was likely to be so recognized by a major oil company at any time." (Emphasis added.) "Thus," the Commission stated, "the real question is whether or not the actions of [Standard] in granting or continuing to these four dealers the tank car price pursuant to and in accordance with its general policy can be said to have been made in good faith within the meaning of Section 2 (b)." (Emphasis added.)

Standard (Br. 2, 10) somehow deduces a favorable answer to this question from the examiner's "Conclusion of Fact" that the price-differentials granted to the four "jobbers" were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of "comparable grade and quality" (R. 5104). But this "Conclusion of Fact," which is essentially the same as the last-quoted Commission finding (i. e., that Standard "had substantial reasons for believing" that it might lose the four "jobber" accounts because all four qualified "under the commonly accepted standards of the industry"), says nothing of "good faith".[17] Moreover, since the Staley case (1945) was decided subsequent to the examiner's report (1943), he could scarcely have considered the impact of that decision or the still later Cement decision (1948). In these circumstances, attempting to divine the examiner's thinking on the "good faith" issue is of only academic interest. Suffice to say that his report is, as shown above, basically in accord with the Commission's findings.[18]

---

[17] Standard (Br. 5–6, n. 3) apparently suggests that a "good faith" finding is implicit in the examiner's "Conclusion of Fact" because he recognized (R. 5105) the granting of the differentials as "lawful" except for his erroneous view that competitive injury precluded a Section 2 (b) defense. But if that argument shows anything, it suggests that possibly the examiner—as Standard now argues (Br. 28, n. 37)—believed the statutory language "in good faith" to be redundant in Section 2 (b). This Court's 1951 Standard decision, as well as Staley, holds to the contrary. See our main brief, p. 28. It appears, furthermore, that Standard itself doubted that the examiner had made any finding on the "good faith" issue; for Standard filed an exception "To the failure of the Trial Examiner, in the Conclusion of Fact on Page 55 of said Report, specifically to answer in the affirmative, or at all, the question as to Respondent's good faith, as propounded in the Sixth Question on Page 50 of said Report" (R. 5152). (Emphasis added.)

---

[18] Standard's argument (Br. 9–10) that the Commission itself had previously recognized Standard's "good faith" is merely a restatement of the argument which Standard made—unsuccessfully—when the case was last here in 1950. Standard then urged that no remand would be necessary because the Commission had allegedly recognized Standard's "good faith." Reply Brief for Petitioner, Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 1, 1950 Term, pp. 1–5, 16. On the other hand, the Commission brief (pp. 44–46) stated:

"* * * we wish to emphasize that the Commission has not conceded as a fact that petitioner's discriminations in price were in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors. If it is inferred that the Commission has conceded this fact, such concession must be considered only for the purpose of this decision and not as a concession of actual fact.

"The Commission has not considered petitioner's 'good faith' as a factual issue and has made no finding of fact thereof. If this issue had been considered, the Commission may well have

E. APART FROM THE SECTION 2 (b) DEFENSE, STANDARD'S DUAL PRICE "POLICY", "PRACTICE", "SYSTEM" IS CLEARLY UNLAWFUL

1. Notwithstanding Standard's suggestion to the contrary (Br. 61–63), its price discriminations involved here are clearly unlawful unless "good faith" has been established under Section 2 (b). Standard denies that there was "any competitive 'injury' cognizable under the Robinson-Patman Act" (Br. 61). But the "injury" issue is foreclosed by the earlier Court of Appeals decision on that issue (R. 5293–5294, 5300). Having failed to seek review of that portion of the decision when it petitioned for certiorari in 1949, Standard cannot reopen the issue now.[19] This was recognized by the opinion presently under review (R. 5495).[20] In any event, this Court's decision in Fed- made a vigorous interpretation of the 'good faith' proviso of Section 2 (b). * * *

---

* * * * *

"If this Court should conclude that the Commission erred in its interpretation of Section 2 (b) and that the judgment affirming its order should, therefore, be set aside, this should not result in a decision permitting the petitioner to continue its discriminations in price if, in fact, the petitioner is not in good faith meeting equally low prices of competitors. On the contrary, in that event, it is submitted that the Court should direct that this case be remanded to the Commission for determination of the issue of 'good faith' tendered by the petitioner under Section 2 (b)."

Rejecting Standard's argument to the contrary, this Court adopted the Commission's proposal and remanded the case to the Commission to make findings on the "good faith" issue (340 U. S. at 238, 251).

[19] See Petition for Certiorari, Standard Oil Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, No. 1, 1950 Term.

[20] The court below stated (R. 5495) that "a number of the original contested issues have been adjudicated. In fact, on the eral Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, holding that the Act requires only a "reasonable possibility" of competitive injury, is fully dispositive of the issue; here actual injury was found (R. 5168–5179, 5300).[21]

In fact, Standard's discriminatory policy bears a striking similarity to the cumulative volume "quota discount" involved in Morton Salt. On that phase of the case, this Court was unanimous in supporting the Commission's decision. The separate opinion of Mr. Justice Jackson, joined by Mr. Justice Frankfurter, states:

> * * * The quota discounts allowed a customer are not related to any apparent difference in handling costs but are based solely on the volume of his purchases, which in turn depends largely on the volume of his sales, and these in turn are surely influenced by his lowered costs which he can reflect in his retail prices.
>
> I agree that these facts warrant a prima facie inference of discrimination and sustain a finding of discrimination unless the Company, which best knows why and how these discounts are arrived at and which possesses all the data as to costs, comes forward with a justification. I agree, too, that the results of this system on present review there are only two contested issues"—i. e., "good faith" and the terms of the order. The court did not reach the latter issue.

---

[21] In considering the question of injury, it should also be noted that salt—the commodity involved in Morton Salt—is but a relatively small item in the grocery business. In contrast, gasoline—the commodity involved here—represents the very foundation of a service station's business.

> respondent's customer list is enough to warrant the inference that the effects "may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly."
>
> Even applying the stricter test of probability, I think the inference of adverse effect on competition is warranted by the facts as to the quota discounts. It is not merely probable but I think it is almost inevitable that the further ten-cent or fifteen-cent per case differential in net price of salt between the large number of small merchants and the small number of very large merchants, accelerates the trend of the former towards extinction and of the latter towards monopoly.

334 U. S. at 59–60; see also p. 61.

In comparing Morton's "quota discount" and Standard's "jobber" discount, it is of course true that Standard, in addition to requiring a volume of at least one to two million gallons a year, also required its "jobbers" to maintain storage and hauling facilities. But such facilities, as Standard's witnesses testified (R. 152, 2089), are readily available.[22] Thus, for present purposes, the only material criterion for Standard's discount is the annual gallonage requirement. Moreover, as pointed out by the hearing examiner (R. 5115), the cost of maintaining storage and hauling facilities was less than a half-cent per gallon (see also R. 1124, 1818, 1821, 1879), whereas the differential regularly accorded the "jobber" customers was $1\frac{1}{2}$ cents per gallon—a discount of approximately 18.5% below the tank-wagon price Standard charged to its "non-jobber" customers.[23]

---

[22] And Standard would not sell at the tank-car price to customers who had the facilities but lacked the gallonage (R. 179–180, 553, 557, 559). Nor would Standard permit tank-wagon customers to pool their purchases in order to meet the gallonage requirement (R. 147, 1256, 2084–2085).

2. Nor can this discount be justified on a theory of "functional classification" (Br. 18, n. 28, 34–35, n. 46). That defense too is foreclosed by Standard's failure to present the issue for review in petitioning this Court for certiorari in 1949. The defense, in any event, is patently without merit; for Standard's "classification of its customers did not follow real functional differences". Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 475.

As shown in the diagram set out in Appendix B, infra, Standard regularly sold at discriminatory prices to its 362 Detroit customers, all of whom competed in reselling to the consuming public. It is this factor of competition—rather than "ambiguous labels, which might be used to cloak discriminatory discounts to favored customers" (Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470, 475)—which is controlling.[24] To the extent that the 362 customers do not compete (i. e., with respect to wholesale sales to other retailers), the Commission's order (see infra, pp. 31–32) in no way precludes the continuance of the discount. The restraining effect of the order is, therefore, only on the gasoline which the "jobbers" themselves resell at retail.[25]

---

[23] This percentage is based on 1940 figures. See Appendix A, infra. According to Standard's witnesses, the "jobber" discount was much larger in other sections of the country (R. 127, 972, 1064, 1890).

[24] Standard (Br. 35, n. 46) is wholly in error in stating that this conclusion "appears repudiated by the Commission itself." As authority for that proposition, Standard quotes a single sentence from what it calls "the opinion of the Commission in Doubleday & Co., Inc., Dkt. 5897." But, of the four Commissioners concurring in the decision in that case, only one—the author of the opinion—supported the sentence quoted by Standard. Two other Commissioners filed opinions expressly disagreeing; and the fourth Commissioner merely concurred in the

To reject this modest limitation on the ground that the so-called "jobbers" are entitled to a separate "functional classification", regardless of whether they resell at wholesale or retail, would be to defeat the very purpose of the Robinson-Patman Act. Almost any large buyer, after all, either maintains storage and hauling facilities or can easily obtain such facilities if it is to his financial benefit to do so. Congress, however, has decreed that a large buyer shall not have a price advantage over his smaller competitor "solely because of the large buyer's quantity purchasing ability. The Robinson-Patman Act was passed to deprive a large buyer of such advantages except to the extent that a lower price could be justified by reason result, which in no way turned on the question of functional classification. CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, par. 25,634 (1955). Moreover, six months later, the Commission unanimously rejected a similar argument in General Foods Corporation, Dkt. 6018, CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, par. 25,888.

---

See Shniderman, "The Tyranny of Labels"—A Study of Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 60 Harv. L. Rev. 571.

[25] And, even on this gasoline, the Act would not bar Standard from giving its "jobber" customers a discount commensurate to Standard's cost savings through selling in bulk. The defenses provided in the Act, including the cost justification and meeting competition defenses, are necessarily read into every order. See Federal Trade Commission v. Ruberoid Co., 343 U. S. 470; Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419.

of a seller's diminished costs due to quantity manufacture, delivery or sale, or by reason of the seller's good faith effort to meet a competitor's equally low price." Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 43.

II. THE BRIEF OF THE "JOBBER" AMICI

The brief of the "jobber" amici (Br. 8-16, 26–27) is principally devoted to an attack on the terms of the Commission's order (R. 5391–5393).[26] The answer is twofold.

1. As the "jobbers" themselves recognize (Br. 10), the terms of the Commission's order are not before the Court, since the court below expressly refrained from passing on that phase of the case (R. 5495). Even Standard (Br. 2, n. 2) "agrees that the validity of the Commission's cease and desist order, which the Court of Appeals had no occasion to adjudicate, is not now here."

2. In any event, the attack of the "jobbers" on the terms of the Commission's order is either without merit or without present significance.

---

[26] The "afterthought" argument of the "jobber" amici (Br. 17–19, 26–27) rests solely on the Commission's use of the term "policy" instead of "system" in Paragraph 14 of its findings (see, e. g., R. 5388). As we have repeatedly stated (e. g., supra, pp. 15–16), either word is equally appropriate. Standard itself had no difficulty seeing the Staley doctrine in the Commission's decision. In its formal objections to the decision, even prior to its formal promulgation, Standard stated (R. 5351): "The Commission, in Paragraph 14, employs language taken directly from Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Co., 324 U. S. 746 (1945). It seeks by the use of such language to create the aura of analogy of Staley to the facts of this proceeding * * *."

The heart of the Commission's order is paragraph 1 (R. 5392).[27] With respect to this paragraph, which limits the "jobber" discount to gasoline sold at wholesale to other retailers (as distinguished from gasoline which the "jobbers" themselves sell at retail), the "jobbers" charge that the result would be "snooping, deception, control and abuse" (Br. 13). No such result is even conceivable, since every gasoline retailer is required by law to maintain detailed records of retail sales for tax purposes (see, e. g., R. 2094–2095). Nor is there any merit to the contention (Br. 12) that the order takes no cognizance of the distribution function performed by "jobbers" through their storage and hauling facilities. Section 2 (a) of the Act expressly allows "differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered"; and this Court's Ruberoid decision holds that the quoted proviso is read into every Commission order (343 U. S. at 475–476). Thus, Standard is free to grant a differential to the "jobbers" even on the gasoline which they themselves resell at retail; but the latter differential, based on Standard's cost savings, would necessarily have to be considerably smaller than the 18.5% discount involved here. See supra, pp. 27–28.

With respect to paragraph 2 (R. 5392), which would forbid Standard from discriminating "[b]y selling such gasoline to any retailer at a price known by [Standard] to be higher than the price at which any wholesaler-purchaser is reselling such gasoline to any retailer who competes with such direct retailer-customer of" Standard, the Commission has determined that it will not seek affirmance of that portion of the order. Paragraph 2 was included for the purpose of relieving what in essence was a "captive market" situation—that is, the inability of the "non-jobber" customers to obtain, either from Standard or from the wholesaler "jobbers," preferential prices which the wholesaler "jobbers" were granting in some instances to their sub-dealers. On the other hand, it was not the purpose of the Commission to require Standard to eliminate legitimate functional pricing or to make it responsible for the pricing practices of its wholesaler "jobbers." Because of the problems necessarily involved in the enforcement of paragraph 2, and in view of the need "to reconcile [an administrative] interpretation, except where Congress has told us not to, with the broader antitrust policies that have been laid down by Congress" (Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61, 74), the Commission has now concluded that other methods (e. g., a proceeding under Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act or under Section 3 of the Clayton Act) would be more appropriate to reach the evil at which paragraph 2 was directed.[28]

---

[27] In fact, that portion of the complaint relating to paragraph 2 of the order was not part of the original complaint but was added by amendment (R. 34–36).

---

[28] It should also be noted that the order, even without paragraph 2, forbids discrimination "directly or through any corporate or other device" (R. 5392). Thus, even without paragraph 2, the order is sufficiently broad to preclude Standard from using a subsidiary or "dummy" wholesaler to undercut Standard's tank-wagon customers.

The balance of the order is fully in accord "with the broader antitrust policies that have been laid down by Congress" (ibid.). In fact, it is difficult to see how the purpose of the Sherman Act, which also emphasizes price flexibility "in individual competitive situations", is much advanced by Standard's rigid adherence over the years to an inherently discriminatory pricing policy. Such a policy, on the other hand, cannot be reconciled with the commands of the Robinson-Patman Act, as we have sought to show above and in our main brief.

The judgment below, we respectfully submit, should be reversed.

J. LEE RANKIN,
Solicitor General.
VICTOR R. HANSEN,
Assistant Attorney General.
EARL E. POLLOCK,
Assistant to the Solicitor General.

EARL W. KINTNER,
General Counsel,
JAMES E. CORKEY,
Assistant General Counsel,
MILES J. BROWN,
Attorney,
Federal Trade Commission.

NOVEMBER 1957.

U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE: 1957

APPENDIX A

The following exhibit (R. 4872) was introduced by Standard in the administrative proceeding:

RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT NO. 52-B

STATEMENT OF—DEALER TANK WAGON PRICES—JOBBER TANK CAR PRICES—JOBBER MARGINS—PREVAILING RETAIL PRICES—RETAIL DEALER MARGINS—ON STANDARD RED CROWN GASOLINE FROM JANUARY 1, 1937 TO MARCH 6, 1941

(All Prices Shown Are Cents Per Gallon Exclusive of All Taxes)
(Jobber and Retail Dealer Margins Shown in Cents Per Gallon)

Period	Dealer Tank Wagon Prices in Effect	Jobber Tank Car Prices In Effect at which purchases of four named Jobbers were billed	Jobber Margin, ie.: Difference between Dealer Tank Wagon Prices and Jobber Tank Car Prices in Effect	Prevailing Retail Service Station Prices in Effect on "Regular" Brand of Gasoline of Major Companies including the Standard Oil Company		Retail Dealer Margin Difference between Dealer Tank Wagon Prices & Prevailing Retail S.S. Prices in Effect
Jan. 1, 1937 to Feb. 2, 1937	9.0	7.5	1.5	13.0		4.0
Feb. 2, 1937 to May 12, 1937	9.6	8.1	1.5	13.6		4.0
May 12, 1937 to Nov. 3, 1937	9.9	8.4	1.5	14.1		4.2
Nov. 3, 1937 to Mar. 28, 1938	9.6	8.1	1.5	14.1		4.5
Mar. 28, 1938 to July 22, 1938	9.8	8.3	1.5	14.3	Mar. 28, 1938 to May 10, 1938	4.5
				13.8	May 10, 1938 to June 21, 1938	4.0
				12.3	Jun. 21, 1938 to July 22, 1938	2.5
July 22, 1938 to Dec. 9, 1938	8.8	7.3	1.5	12.3	July 22, 1938 to Sept. 6, 1938	3.5
				12.1	Sept. 6, 1938 to Dec. 9, 1938	3.3
Dec. 9, 1938 to April 10, 1939	7.6	6.35	1.25	10.0	Dec. 9, 1938 to Feb. 20, 1939	2.4
				10.7	Feb. 20, 1939 to Apr. 10, 1939	3.1
April 10, 1939 to June 17, 1939	7.6	6.1	1.5	10.7		3.1
June 17, 1939 to Oct. 31, 1939	8.1	6.6	1.5	11.4		3.3
Oct. 31, 1939 to Nov. 11, 1939	7.4	6.15	1.25	9.3		1.9
Nov. 11, 1939 to Nov. 18, 1939	6.4	5.4	1.0	9.3		2.9
Nov. 18, 1939 to Current Date 3-6-14	8.1	6.6	1.5	11.4		3.3

APPENDIX B

Channels of Distribution of Standard Gasoline in the Detroit Area

STANDARD TANK-WAGON PRICE
TANK-CAR PRICE
TANK-CAR PRICE
TANK-CAR PRICE
TANK-CAR PRICE
WHOLESALERS
RETAILERS
358 "NON-JOBBER" DEALERS [1]
NED'S [2]
CITRIN-KOLB (WHOLESALE) [3]
(RETAIL)
CITRIN-KOLB SUB-DEALERS
STIKEMAN [4] (WHOLESALE)
(RETAIL)
STIKEMAN SUB-DEALERS
WAYNE (WHOLESALE) [5]
(RETAIL)
WAYNE SUB-DEALERS
CONSUMING PUBLIC [6]

---

[1] Approximately 81.7% of Standard gasoline sold in the Detroit area is sold through these 358 customers (RX23). 208 of the 358 are lessees of Standard under leases of a year or more (R. 5367; CX1A to 1D). The other 150 "non-jobber" customers are required by contracts to purchase all of their requirements of Standard gasoline at the tank-wagon price (R. 5367, CX2).

[3] Citrin-Kolb was first accorded "jobber" status and the tank-car price in 1928 or 1929 (R. 5369, 5385).

[4] Stikeman was first accorded "jobber" status and the tank-car price in 1932 (R. 5370, 5386). In 1938, Stikeman discontinued the operation of its own retail service stations (R. 5370).

[5] Wayne was first accorded "jobber" status and the tank-car price in 1935 (R. 5370, 5386).

[6] Throughout the proceeding, Standard has conceded that the "non-jobber" service stations [illegible] with the "jobber" stations in selling at retail to the consuming public (R. 9).

SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
NOV [illegible] 1956
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1956. 7

No. ~~465~~ 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY,
Respondent.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION.

Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Frederick M. Rowe,
of
Kirkland, Fleming, Green,
Martin & Ellis,
Prudential Plaza,
Chicago 1, Illinois,
and
800 World Center Building,
Washington 6, D. C.,
Attorneys for Respondent.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert E. Green,
910 S. Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 8, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

November 28, 1956.

INDEX.

PAGE
Opinion Below 1
Question Presented 1
Statement 3
Reasons for Opposing Grant of the Writ 6
  (1) The Government raises a hypothetical legal issue that was not adjudicated below 6
  (2) The ruling below does not conflict with decisions of this Court 8
  (3) The suggestion that the ruling below will govern other cases is baseless 12
Conclusion 14

Citations.

Cases.

Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726 (1945) 10
E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 11500 (7th Cir. pending) 13
Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 (1948) 11
Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 (1945) 9, 10, 11, 12
Labor Board v. American National Insurance Co., 343 U. S. 395 (1952) 8
Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498 (1951) 8
C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 11526 (7th Cir. pending) 13

Henry Rosenfeld, Inc., 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep., par. 26,068 (FTC July 2, 1956) 13

Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Board, 340 U. S. 474 (1951) 7

Whitaker Cable Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 11494 (7th Cir. pending) 13

Other Authorities.

Dirlam & Kahn, Fair Competition: The Law and Economics of Antitrust Policy, p. 122 (1954) 9

Kintner, The Revitalized Federal Trade Commission: A Two-Year Evaluation, 30 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1143 (1955) 10

Levi, The Robinson-Patman Act--Is It in the Public Interest? ABA Antitrust Law Section Proceedings, p. 60 (Sept. 1952) 9

McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398 (1956) 12

Note, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act: The Standard Oil Litigation, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294 (1953) 9, 12

Note, The Swinging Door—Or How to Obey One Antitrust Law by Violating Another, 59 Yale L. J. 158 (1949) 12

Shniderman, Federal Trade Commission Orders Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 750 (1952) 9

Letter dated June 27, 1956 from the Acting Deputy Attorney General to the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, reprinted in Hearings Before the Antitrust Subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess., 688-89 13

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1956.

No. 465.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY,

Respondent.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR RESPONDENT IN OPPOSITION.

OPINION BELOW.

The opinion of the Court of Appeals, rendered on May 3, 1956, is reported at 233 F. 2d 649, and is reprinted in the Appendix of the petition for certiorari.

QUESTION PRESENTED.

In 1951 this Court reversed the Federal Trade Commission's previous contention that respondent's defense of "good faith" meeting of a competitor's equally low price under the Robinson-Patman Act was defeated by the Commission's finding of competitive "injury." The case was remanded for the entry of appropriate findings on respondent's "evidence tending to prove that its tank car price was made to each 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor." (R. 5311.)

On remand, a 3-2 decision of the Commission rejected respondent's "meeting competition" defense for lack of "good faith." "Good faith" was denied due to (1) respondent's alleged knowledge that its prices would cause competitive "injury"; (2) its inability to "cost-justify" these prices; and (3) the pricing "policy" or "method" pursuant to which it allegedly made the challenged price reductions to its four "jobber" customers in Detroit. (R. 5389.) This Commission's ruling was set aside by the Court of Appeals as unsupported legally and factually.

The Government here does not seriously contest the Court's reversal of the first two grounds of the FTC ruling against respondent. These elements in the Commission's decision were hardly defended by its counsel below, and are now relegated to a footnote in the Government's petition.[1]

Hence the question remaining is:

Whether the Court of Appeals correctly held that respondent's price reductions were granted as a defensive effort in individual competitive situations to hold four specified customers in the face of price raids by competitors, and therefore properly rejected the Commission's "afterthought" theory of a pricing "policy" or "method".

---

[1] Pet. 10, note 5. The Commission's lengthy brief below devoted less than a page to defending these two propositions. See note 8, infra.

STATEMENT

This sixteen-year old proceeding is here for the second time on the issue of the validity of respondent's "meeting competition" defense.

The Commission's complaint filed on November 29, 1940, charged that respondent's price reductions to four gasoline customers in Detroit between 1936 and 1940 constituted discriminations violative of the Robinson-Patman Act. Respondent defended its lower prices on several grounds, including its statutory defense that they were granted in good faith to meet a competitor's lower price. The Trial Examiner who heard the evidence found in 1943 that respondent's price reductions were in each instance made to meet a competitor's equally low price for gasoline of like grade and quality, and with the sole purpose of holding its four customers who were being actively solicited by rival suppliers at equally low or lower prices. (R. 5096, 5104.)

The Commission in 1945 evidently conceded the factual sufficiency of respondent's "meeting competition" defense, but declined to enter findings thereon. In its view, "even though the lower prices in question may have been made by respondent in good faith to meet the lower prices of competitors, this does not constitute a defense" in the presence of competitive "injury" on the customer level. (R. 5179, quoted by this Court at R. 5311.) The Court of Appeals in 1949 found that "There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that [respondent] made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor." (R. 5294.) But it accepted the Commission's legal theory and held that respondent's prices were "properly condemned by the Commission's order, notwithstanding [respondent's] discrimination in price was made in good faith to meet competition of its own." (R. 5299-5300.)

In 1951 that interpretation was reversed by this Court, which construed the "meeting competition" defense as "absolute" irrespective of alleged competitive "injury." (R. 5320-21.) This Court's opinion observed that respondent "presented evidence tending to prove that its tank-car price was made to each 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor" (R. 5311); and noted that "the trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense, and yet the Commission refuses, as a matter of law, to give them consideration." (R. 5315).[2] Accordingly, the case was remanded for entry of appropriate findings by the Commission.

Two years after the remand, a 3-2 majority of the Federal Trade Commission issued "modified" findings which again disapproved respondent's "meeting competition" defense. These findings acknowledged that "It may well be that respondent was convinced that if it ceased granting tank car prices to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman and continued to refuse the tank-car price to Ned's Auto Supply Company it would lose these accounts." (R. 5388.) Yet they ruled out respondent's defense for lack of "good faith." The two minority Commissioners independently reviewed the record and, upholding the Trial Examiner, concluded that "The respondent's price reduction was made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor." (R. 5421, 5393.)

The Court of Appeals unanimously set aside the majority findings. As the Court viewed the record, the evidence showed that respondent "was confronted with the problem of reducing its price to meet competitive offers or of forfeiting the business of the four jobbers." (App. to Pet. 23.)[3] The Court stressed that "there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful." (App. to Pet. 26.)

---

[2] The Government fails to overcome (Pet. 8, note 3) the observation of the Court below (App. to Pet. 21) that the factual sufficiency of respondent's defense was assumed on all levels of the previous review.

As for the first two grounds relied on by the Commission, the Court held that the Commission's renewed use of competitive "injury" to cut down respondent's defense was at odds with the prior decision of this Court, and that lack of cost justification—an alternative defense authorized by the Act—could not impair the "meeting competition" defense. (App. to Pet. 23-24.)

Finally, the Court rejected the Commission's theory that respondent's price reductions were granted pursuant to a preconceived discriminatory pricing method or system. The Court characterized this theory, which was advanced for the first time in 1953, as "an afterthought on the part of the Commission" (App. to Pet. 24) affirmatively contradicted by the evidence. The Court was "unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that [respondent's] prices 'were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale'." (App. to Pet. 26.) On the contrary, respondent "sold invariably at its uniform tank wagon price except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer." (Ibid.)

The Government at first publicly accepted the ruling below as a sound statement of law in accord with this Court's

---

[3] The Court noted that "in the findings now under review the Commission does not expressly repudiate the findings of the Examiner in the original proceeding that petitioner's reduction in price was granted to meet the equally low prices offered by competitors." (App. to Pet. 22.)

1951 decision.[4] For reasons that are not apparent, there has now been a change of mind.

REASONS FOR OPPOSING GRANT OF THE WRIT

(1) The Government Raises a Hypothetical Legal Issue That Was Not Adjudicated Below.

As framed by the Government, the issue is whether the meeting competition defense "can be used to justify a lower price regularly granted to certain large customers pursuant to a long established and inherently discriminatory pricing policy maintained by the seller and by major competitors." (Pet. 2.) This statement of the issue presupposes that the decision below held that the "meeting competition" defense could be so employed. But such was not the holding of the Court of Appeals. That Court never reached and did not adjudicate the issue of whether a "long established and inherently discriminatory pricing policy" could be justified. What the Court held was that the record affirmatively disproved any such "policy" or "system." The Government thus presents a purely hypothetical issue for this Court's review.

The Court's emphatic rejection of the "system" theory resulted from examination of the record. The Court was "unable to discern any basis for the conclusion that [respondent's] prices 'were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale.' The record affirmatively demonstrates to the contrary. [Respondent] sold invariably at its uniform tank-wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer." Besides, in the Court's view, "The bargaining and haggling which took place between [respondent] and the four involved 'wholesalers' prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system." (App. to Pet. 26.)[5]

---

[4] See p. 13, infra.

In evaluating the record, the Court of Appeals concluded that the evidence contradicted the Commission majority's findings. The Court also accorded to the Trial Examiner's Report "such probative force as it intrinsically commands." Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Board, 340 U. S. 474, 495 (1951). That Report, which in this Court's view had "found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense" (R. 5315), held that respondent's differentials to its four jobber customers "were granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors" and hence were "lawful"—except for the "competitive injury" theory which this Court later repudiated. (R. 5104-05.) The two dissenting Commissioners agreed with the Examiner on the basis of an independent study of the "8,000 pages of evidence in this record."[6]

To reach the issue which petitioner here seeks to raise, this Court would first have to plow through a voluminous record and overturn the lower court's conclusion that the pricing system theory was devoid of factual support. The Government's petition actually urges a de novo appraisal by this Court of the Commission majority's findings rather than a review of the correctness of the decision below which set them aside. (Pet. 9.)[7]

---

[5] The Court remarked that respondent "over many years refused to give Ned's, 'its most valuable tank-wagon customer', any reduction at all despite persistent demands based upon competitive offers." (App. to Pet. 26-27.) The "reluctant grant of a ½¢ reduction to Ned's in 1936, increased to 1½¢ in 1938 in response to an 'ultimatum' by Ned's," appeared to the Court "to dispel completely any idea that such reduction in price was systematic, as urged by the Commission." (Id. at 27.)

[6] In the view of one Commissioner, "the respondent, having lost two customers because it would not meet the prices of its competitors, made up its corporate mind to hang on to what business it had left, and in good faith and what appears to me only ordinary common sense, lowered its price to that of its competitors." (R. 5393.) According to the other dissenting Commissioner, "All in all, the record convinces me that the respondent—in meeting some competitors' prices and in refusing to meet the prices of others—acted as a reasonable prudent person would have acted under the circumstances." (R. 5420.)

But this Court has consistently refused to undertake an evidentiary review of administrative findings. When agency rulings are set aside as unsupported, this Court will not duplicate the Court of Appeals' "conscientious consideration of the entire record." Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498, 503 (1951). This principle has been regarded as especially appropriate "where, as here, a statutory standard such as 'good faith' can have meaning only in its application to the particular facts of a particular case." Labor Board v. American National Insurance Co., 343 U. S. 395, 410 (1952).

(2) The Ruling Below Does Not Conflict With Decisions of This Court.

The Commission's rejection of respondent's "meeting competition" defense in 1953, following the remand, rested primarily on two untenable grounds that were virtually abandoned before the Court below, and to which only a footnote is devoted in the petition for certiorari. (Pet. 10, note 5.)[8] The ground relied on here—the only one which the Court below said "has any semblance of merit"—is that respondent's pricing is barred by this Court's Staley decision, 324 U. S. 746 (1945).

---

[7] Petitioner even goes beyond the Commission majority's finding to draw support for its "system" theory from the answer filed by respondent to the original complaint. (See, e.g., Pet. 4-5, 14-15.) But the averments of the answer (R. 14, 19) merely relate to respondent's policy of preferring to lose an account to a competitor rather than grant a tank car price to a customer who did not possess his own bulk storage and local delivery facilities, a minimum volume of business, and an adequate credit standing. Contrary to the Government's unsupported suggestions (Pet. 14-15), the record in no instance shows that respondent ever granted tank car prices because a customer met these requirements. Rather, respondent declined to reduce its prices even to hold a customer unless he met respondent's tests. The Court of Appeals thought that, consistent with the prior decision of this Court, "a seller must be permitted in the exercise of a sound judgment to determine when and under what circumstances it will reduce its price in order to meet that of a competitor, and a right to require that a purchaser be possessed of the facilities for storing, handling, and distributing the product." (App. to Pet. 27.)

Yet if the Staley ruling had any pertinence to this case, it is difficult to see why it was ignored by the Commission in its first disapproval of respondent's defense in 1945.

---

[8] The propositions that a respondent's "good faith" is impaired by alleged competitive "injury" and failure to cost-justify are obviously indefensible. To impugn "good faith" by reason of competitive "injury" is to reassert the former FTC theory disapproved by this Court in 1951 as rendering the "meeting competition" defense "practically meaningless." (R. 5320.) And clearly, failure to "cost-justify" cannot nullify the alternative "meeting competition" defense.

Also, respondent obviously had no obligation to revise its pricing after the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936. (See Pet. 10, note 5.) Its uniform price to all Detroit customers except as reduced in four instances to hold an established account against rivals' lower price offerings complied with the Clayton Act both before and after the 1936 amendments.

[9] (App. to Pet. 24.) The Commission majority's bias against the "meeting competition" defense as construed by this Court's 1951 decision has long been manifest. Almost simultaneously with its ruling against respondent, the same majority on March 16, 1953 advised Congress that "the present law, as interpreted by the majority decision of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil of Indiana case (340 U. S. 231), is in the opinion of the Commission too weak to meet the problem to which the Robinson-Patman Amendment was originally addressed."

This FTC attitude toward the "meeting competition" defense has been criticized by numerous commentators. Dirlam & Kahn, Fair Competition: The Law and Economics of Antitrust Policy, p. 122 (1954) ["effort of the F.T.C. to emasculate this protective clause"]; Shniderman, Federal Trade Commission Orders under the Robinson-Patman Act, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 750, 752 (1952) ["considerable hostility"]; Note, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294, 298 (1953) ["unsympathetic attitude"]; Levi, The Robinson-Patman Act—Is It in the Public Interest?, ABA Antitrust Law Section Proceedings, pp. 60, 73 (Sept. 1952) ["notorious history"].

Then Staley was this Court's key and contemporaneous interpretation defining the scope of the "meeting competition" defense. The Commission would hardly have devised its novel "competitive injury" theory, later rejected by this Court as making the "meeting competition" proviso "practically meaningless" (R. 5320), if Staley invalidated respondent's defense. The Court of Appeals aptly labeled the Government's "pricing system" theory "an afterthought on the part of the Commission, advanced in an attempt to bring the case within the rule of the [Basing Point decisions]." (App. to Pet. 24.)

The Basing Point Cases have simply no relevance to the situation at bar. In Staley and the companion Corn Products decision[10] this Court outlawed nationwide "basing point systems" which were designed to raise glucose prices artificially by ensuring that all producers quoted identical prices to customers at every point of delivery—either through "freight absorption" or "phantom freight". Staley's meeting competition defense was disapproved because Staley failed "to show, as the statute requires, the establishment of a 'lower price' made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor." 324 U. S. at 756. Instead, "they maintained their prices at the level of their competitors' high prices, based upon the competitors' higher costs of delivery, by including phantom freight in their own delivered prices." Id. at 754.[11]

---

[10] 324 U. S. 726 (1945).

[11] The Government's umbrage at the statement of the Court below that the basing point systems served "to stabilize or increase but never to lower prices" (Pet. 13) is strange in view of this Court's quoted holding, as well as the recent analysis of Staley by the FTC's General Counsel: "In condemning a system which attached 'phantom freight' to certain sales, the Court held, positing the defense's availability in certain instances where prices were lowered, that it could not prevail in situations where prices had been raised." (Emphasis in original.) Kintner, The Revitalized Federal Trade Commission: A Two-Year Evaluation, 30 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1143, 1165-66 (1955).

The Basing Point Cases thus did not concern the defensive effort of an individual seller to retain its customers by price reductions to cope with price raids of competitors. They condemned illegal pricing systems which produced artificial price uniformity and barred any competitive solicitation or customer shifts on account of price.[12] Indeed, when this case was here in 1951 the Court noted with reference to Staley that "In contrast to that factual situation, the trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense." (R. 5315.) And this Court read Staley as proceeding "upon the assumption, applicable here, that if a competitor's 'lower price' is a lawful individual price offered to any of the seller's customers, then the seller is protected, under § 2(b), in making a counteroffer provided the seller proves that its counteroffer is made to meet in good faith its competitor's equally low price." (Ibid.)

The Court of Appeals accurately perceived the difference between the Basing Point Cases and the situation at bar. It remarked that "The gist of the reasoning of the Supreme Court in those cases was that the pricing system being illegal all prices determined thereby were illegal. It follows, according to such reasoning, that the meeting by the seller of a competitor's unlawful price precludes the seller from reliance upon a 'good faith' defense." (App. to Pet. 25-26.) And the Court emphasized that "in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful." (Id. at 26.)[13] Rather than conflicting with Staley, as petitioner urges, the decision below implemented Staley in every respect.

---

[12] As characterized by the Court in the Cement Institute case, the most recent of its Basing Point decisions, the system was a "handy instrument to bring about elimination of any kind of price competition." and resulted in cement being sold "in every given locality at identical prices and terms by all producers." 333 U. S. 683, 713 (1948).

(3) The Suggestion That the Ruling Below Will Govern Other Cases Is Baseless.

No basis exists for the Government's assertion that review of this case "will have a controlling effect on pending litigation involving other industries." (Pet. 17.) Three FTC rulings rejecting "meeting competition" defenses for discriminatory discount systems—not the meeting of individual competitive offers as here—are presently under review by the Court of Appeals that rendered the decision below. Despite the Government's professed fears, not one of those petitioners either in briefs or oral argument has urged or even cited the ruling in the instant case.[14]

---

[13] Petitioner's insinuations concerning "parallel pricing systems" which respondent's competitors might defend as meeting respondent's prices are gratuitous and speculative. (Pet. 16.) The Commission's ruling adverted to pending proceedings instituted against three of respondent's competitors, but did not find that the prices quoted to respondent's customers by these three or numerous other competitors were unlawful or that respondent had any reason so to believe. (R. 5389-90.) Whether these three competitors would assert or could successfully invoke the "meeting competition" defense is wholly conjectural. Moreover, any Staley-type industry-wide pricing system is refuted by respondent's loss of valuable customers to two of these competitors as well as the active price solicitation and capture of its customers by numerous other gasoline suppliers. (E.g., R. 1912-16, 489-90, 560-61, 2079, 5100-04.) Respondent's share of the Detroit market during the relevant years shrank substantially. (R. 5061.)

Petitioner's effort to taint respondent's pricing with such sinister nouns as "dual price formula" (e.g., Pet. 14) as well as its allusions to potential attempts by respondent "to manipulate its overall price scale upward" which "the consuming public will have to subsidize" (Pet. 14) are unworthy and destitute of a single record reference. Each is belied by scholarly studies of the Detroit gasoline marketing background of these proceedings. See Note, Functional Discounts under the Robinson-Patman Act: The Standard Oil Litigation, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294, 312-17 (1953); and esp. id. at 315 n. 91; McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398, 462-66 (1956). Cf. Note, The Swinging Door—Or How to Obey One Antitrust Law by Violating Another, 59 Yale L. J. 158 (1949).

The reason is obvious: The decision below does not control the legality of discriminatory "pricing systems," but is predicated on the facts of this case which show defensive price reductions to individual customers quoted to meet competitors' lower offers.

The Government itself so analyzed the ruling below prior to petitioning for certiorari. According to the Department of Justice last June, that decision did "not broaden the scope or adversely affect what we consider to be the merits of a section 2(b) defense"; and "pricing differences may, we emphasize, be justified under existing law only in response to individual competitive situations and may not be extended beyond what is necessary to meet good faith offers of competitors."[15] Furthermore, a unanimous Federal Trade Commission in July approved a trial examiner's ruling because it "correctly held that respondents had failed to make out a defense of meeting competition in good faith through their practices of meeting competition generally rather than specifically, meeting a practice rather than a price, aggressive rather than defensive merchandising methods."[16]

---

[14] E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 11500 (7th Cir. pending); Whitaker Cable Corp. v. Federal Trade Commission Dkt. No. 11494 (7th Cir. pending); C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, Dkt. No. 11526 (7th Cir. pending).

[15] Letter dated June 27, 1956 from the Acting Deputy Attorney General to the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee; reprinted in Hearings Before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 688-89.

[16] Henry Rosenfeld, Inc., 3 CCH Trade Reg. Rep., par. 26,068 at p. 35,926 (FTC July 2, 1956). That decision also held the defense unavailable on other statutory grounds.

CONCLUSION

The decision below is clearly correct and fully supported by a bulky record which covers transactions dating back two decades. Its holding turns on the facts of the instant case and generates no legal principles of wider application capable of influencing other proceedings involving different situations.

For the above reasons, respondent respectfully submits that the petition for writ of certiorari should be denied.

Weymouth Kirkland,
Howard Ellis,
Hammond E. Chaffetz,
W. H. Van Oosterhout,
Frederick M. Rowe,
of
Kirkland, Fleming, Green,
Martin & Ellis,
Prudential Plaza,
Chicago 1, Illinois,
and
800 World Center Building,
Washington 6, D. C.,
Attorneys for Respondent.

Thomas E. Sunderland,
Albert E. Green,
910 S. Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 8, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

November 28, 1956.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
OCT 30 1957
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957.

No. 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,
vs.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY,
Respondent.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENT.

WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND,
HOWARD ELLIS,
HAMMOND E. CHAFFETZ,
W. H. VAN OOSTERHOUT,
FREDERICK M. ROWE,
of
KIRKLAND, FLEMING, GREEN, MARTIN & ELLIS,
Prudential Plaza,
Chicago 1, Illinois,
and
800 World Center Bldg.,
Washington 6, D. C.,
Attorneys for Respondent.

THOMAS E. SUNDERLAND,
910 S. Michigan Ave.,
Chicago 8, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

INDEX

PAGE

Opinions Below 1

Jurisdiction 1

Question Presented 2

Statute Involved 3

Statement 4

- The Essential Facts 5
- The Examiner's Findings Sustaining the Meeting Competition Defense 9
- The Commission's Original Assumption that the Defense Was Established 9
- The Defense Deemed Established on First Judicial Review 11
- This Court's Reversal of the Commission's "Injury" Theory and Remand for Findings 11
- The Commission's Post-Remand Rejection of the Defense 12
- The Court of Appeals' Approval of the Defense as "Firmly Established" 14
- The Issues Here 16

Summary of Argument 20

Argument 24

I. The Holding Below Conforms With the Decisions of This Court Confining the Meeting Competition Defense to Individual Competitive Situations 24

  A. The Court of Appeals Did Not Sanction Any Discriminatory Pricing System 24

  B. The Holding Below Faithfully Applied This Court's Controlling Precedents 26

II. De Novo Appraisal of the Record Negatives Any Systematic Pricing 29

A. The Competitive Turmoil in Detroit Tolerated No Pricing System 29

B. The Wide Range of Aggressive Competitive Offers Contradicts Any Systematic Industry Pricing 31

C. The "Tug of War" Preceding the Successive Lower Prices to Ned's, Respondent's "Most Valuable" Customer, Belies any Systematic Pricing by Respondent 35

III. The Commission's Efforts to Construct a Pricing "Policy, Method, or System" Are Unsupportable 39

A. The Record Contradicts Each Premise of the Pricing System Assertion 40

B. The Claimed "Admission" in Respondent's Assertion in 1940 of an Alternate Defense of Functional Customer Classification Is Baseless 44

C. Respondent's Lower Prices, Granted In Sporadic Instances to Hold Its Own Customers, Could Hardly Be Relied On By Competitors to Defend Their Price Discriminations 48

D. The Geographic Pricing Cases, Condemning Industry-Wide Systematic Discriminations, Are Not In Point 49

IV. The Commission's Failure to Challenge the Lawfulness of the Competitive Offers Confirms Their Legality 53

V. The Commission's "Cost Justification" and "Competitive Injury" Grounds For Vitiating the Meeting Competition Defense Are Legally Untenable 58

A. Cost Justification Cannot Affect the Alternative Meeting Competition Defense 58

B. The Meeting Competition Defense Is Unaffected by Findings of Competitive Injury 60

C. No Genuine Competitive Injury Appears In This Case 61

VI. This Court Should Accept the Conclusion Below That Respondent's Defense Was "Firmly Established" by the Record 64

A. Universal Camera Sustains the Reversal of the Divided Commission, in Light of the Examiner's Findings Confirmed by the Dissenting Commissioners' Independent Appraisal 64

B. This Court Will Not Supplant the Court of Appeals As the Initial Reviewer of Administrative Action 66

Conclusion 68

Appendices 71

CITATIONS

Cases:

Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61 (1953) 28, 56, 57, 60, 69

Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. United States, 298 U. S. 349 (1936) 65

Cement Institute, 37 F. T. C. 87 (1943) 17, 18

Chicago Sugar Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., 176 F. 2d 1 (7th Cir. 1949) 46

Corn Products Refining Co., 47 F. T. C. 587 (1950) 51

Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726 (1945) 53

Doubleday & Co., Inc., F. T. C. Dkt. 5897 (1955) .. 35

E. Edelmann & Co., F. T. C. Dkt. 5770 (1955) 54, 56

E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152 (7th Cir. 1956) 18, 54

Elizabeth Arden, Inc., 39 F. T. C. 288 (1944) 18

Federal Communications Commission v. Allentown Broadcasting Co., 349 U. S. 358 (1955) 67

Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 274 U. S. 543 (1927) 23, 67, 68

Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 (1948) 17, 27, 49, 51, 52

Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Pub. Co., 260 U. S. 568 (1923) 57

Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 (1948) 27, 28

Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419 (1957) 27, 49, 51, 52

Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 (1945) 17, 18, 26, 27, 28, 49, 50, 51, 53, 54, 61, 64

General Foods Corp., F. T. C. Dkt. 5675 (1954) 61

Gulf Refining Co., F. T. C. Dkt. 4390 (1957) 19

International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291 (1930) 57

Labor Board v. American Insurance Co., 343 U. S. 395 (1952) 66, 68

Labor Board v. Electrical Workers, 346 U. S. 464 (1953) 67

Labor Board v. Ohio Calcium Co., 133 F. 2d 721 (6th Cir. 1943) 65

Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498 (1951) 29, 65, 67, 68

Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 352 U. S. 992 (1957) 67

Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F. 2d 786 (7th Cir. 1951) 65

Minnesota v. Wolkoff, 1957 CCH Trade Cases, par. 68,826 (Minn. 1957) 28

Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 155 F. 2d 1016 (2d Cir. 1946) 28, 42

C. E. Niehoff & Co., F. T. C. Dkt. 5768 (1955) .. 41, 54, 56

C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 241 F. 2d 37 (7th Cir. 1957) 18, 54

Shell Oil Co., Inc., F. T. C. Dkt. 4392 (1957) 19

A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 135 F. 2d 453 (7th Cir. 1943) 10

Standard Oil Co. v. Brown, 238 F. 2d [illegible] (5th Cir. 1956) 26, 54

Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553 (1936) 52

Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., F. T. C. Dkt. 5728 (1954) 60

Texas Co., F. T. C. Dkt. 4391 (1957) 19

Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Board, 340 U. S. 474 (1951) 29, 64, 65, 66, 67

Statutes:

15 U. S. C. § 13(a) (b) (1952) 3, 4, 10, 17, 24, 25, 51, 53, 54, 59

28 U. S. C. § 1254(1) 1

Legislative and F. T. C. Materials:

Cong. Rec., June 11, 1956 26

Hearings before the House of Representatives Select Committee on Small Business on Price Discrimination, The Robinson-Patman Act and Related Matters, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. (1955) 13

Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess.; 85th Cong., 1st Sess. (1956; 1957) 25, 26, 63, 66

S. Rep. 2817, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. (1956) 57

Federal Trade Commission, Statement of Policy Toward Geographic Pricing Practices, 1 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. 5341 (1948) 49

Miscellaneous:

Adelman, Integration and Antitrust Policy, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27 (1949) 52, 59

Dirlam & Kahn, Fair Competition: The Law and Economics of Antitrust Policy (1954) 12

Kintner, The Revitalized Federal Trade Commission: A Two-Year Evaluation, 30 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1143 (1955) 51

Levi, The Robinson-Patman Act—Is It in the Public Interest? ABA Antitrust Law Section Proceedings, p. 60 (Sept. 1952) 13

McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398 (1956) 29, 39

Shniderman, Federal Trade Commission Orders Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 750 (1952) 12

Van Cise, How to Quote Functional Prices, in CCH Antitrust Law Symposium 80 (1957) 46

Comment, The Meeting Competition Defense Under Section 2(b), 49 Northwestern L. Rev. 261 (1954) 61

Legis., 50 Harv. L. Rev. 106 (1936) 46

Note, Proof of Cost Differentials under the Robinson-Patman Act, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 1011 (1952) 59

Note, Robinson-Patman Curtailments on Distribution Innovation: A Status Sought for Functional Discounts, 66 Yale L. J. 243 (1956) 46

Note, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act: The Standard Oil Litigation, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294 (1953) 13, 39, 63

Petty's Oil Letter, April 20, 1957 19

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957.

No. 24.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,
vs.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY,
Respondent.

ON WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

BRIEF FOR THE RESPONDENT.

OPINIONS BELOW.

The opinion of the Court of Appeals (R. 5495-5502) is reported at 233 F. 2d 649. The majority and dissenting findings of the Federal Trade Commission, before and after this Court's remand, appear respectively at R. 5161-82, 5257-69, and R. 5364-90, 5393-5421. The Hearing Examiner's Report appears at R. 5047-5128.

JURISDICTION.

The petition for certiorari was filed on September 28, 1956, and certiorari was granted on December 17, 1956 (R. 5504). The jurisdiction of this Court rests on 28 U. S. C. § 1254(1).

QUESTION PRESENTED.

The essential matter at issue concerns the correctness of the Court of Appeals' unanimous decision, in accord with the detailed findings of the Hearing Examiner, that the record "firmly established" that respondent's lower prices were made in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor (R. 5502).

In so holding, the Court of Appeals decided that the record affirmatively disproved the existence of any pricing system. The court held that the record "affirmatively demonstrates to the contrary," since respondent "sold invariably at its uniform tank wagon price except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer" (R. 5501). Accordingly, the legal status of discriminatory pricing systems, asserted by petitioner as the issue, is actually not presented in this review.[1]

Related questions are whether asserted knowledge by respondent that its lower prices (1) could not be cost-justified, and (2) would cause competitive "injury", can, as a matter of law, defeat its meeting competition defense.[2]

---

[1] The Question Presented by the Commission hypothesizes a meeting competition defense tendered by a seller to justify a regularly granted "discount" pursuant to its "inherently discriminatory" pricing policy "on the ground that some of the seller's major competitors employ the same pricing policy" (Br., p. 2). But respondent never rested its defense on such grounds (pp. 45, 71-76 infra), its defense was not sustained by the Examiner on such grounds (pp. 7-9 infra), nor did the decision below turn on such grounds (pp. 14-15, 24-28 infra).

[2] Respondent agrees that the validity of the Commission's cease and desist order, which the Court of Appeals had no occasion to adjudicate, is not now here (Pet. 8 n. 2; Br., p. 59). However, respondent does not waive the serious questions as to this modified order. See Brief for Petitioner before the Court of Appeals, p. 26 et seq.

STATUTE INVOLVED

Section 2(a) and (b) of the Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, in pertinent part provides:

> "(a) That it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce, either directly or indirectly, to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, where either or any of the purchasers involved in such discrimination are in commerce, where such commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States or any Territory thereof or the District of Columbia or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, and where the effect of such discrimination may be substantially to lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered: * * * And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent persons engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade. * * *
>
> "(b) Upon proof being made, at any hearing on a complaint under this section, that there has been discrimination in price or services or facilities furnished, the burden of rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing justification shall be upon the person charged with a violation of this section, and unless justification shall be affirmatively shown, the Commission is authorized to issue an order terminating the discrimination: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima-facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor." 15 U. S. C. § 13(a)(b) (1952).

STATEMENT.

At the time of the issuance of the Commission's complaint in 1940, respondent supplied several hundred dealer-customers in Detroit at its uniform tank wagon price, and sold to four "jobber" customers at its 1½¢ per gallon lower tank car price. At different times over the years, respondent had been compelled by competition to grant a competitive tank car price to these customers, after they had acquired bulk storage facilities, enabling them to receive gasoline in large tank car lots, and tank wagon delivery equipment, enabling them to supply service stations in tank wagon quantities. These customers, in other words, undertook to perform the various distributive operations known in the industry as the "jobber" function.

Competitors repeatedly solicited respondent's customers with offers of gasoline at lower prices. Having lost three other jobber customers through such competitive offers, respondent determined to defend itself by meeting its competitors' price offers in order to hold these four accounts. The resulting lower prices granted by respondent in self-defense to these individual customers after 1936 were challenged in the Federal Trade Commission's complaint as price discriminations violating the Robinson-Patman Act.

This review concerns the Court of Appeals' unanimous decision holding on the facts that respondent's lower prices were "made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor", and that respondent had fully established its statutory defense under Section 2(b).

The Court of Appeals set aside the FTC order which had been entered by a divided Commission in 1953 subsequent to remand from this Court. That remand followed the 1951 decision in which this Court overruled the original position of the Commission majority that the meeting competition defense was not available whenever asserted competitive "injury" was present. Respondent's meeting competition defense was rejected this second time by the Commission majority notwithstanding its concession that respondent "was convinced" and "had substantial reasons for believing" that "it would lose these accounts" unless it granted the lower prices (R. 5388).

The Commission majority thus maintains that respondent had no choice but to let these customers go to its competitors.

The Essential Facts.

The Commission's complaint filed in 1940 challenged respondent's prices to four specified Detroit customers as discriminatory in violation of the Robinson-Patman Act (R. 3). The Examiner who presided over months of hearings filed a comprehensive Report in 1943 detailing the salient facts (R. 5047-5128). He framed the contested issues (R. 5054-56), summarized the relevant data in the voluminous record, reached specific Conclusions of Fact, and resolved each legal issue by reference to these factual findings. Although he acceded to the Commission's original legal theory—later overruled by this Court (R. 5320)—that the presence of so-called competitive "injury" made the Section 2(b) defense unavailable to respondent as a matter of law, the Examiner concluded that respondent's defense was established factually (R. 5096, 5104-5, 5125).[3]

---

[3] The Commission's brief implies (p. 24 n. 11) that the Examiner, although finding that respondent's prices were made to meet competition, omitted to find that this was done in "good

Respondent was "set up primarily and fundamentally on a tank-wagon distribution basis" in Detroit, and typically delivered gasoline from its six bulk plants in the area to retail service stations in tank wagon quantities (R. 2623, 108-9).[4] Only four of respondent's approximately 360 Detroit customers purchased at the jobber tank car price. One commenced to buy on this basis in 1929, another in 1932, a third in 1935, and the last in 1938 (R. 5059-60)—in each case under circumstances where respondent was compelled to sell in tank car quantities at a tank car price or lose a long-time customer to a competitor.[5] Respondents could not hope to retain these four customers unless it granted them the tank car price (R. 1086, 1291-92, 1300, 1310, 1893).

The four Detroit jobber customers, Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, and Stikeman Oil Company, had sold respondent's gasoline for many years.[6] Ned's, a family enterprise, faith." But the Examiner's Report itself is clear in resolving in respondent's favor the "Sixth Question" as to whether the prices at issue were "made in good faith to meet equally low prices of competitors" (R. 5099, 5104-5); the minority Commissioners on two separate occasions expressly adopted the Examiner's findings that respondent's lower prices were made in good faith to meet competition (R. 5420, 5264); the Court of Appeals so understood twice (R. 5294, 5299-5300, 5497, 5502); and this Court observed in 1951 that the Examiner had "found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense" (R. 5315).

---

[4] Respondent's Detroit retail dealers took delivery in 700-800 gallon tank wagon lots, and paid respondent's uniform tank wagon price in Detroit (R. 5058, 112). Contrary to the Commission's brief (p. 4 n. 2), retailers of Standard's gasoline frequently also handled a competing brand (R. 222, 266).

[5] See pp. 7-9, 31-39 infra. At various times in the past respondent had three other jobber customers in Detroit, which, despite respondent's sales to them at the tank car price, went over to competitors who offered more favorable prices (R. 1912-16).

[6] Both Wayne and Stikeman functioned essentially as wholesalers, not in competition with respondent's retail customers in Detroit. Wayne operated no retail service stations until 1939, and thereafter only on an "emergency" basis when it could not find a lessee for its station properties (R. 398, 5059). Stikeman had no retail operations since 1938 (R. 5060).

had purchased respondent's gasoline as a retailer since 1918. Even though Ned's at least since 1930 "had received offers from responsible companies handling branded gasolines comparable in quality to those furnished by respondent at substantially lower prices" (R. 5093-94, 1800-14), it was refused any price reduction by respondent until 1936. In that year Ned's received a ½¢ per gallon reduction when respondent finally yielded to an "ultimatum" stating that Ned's had "definitely decided" to accept a competitive offer unless it "got a better deal from the Standard Oil Company" (R. 5093-94, 1813). After a second "ultimatum" in 1938 threatening that otherwise Ned's "would quit purchasing from respondent and accept a competitive offer" (R. 5100-1, 1819-20), respondent agreed to sell to Ned's in tank car quantities at 1½¢ per gallon below respondent's tank wagon price.

Citrin, a retailer customer of respondent since approximately 1922, after first talking with another supplier and then negotiating for weeks with respondent, obtained its 1½¢ lower tank car price in 1929 (R. 5060, 1253-55, 265).[7] Subsequently Citrin received intermittent competitive offers for gasoline at equally low or lower prices than respondent's tank car price (R. 5102-3, 1260-1303). In one instance in 1936, a contract with a competing supplier at more favorable terms was actually drawn up and executed. Although Citrin was finally dissuaded from consummating the deal, respondent necessarily kept Citrin at its tank car price (R. 5103, 1282-92).[8] [7] Thereafter Citrin operated largely as a wholesale distributor, and only sporadically operated retail stations when no lessee was available (R. 5060, 1275-76, 859).

---

[8] Stikeman, organized in 1931, had switched its business temporarily when offered a better tank car price by a competitor (R. 2013), and respondent obviously could get Stikeman back only as a tank car buyer and by meeting that price. Wayne originated as a retail service station operator in 1931 supplied by respondent at its tank wagon price (R. 378, 404, 982-4), and for two years sought

Respondent in each instance only reluctantly departed from its uniform tank wagon price in Detroit, and never granted any reductions greater than 1½¢ per gallon. It preferred to, and actually did, lose customers to competitors rather than grant any greater concessions.[9] Furthermore, respondent would rather lose an account than grant this maximum 1½¢ reduction unless the customer acquired his own bulk storage plant and trucks—permitting delivery by respondent in tank car lots averaging 8,000-12,000 gallons, as contrasted with the average 700-800 gallon deliveries to tank wagon customers (R. 112, 122),—and demonstrated a substantial volume of business and adequate credit responsibility (R. 5058, 2086, 1891-97, 118-19). To this extent the 1½¢ reduction was offset by the customer's required expenditure in the acquisition and maintenance of plant and equipment and his performance of the wholesaling operation which respondent itself undertook for its tank wagon customers (R. 951, 1013-16, 1031, 1895-97).[10] These tank car customers were classified as "jobbers" by respondent and accredited as such by the Michigan licensing authorities (R. 5059).[11] the price reduction that respondent finally granted late in 1935 (R. 379, 983-4), after Wayne purchased Pure gasoline at 1¢ per gallon under respondent's tank wagon price (R. 5101, 1156, 985, 404).

---

[9] (R. 1912-16.) The 1½¢ per gallon spread between tank car and tank wagon deliveries was typical of respondent's prices during the relevant period, although the differential narrowed to 1¼¢ and even 1¢ at times in 1938 and 1939 (R. 5110, 4872). Respondent's 1½¢ price differential was the smallest quoted to tank car buyers by any supplier; other suppliers sold at a wider differential (R. 1890, 1064, 951).

[10] See p. 63 infra.

[11] This conservative exercise of respondent's statutory right to meet competition also furnished the basis for the "alternate affirmative defenses" asserted in its answer: that its challenged prices were granted pursuant to an appropriate functional customer classification; and also were cost-justified in view of the tank car buyer's assumption of the costs of performing the jobber function (R. 12-14, 16, 5050-51); pp. 45-47, 59 infra.

The Examiner's Findings Sustaining the Meeting Competition Defense.

The Examiner found that respondent throughout the period at issue was faced with the alternative of losing the four customers or continuing to grant the lower prices (R. 5104, 5121-22). As the Examiner reported respondent's uncontroverted testimony, they "buy on a day to day basis," and "the jobber market is subject to intense competition and frequent attempts by Standard Oil Company's competitors to proselyte accounts by offering more advantageous terms and service." They "could purchase from many other sources, immediately, a gasoline of comparable quality and at a better price than they are paying at the present time" (R. 5104).

Accordingly, the Examiner concluded as a fact that respondent's ½¢ per gallon reduction to Ned's between 1936 and 1938 "was made to meet an equally low or lower price of a competitor or competitors for branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality and to retain Ned's Company's business" (R. 5096, 5121); and that respondent's 1½¢ lower tank car price, obtained by Ned's after 1938 and by the three other customers before, was "at all times granted to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality" (R. 5104, 5122).[12]

The Commission's Original Assumption That the Defense Was Established.

In its original ruling in 1945, the Commission evidently conceded the factual sufficiency of respondent's meeting competition defense, but nullified its force by resort to the novel legal theory which this Court later reversed. Commission counsel expressly waived the factual issue in oral argument before the Commission.[13] The Commission's report declared that "even though the lower prices in question may have been made by respondent in good faith to meet the lower prices of competitors, this does not constitute a defense" in view of the finding of competitive "injury" on the customer level (R. 5179).

---

[12] The Examiner, although finding respondent's defense factually established, acceded to the Commission's legal theory that proof of competitive "injury" ruled out the meeting competition defense (R. 5105, 5125).

The Commissioner writing the dissenting opinion stated that "the respondent proved that it had granted a lower price in good faith to meet a competitor's price. The trial examiner who heard the case so held, and I as a Commissioner would so find."[14]

---

[13] Respondent in argument on motions for reconsideration in 1946 pointed out that reversal of the Commission's legal theory "must inevitably result in the dismissal of the complaint in this case, because proof adduced by the respondent on the point of self-defensive meeting of competition stands uncontroverted on this record." FTC counsel acknowledged that "apparently no evidence controverting it was offered. Desiring to test the legal status of such defense, the Commission found that it was not material as a matter of law whether such defense could be sustained as a matter of fact under the circumstances of this case. Accordingly, it made no finding on the factual question. The result, I suppose, is the same as though the existence of the respondent's good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor had been conceded." Transcript of Oral Argument before FTC, pp. 16-17, 101 (April 25, 1946). (emphasis added throughout.)

This waiver concerning the factual sufficiency of respondent's defense was avowedly designed and admittedly essential to permit a judicial determination of the Commission's novel construction of Section 2(b). Id. at 101-2. Also in this connection, in A. E. Staley Mfg. Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 135 F. 2d 453, 456 (7th Cir. 1943), the Commission was directed to rule on the sufficiency of such a tendered defense.

[14] As he put it, "In the instant case, the respondent, having lost two customers because it would not meet the prices of its competitors, made up its corporate mind to hang on to what business it had left, and in good faith, and what appears to me only ordinary common sense, lowered its price to that of its competitors" (R. 5264).

The Defense Deemed Established on First Judicial Review.

On the first judicial review of this proceeding in 1949, the Court of Appeals confirmed that

> "There is substantial evidence in this record, and we think it may be assumed to be conclusive, to the effect that [respondent] made its low price to Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman in good faith to meet the lower price of a competitor" (R. 5294).

The court also observed that > "The showing made here by [respondent] that it made the lower price in good faith to meet competition, we assume, as the Commission apparently did, was made out. The effect of it was to rebut the prima facie case made by the Commission's proof of [respondent's] discriminatory prices. If nothing further appeared in this record, the case might well have ended there" (R. 5299).

But the court agreed with the Commission "that the showing of the [respondent] that it made the discriminatory price in good faith to meet competition is not controlling" due to the finding of competitive "injury" at the retail level (R. 5300).

This Court's Reversal of the Commission's "Injury" Theory and Remand for Findings:

That legal interpretation was reversed in 1951 by this Court which construed the "meeting competition" defense as "absolute" irrespective of asserted competitive injury (R. 5320-21). Proof of such "injury" being a jurisdictional prerequisite to any prima facie violation of the Act, the Court declared that the Commission's doctrine would leave the meeting competition proviso with "such little, if any, applicability as to be practically meaningless" (R. 5320).

The Court commented on respondent's "evidence tenc ing to prove that its tank car price was made to eac 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer an in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price a competitor" (R. 5311), and specially noted that "th trial examiner for the Commission in the instant case ha found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defens and yet the Commission refuses, as a matter of law, to giv them consideration" (R. 5315).[15] The case was remande for "a Finding as to Whether or Not [Respondent's] Pric Reduction Was Made in Good Faith to Meet a Lawf
Equally Low Price of a Competitor" (R. 5311).[16]

The Commission's Post-Remand Rejection of the Defens

Upon remand, a 3-2 Commission majority in 1953 on th identical record once again rejected respondent's mee ing competition defense.[17] The Commission did not direct

---

[15] The dissenting opinion also acknowledged that "the el ments" of respondent's defense are "likewise admitted" (R. 532

[16] At the close of oral argument, the Court requested Comm sion counsel to inform it as to the status of proceedings again some of respondent's Detroit competitors. The three complaints whose pendency the Commission advised the Court in a Mem randum filed on October 13, 1950, were dismissed by the Comm sion on April 3, 1957, on motion of its staff. See pp. 19, 56 inf While counsel urge that respondent's tank car price was never price "reduction" (Br., pp. 26, 29), this Court's prior opini throughout viewed respondent's lower prices as reductions—m prominently in the above-quoted caption of part III of the opini

[17] At that time, the same majority also recommended statuto revision, and advised Congress on March 16, 1953 that the law interpreted by this Court in the instant case was "too weak to m the problem to which the Robinson-Patman amendment was or inally addressed."
The persistently negative FTC attitude toward the "meeti competition" defense has been criticized by numerous commen tors. Dirlam & Kahn, Fair Competition: The Law and Econom of Antitrust Policy, p. 122 (1954) ["effort of the F.T.C. to emas late this protective clause"]; Shniderman, Federal Trade Comm sion Orders under the Robinson-Patman Act, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 7 challenge the fact findings of the Examiner in respondent's favor. Significantly, in the face of this Court's remand, the Commission did not refer in any way to the legality of the competitive offers met by respondent. The majority conceded that respondent "was convinced" and "had substantial reasons for believing" that "it would lose these accounts" if it ceased granting the lower tank car price (R. 5388).

But respondent's meeting competition defense was rejected this time by reason of its alleged knowledge that its prices would create competitive "injury" (R. 5389),[18] and its inability to cost-justify (R. 5389). The Commission also, for the first time in the case, purported to discover a "policy" or "method," assertedly used by respondent's competitors as well, pursuant to which the prices were said to be made (R. 5389).[19]

The two minority Commissioners, on the basis of an independent review of the record and the Report of the 752 (1952) ["considerable hostility"]; Note, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294, 298 (1953) ["unsympathetic attitude"]; Levi, The Robinson-Patman Act—Is It in the Public Interest?, ABA Antitrust Law Section Proceedings, pp. 60, 73 (Sept. 1952) ["notorious history"].

---

[18] Rather than an "extraordinary assertion" on respondent's part that these considerations constituted the first two grounds of the post-remand ruling (Com. Br., p. 56 n. 35), the primacy in the Commission majority's mind of the competitive "injury" ground was publicly reaffirmed by one of the three majority Commissioners. He testified that it was essentially the presence of competitive "injury" which prompted the post-remand rejection of respondent's meeting competition defense. Testimony of Stephen Spingarn, in Hearings before the House of Representatives Select Committee on Small Business on Price Discrimination, The Robinson-Patman Act and Related Matters, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. 853 (Nov. 1955).

[19] The majority findings disposed of the numerous competitive offers quoted to respondent's customers by ignoring some, disparaging others as involving gasoline of lesser public acceptance, and disqualifying the rest as stemming from the similar pricing "policy" or "method" of competitors. See discussion at pp. 40-44 infra.

Examiner, found that "The respondent's price reduction was made in good faith to meet a lawful equally low price of a competitor" (R. 5420-21, 5393). In the words of the Commissioner writing the elaborate minority opinion, "the record convinces me that the respondent—in meeting some competitor's prices—and in refusing to meet the prices of others—acted as a reasonable prudent person would have acted under the circumstances" (R. 5420).[20] He also observed that "there is nothing in the 8,000 pages of evidence in this record which might cause me to suspect that the respondent knew, or that it had reason to believe, that the competitor's lower price which it was meeting was or might have been unlawful" (R. 5420).

The Court of Appeals' Approval of the Defense as "Firmly Established."

Under review now is the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeals holding respondent's meeting competition defense "firmly established," and setting aside the Commission majority ruling as untenable legally and factually (R. 5501-2). The court observed that "the Commission does not expressly repudiate the findings of the Examiner in the original proceeding that [respondent's] reduction in price was granted to meet the equally low prices offered by competitors" (R. 5498), and saw "no dispute as to the evidentiary facts as found by the Examiner in the original proceedings" (R. 5497).

The court set aside, as factually unsupported and contradicted by the record, the Commission's newly developed theory that respondent's prices were granted pursuant to a preconceived discriminatory pricing "method" and "policy." The court was "unable to discern any basis for the assertion that [respondent's] prices were not the result of departures from a non-discriminatory price scale.'" In the court's view, "The record affirmatively demonstrates to the contrary" (R. 5501).

---

[20] Emphasis in original.

The court referred to the "bargaining and haggling which took place" as "hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system" (R. 5501). The court also noted that respondent's "reluctant grant of a ½¢ reduction in 1936, increased to 1½¢ in 1938 in response to an 'ultimatum' by Ned's, would appear to dispel completely any idea that such reduction in price was systematic, as urged by the Commission" (R. 5501).[21]

Lack of cost justification and alleged knowledge of competitive "injury," the first two specific reasons cited in the Commission's report as invalidating respondent's defense (R. 5389), were disapproved as a matter of law. Failure to cost-justify, the court noted, could not defeat the alternative statutory defense of meeting competition (R. 5499). The injury contention was dismissed by the court as reflecting the very reasoning rejected by this Court's 1951 decision (R. 5498-99).

The court also remarked "that in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful" (R. 5501).

And since the court found that respondent's practice of lowering its price to meet competition in individual instances was equally valid under the Robinson-Patman tests, before as well as after that statute amended the Clayton Act in 1936, it disapproved the further claim that respondent was obligated to revise its pricing at that time (R. 5499).[22]

---

[21] Significantly, the Commission majority's report had not used the term "system." Counsel's appellate brief first adopted the term in support of an analogy to the cases condemning industry-wide geographic pricing systems.

The Issues Here.

Before this Court, Commission counsel's argument focuses on the "admissions" of a pricing system allegedly contained in respondent's 1941 answer to the Commission's complaint.[23] Although no "admissions" had hitherto been claimed by the Commission in fifteen years of litigation, counsel now take the position that "the Commission's findings of fact rest almost exclusively on these 'judicial' admissions" of a pricing system, and "do little more than rephrase these admissions." (Br., pp. 18, 38-39).[24]

---

[22] The Commission (Br., pp. 52-58) disputes the court's statement that "If [respondent's] pricing policy was lawful prior to the amendment the same policy was lawful afterward" (R. 5499). This Court's prior opinion stated that under the Clayton Act respondent's evidence, "if accepted, would have established a complete defense to a charge of unlawful price discrimination," and viewed the precise issue to be "whether the amendments made by the Robinson-Patman Act deprived those facts of their previously recognized effectiveness as a defense" (R. 5312-13). The court below did not misconceive the well-known changes in the law wrought by the 1936 amendments, for none of these have any bearing on the issues presented by the record at bar. As this Court said, the 1936 change "restricts the proviso to price differentials occurring in actual competition" and "excludes reductions which undercut the 'lower price' of a competitor. None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense. That still consists of the provision that wherever a lawful lower price of a competitor threatens to deprive a seller of a customer, the seller, to retain that customer, may in good faith meet that lower price" (R. 5313-14).

[23] The Commission's brief repeatedly quotes excerpts from respondent's alternative defense of functional customer classification to spell out a pricing system (pp. 5, 18-19, 38-39, 43), and reprints as an Appendix those paragraphs of the answer. To permit a fair evaluation of respondent's alternative defenses, respondent has reprinted in Appendix A at pp. 71-76 infra the parts of its answer relating to its meeting competition defense, which rests entirely on lower prices in individual instances to retain old customers solicited by competitive offers.

[24] This assertion renders redundant the months of hearings, years of litigation, and volumes of record which bring

But the entire system issue, which the Court of Appeals deemed "an afterthought on the part of the Commission" (R. 5499), was not mentioned in this case until after the Commission's original "injury" theory was repudiated by this Court in 1951. The bulky record at bar was built during hearings in 1941 and 1942. Although the Examiner covered every relevant facet of the case, no challenge to any pricing system was even implied in his 80-page Report, the FTC staff's exceptions thereto in 1943, or the Commission's original findings in 1945. In fact, the Examiner characterized respondent's classification of its four customers as jobbers, from which Commission counsel today purport to detect a sinister system, as "bona fide in all respects". (R. 5098-99).

Significantly, the landmark pricing system cases, Staley and Cement Institute, were in litigation before the Commission simultaneously with this case. The Cement complaint, filed in 1937, from the outset attacked the prevalence of an industry pricing "system", while the instant case instituted in 1939 challenged only individual prices of the respondent.[25] Months prior to the Commission's original ruling against respondent in 1945, reaffirmed in 1946, Staley was decided by this Court on grounds which barred a Section 2(b) defense founded upon systematic industry pricing.[26] The Commission obviously saw no system issue in this record when it then ruled against respondent's defense on other, entirely novel, grounds which need not have been invoked if an indefensible pricing system really was present.[27]

---

this case here. It also raises the fundamental question of why the Commission waited so many years if all the factual proof it needed was supplied by respondent's answer back in 1941.

[25] Compare 37 F.T.C. 87, 102-3, 117, 124, with R. 3, 35.

[26] 324 U. S. 746 (1945).

[27] Actually, in Cement Institute the Commission in July 1943 had already disapproved a meeting competition defense for "sys-

The system issue featured before this Court today is thus of conspicuously belated origin.[28]

Notably in this connection, the Commission's petition for certiorari pointed to the "controlling effect" of the decision below on "similar cases" involving "pricing systems" pending at that time before the same Court of Appeals (Pet. 16-17). But neither the court nor the parties in those cases so understood the ruling at bar, which was neither cited in the briefs nor mentioned in the later opinions which condemned the systematic pricing there held to exist.[29]

The Commission's request for certiorari also made much of the "direct impact" of the instant case on the still pending "similar complaints" filed in 1940 against three of tematic variations" in prices throughout the industry; and in September 1943 the Commission had barred the Staley defense designed to justify the adoption of the industry-wide basing point formula whereby the "respondents became an integral part of this pricing system." 37 F.T.C. 87, 256-57 (1943); Modified Findings as to the Facts and Conclusion, Dkt. No. 3803, par. 6(b) (Sept. 13, 1943). Again in 1944, the Commission had invalidated a meeting competition defense tendered to justify a systematic discriminatory practice. Elizabeth Arden, Inc., 39 F.T.C. 288, 304 (1944). And respondent more than once brought this Court's ruling in Staley to the attention of the Commission at the time of its consideration of respondent's defense (R. 5209-10, 5243-44).

---

[28] Counsel incorrectly asserts (Br., pp. 21-22) that the illegality of respondent's prices, "apart from the Section 2(b) defense, is undisputed," and that respondent no longer "challenges" the Commission's findings that its jobber classification was "arbitrary" and that its prices caused "injury to competition." See notes 46 and 92 infra, and accompanying text.

[29] E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152, 156 (7th Cir. 1956); C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 241 F. 2d 37, 41 (7th Cir. 1957). Not even when petitioning for certiorari to review those decisions did those respondents find any basis for citing the instant case. Nos. 900 and 1125, 1956 Term.

Moreover, the writer of the opinion in the instant case joined in the Niehoff ruling, dispelling the implication in the Commission's brief (p. 31 n. 14) attributing the differing results to "differently composed panels" of the court below.

respondent's competitors in Detroit.[30] Yet at the very time of the Commission's petition here, the Commission had before it motions to dismiss those cases, filed by its own staff in January 1955. And after the grant of certiorari, these companion cases, listed in the Commission Memorandum filed on October 13, 1950, at this Court's behest, were dismissed by the Commission on April 3, 1957.[31]

---

[30] Pet. 9 n. 4, 16; Reply in Support of Pet. 11.

[31] Gulf Refining Co., Dkt. 4390; Texas Co., Dkt. 4391; Shell Oil Co., Inc., Dkt. 4392.

The self-serving Commission Press Release of June 18, 1957 quoted in its brief (p. 47 n. 27) was issued after expressions of surprise in the trade press at these dismissals in the wake of certiorari in the instant case. See, e. g., Petty's Oil Letter, April 20, 1957.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.

I.

Inasmuch as the decision below turned on the factual conclusion that the record at bar failed to demonstrate any pricing system, the legal issue as to the validity of discriminatory pricing systems posed by the Commission is purely hypothetical and gives rise to no controversy between the parties here. The unanimous decision of the Court of Appeals conformed strictly with this Court's governing precedents when it ruled, in accord with the Hearing Examiner's factual conclusions, that the statutory meeting competition proviso was satisfied by uncontroverted evidence that respondent's lower prices were granted in four individual instances over many years in order to retain established accounts in the face of competitors' lower price offerings.

II.

Should this Court, contrary to the Universal Camera rule and traditional practice, duplicate the evaluation of this record by the Court of Appeals, respondent's defense could only be reaffirmed.

The Detroit area of the 1930s, historically oversupplied with excess gasoline, was shaken by "price cutting orgies" and marketing chaos, and had none of the stability essential to the operation of any industry pricing system.

Respondent's lower prices to its four customers were wholly defensive responses to persistent price raids by competitors. Many rival suppliers in Detroit sought to capture respondent's valuable distributors, and had actually succeeded in taking away several of its accounts. The wide variety of offerings made to respondent's customers by these aggressive competitors confirms that they did not price pursuant to any industry system. Conversely, respondent's reluctance to depart from its uniform Detroit tank wagon price, and haggling over price with its own customers prior to any reductions, shows that respondent itself acted not according to a system. Rather respondent reacted in individual competitive situations, and gave the minimum concessions essential to hold the account.

III.

Counsel's references to three of the numerous important suppliers in Detroit cannot establish the asserted industry pricing system, particularly since many other suppliers marketed gasoline in Detroit in diverse ways differing from respondent and each other.

Since counsel's key contention of a pricing system can find no support in the evidence, primary reliance is now placed on the belatedly detected "admission" in respondent's 1941 answer to the Commission complaint. Actually, the asserted "admission" concerns respondent's alternate defense that its lower prices were made in line with a proper functional classification of its customers. Respondent's insistence that its maximum 1½¢ reduction be given only to customers performing valuable bulk storage and delivery functions effectively demonstrates its conservative exercise of the statutory right to meet competition. This surely enhances rather than impugns respondent's good faith in meeting competitors' prices.

Moreover, there is no basis for counsel's concern that acceptance of respondent's defense would validate the price discriminations of other suppliers. The decision below rests on the presence of actual competitive offers made by competitors and met by respondent to retain its customers.

Since the record contains not a single instance where respondent itself offered a discriminatory price to the customers of its rivals, approval of respondent's defense in this case can have no bearing on possible defenses raised by competitors to justify any price discriminations on their part.

The Geographic Pricing decisions, cited by counsel as dispositive, are not in point. As explained by the Commission itself, those cases concern industry-wide collusive pricing systems which prevented precisely the individual customer solicitations on account of price with which the instant case entirely deals.

IV.

Notwithstanding counsel's contrary insinuations, the legality of the competitive offers met by respondent is now confirmed. This Court's remand directing attention to that issue was ignored by the Commission, despite respondent's prompt request for a finding in conformity with the mandate. Even though respondent was prepared to document the requested findings as to legality, the Commission majority not only failed to go forward with any evidence impeaching legality, but actually declined to notice the issue. The minority Commissioners, after reappraising the record, proposed a finding that the competitive offers were lawful.

What is more, after certiorari was granted in the instant case, the Commission dismissed, sua sponte, the companion proceedings against three of respondent's Detroit competitors that had been brought to the attention of the Court in the course of prior oral argument in connection with the legality of the prices met by respondent. Surely counsel at this stage can no longer challenge the legality of the competitive offers by these three, let alone those of its numerous other competitors, which confronted respondent in the relevant years.

V.

The decision below properly reversed those aspects of the Commission's ruling which defeated respondent's meeting competition defense by reason of asserted competitive "injury" and respondent's inability to cost-justify in full. Cost-justification is a completely independent statutory defense. And resort to competitive "injury" would, as this Court observed in 1951, make the meeting competition defense "practically meaningless", since Section 2(b) does not come into play until a prima facie case of violation, including "injury", appears.

Besides, no "injury" was causally attributable to respondent's lower prices, which only defensively responded to equally low prices tendered repeatedly to its customers by competitors. Respondent's own prices, therefore, did not initiate or change the competitive situation on the resale level. Moreover, respondent's lower prices were minimized to the extent they were offset by the customer's performance of costly distribution functions. Hence they could not have any significant effect on his independently determined resale prices.

VI.

This Court should accept the Court of Appeals' factual evaluation of the evidence which comports fully with the Universal Camera doctrine, and decline to sit as an initial reviewer of the record de novo. Although the Commission's request for review may have stated a legal issue worthy of this Court's certiorari jurisdiction, the arguments of both petitioner and respondent highlight that the controversy here is basically factual. Accordingly, the "usual rule of noninterference" with appellate decisions centering on factual evaluations should govern here. Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 274 U. S. 543 (1927).

ARGUMENT.

I.

THE HOLDING BELOW CONFORMS WITH THE DECISIONS OF THIS COURT CONFINING THE MEETING COMPETITION DEFENSE TO INDIVIDUAL COMPETITIVE SITUATIONS.

A. The Court of Appeals Did Not Sanction Any Discriminatory Pricing System.

The Commission rests its case before this Court largely on the erroneous premise that the decision below construed the Act as permitting a discriminatory pricing system to be justified under the meeting competition proviso. In the view of Commission counsel, the court below construed Section 2(b) as tolerating a general price "system" or "dual price formula" so long as it was not inherently unlawful and did not entail the meeting of illegal prices by competitors as in the case of a "basing-point system." On this false assumption, the decision is denounced as providing "a positive incentive to competing suppliers to adopt parallel pricing systems so that each can defend its own system on the basis of similar systems used by others."[32]

But the court below did not and could not have held any pricing system justifiable under Section 2(b), for it squarely decided that respondent's prices were not granted systematically. The opinion stressed the fact findings of the Hearing Examiner, accepted and confirmed by the two minority Commissioners, that respondent's price to its four jobbers “was granted to meet the equally low prices offered by competitors” (R. 5498). The court declared, moreover, that the “bargaining and haggling which took place” was “hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system” (R. 5501). The facts were found “to dispel completely any idea that such reduction in price was systematic, as urged by the Commission” (R. 5501).

---

[32] Br., p. 50. See also Br., pp. 33-34, 46-52. That respondent's lower prices, made solely to hold its own customers, could not possibly provide any basis for the defense by competitors of their price discriminations is demonstrated at pp. 48-49 infra.

Respondent's meeting competition defense was held “firmly established” (R. 5502), not on the basis of a pricing system, but on the factual premise that respondent “sold invariably at its uniform tank wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers to retain a customer” (R. 5501).

As a matter of fact, the Department of Justice initially seemed to recognize that the decision at bar did not validate discriminatory pricing systems. The Deputy Attorney General, quoting the rejection by the court below of the “Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system,” advised Congress in 1956 that the decision did not “broaden the scope or adversely affect what we consider to be the merits of a Section 2(b) defense.”[33]

---

[33] Letter dated June 27, 1956 from the Acting Deputy Attorney General to the Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, reprinted in Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 688-89. The letter, stating that the Justice Department had “carefully analyzed” the decision below, based its conclusions as quoted above on the following understanding of the decision:

> “In the Standard Oil of Indiana case the seventh circuit court appeared to place great weight on the fact that Standard Oil had apparently proved in the original proceeding that its lower prices were made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor because of the fact that the findings of the Federal Trade Commission initial hearing examiner to this effect were never repudiated or disproved. The Court commented: ‘We think it is pertinent to observe that petitioner's good faith has either been recognized or assumed at all levels

B. The Holding Below Faithfully Applied This Court's Controlling Precedents.

Approval of a meeting competition defense in the factual circumstances on which the lower court based its decision conforms strictly with the law as enunciated by this Court.[34] With respect to the legal status of industry pricing systems, there is no real controversy between the parties here.

Since the Staley case in 1945, this Court has maintained that the meeting competition proviso "places emphasis on individual competitive situations, rather than upon a general system of competition." Federal Trade Commission > during this proceeding.' The Court apparently was convinced that Standard Oil had proved that it was meeting a 'lawful' lower price of a competitor, stating 'in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention, and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful.' Finally, the Court held that these price reductions, used as a defensive mechanism to retain the four existing customers, were based upon individual competitive situations rather than pursuant to a 'pricing system' stating '[t]he bargaining and haggling which took place between petitioner and the four involved 'wholesalers' prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system.' "

For the Court's convenience, the letter is reprinted in full text in Appendix B, pp. 77-79 infra.

Rep. Patman, co-sponsor of the Robinson-Patman Act, also understood the decision below in like manner. As he viewed the decision, "the nub of the thinking, as it seems to me, is that Standard was doing no more than the Supreme Court said it could do under the law." Cong. Rec., June 11, 1956, p. 9016.

[34] This was the view also expressed recently by another Court of Appeals concerning the instant proceedings: "In reversing the judgment in favor of the Federal Trade Commission, the [Supreme] Court assumed that the Standard Oil Company had brought itself within the § 2(b) proviso. • • • The Supreme Court returned the case to the Federal Trade Commission to make its findings as to whether the Standard Oil Company had proven itself to come within § 2(b). The Commission reviewed the matter and failed to give full effect to the Supreme Court's opinion as to the availability of § 2(b) relief." Standard Oil Co. v. Brown, 238 F. 2d 54, 57-58 (5th Cir. 1956).

v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, 753, 754 (1945).[35] On the other hand, a seller need only "show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." Id. at 760. For, in recognition of the realities of business, "the statute does not place an impossible burden on sellers." Id. at 759.

Moreover, this Court's opinion on its prior review of the instant case made clear that "Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act either to abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense against a price raid by a competitor," and emphasized the "plain language and established practice which permits a seller, through Section 2(b), to retain a customer by realistically meeting in good faith the price offered to that customer, without necessarily changing the seller's price to its other customers" (R. 5319).

In the case at bar, the Court of Appeals agreed that "respondent was confronted with the problem of reducing its price to meet competitive offerings or of forfeiting the business of the four jobbers" (R. 5498), and read the record to confirm that respondent "sold invariably at its uniform tank wagon price, except when at different times it reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer" (R. 5501).[36]

---

[35] See also Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 43 (1948); Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683, 725 (1948). Most recently, the Court in an industry-wide zone pricing case reaffirmed that this proviso could not justify "an entire pricing system," but rather was "designed to protect competitors in individual transactions." Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419, 431 (1957).

[36] The Commission's brief throughout controverts the facts recited in the court's opinion—not by challenging the correctness of the court's evaluation of the record evidence under the Universal

These price reductions made by respondent on widely separate occasions over a period of years to retain the business of four of its several hundred Detroit customers are surely "individual competitive transactions" and "situations" within the meaning of this Court's guides. The Court of Appeals' validation of respondent's meeting competition defense on the basis of these facts thus adhered squarely to the legal principles established by this Court.[37]

Camera tests, but by disputing the court with the very Commission majority findings which were set aside as unsupported. In this way, counsel becloud the precise point at issue, i.e. whether the decision below properly evaluated the record in reversing the action of the Commission majority. See pp. 64-66 infra.

[37] Although the Commission in 1950 urged here "that the words 'good faith' really add nothing to Section 2(b)" (No. 107, 1949 Term, Com. Br., p. 42), the Commission today obscures the issue by suggesting that a seller who has in fact lowered his price solely to meet competitors' equally low and lawful prices may nonetheless lose his defense for lack of "good faith" (Br., pp. 29, 46, 52-57). The term "good faith," as the Commission correctly recognized in 1950, adds no special technical requirements to the law.

Actually, the "good faith" terminology softens the stringent requirements of the Section 2(b) defense. According to Staley, "Section 2(b) does not require the seller to justify price discriminations by showing that in fact they met a competitive price. But it does place on the seller the burden of showing that the price was made in good faith to meet a competitor's. * * * [T]he statute at least requires the seller, who has knowingly discriminated in price, to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor." Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, 759-60 (1945). The decisions construing analogous state enactments are in accord. E.g., Minnesota v. Wolkoff, 1957 CCH Trade Cases, par. 68,826 (Minn. 1957) and cases cited.

In sum, the "good faith" factor serves to test merely whether the seller's lower prices constitute "bona fide attempts to meet competition" (Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61, 71 (1953)), or a "good faith effort to meet a competitor's equally low price" (Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 43 (1948)), rather than a collusive or predatory tactic. Cf. Staley at 758 ("price discriminations were not made to meet a 'lower price' and consequently were not in good faith"); Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 155 F. 2d 1016 (2d Cir. 1946) ("the offer shall be made without actual intent to undercut his competitors' price").

II.

DE NOVO APPRAISAL OF THE RECORD NEGATIVES ANY SYSTEMATIC PRICING.

If this Court, contrary to precedent and practice,[38] declined to accept the factual determination below that respondent's prices were not systematic, its own de novo evaluation of the whole "record including the examiner's report" would confirm that the pricing system theory is devoid of evidentiary support. Cf. Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Board, 340 U. S. 474, 493-497 (1951).

A. The Competitive Turmoil in Detroit Tolerated No Pricing System.

The Detroit gasoline market in the recession years of the late 1930s bore no resemblance to the stable and orderly marketing conditions essential to systematic pricing within an industry. The Examiner found that "Detroit is a highly competitive market as far as the oil industry is concerned." and characterized competition there as "intense" (R. 5113).[39]

Detroit was the hub in one of the country's most competitive areas for the distribution of gasoline. By 1940 Michigan refineries alone had grown to twenty-nine from seventeen in 1935,[40] and Michigan's own crude production met 30% of its needs (R. 1380, 1901). Besides this growth in local capacity, Detroit as a gasoline market was accessible from all distant refining centers by lake tanker, pipeline and rail (Resp. Ex. 24, R. 4826, 1378, 1900). All told, over twenty large oil companies competed for the Detroit market during these years, in addition to numerous small refiners, distributors and even "yard haulers" (R. 1900-3, 1969, 4885-86, 5106-7, 5404).

---

[38] E.g., Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Board, 340 U. S. 474, 491 (1951); Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498, 502-3 (1951), discussed in detail at pp. 64-68 infra.

[39] For a comprehensive study of the Detroit gasoline marketing situation in the relevant years, see McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398 (1956).

[40] (Resp. Ex. 25-B, R. 4828, 1378).

Competition was intensified in the price-conscious recession years relevant to this case (R. 5113, 414, 443, 540, 1904-5). The Detroit area had historically been oversupplied with excess gasoline from the Mid-Continent and other substantial refining centers (R. 1900-1). And while available supplies from Michigan fields and other refining centers mounted, gasoline consumption between 1937 and 1938 alone slumped by over 10% in Detroit where layoffs in the automobile industry curtailed consumer spending (R. 1904). The effect of this gasoline glut was a flare-up of price wars, customers raids and a "scramble for gallonage" at all marketing levels (R. 1904, 1683-84, 1908, 1975).[41]

As the Examiner reported, "In 1938 the gasoline war had reached its peak, a general business depression existed, causing a demoralized retail situation" shaken by periodic "price cutting orgies" (R. 5116, 5118).

Amid these upheavals in the chaotic Detroit gasoline market, no placid industry pricing system could or did prevail in the sale of gasoline. On the contrary, aggressive ingenuity rather than collusive conformity was at a premium in the competitive "scramble".

---

[41] Price concessions were not the only weapon in the Detroit price wars. Other competitive inducements included premiums such as trading stamps, free cigarettes, china, clocks, eggs and lottery tickets (R. 1909).

B. The Wide Range of Aggressive Competitive Offers Contradicts Any Systematic Industry Pricing.

Respondent was on the defensive throughout. It merely sought to hold some of its established accounts, and is not charged with soliciting competitors' customers.

Respondent's gasoline sales suffered steady inroads during these years. In 1937, respondent sold 70 million gallons of gasoline in the Detroit area, accounting for 17.1% of the total (R. 5061, 4879). In the next year, respondent's sales dropped off almost 10 million gallons, while its share of the Detroit market shrank to 16.4% (R. 5061, 4879). Respondent's market position continued to decline after a recovery in 1939, so that by 1940—the last year covered by this record—its share had fallen to 16.2% of the Detroit market (R. 5061, 4879). By contrast, sales of private brand gasoline by jobbers in the Detroit area shot up 61% between 1937 and 1938 alone, and more than doubled over the period 1936-1940 (R. 4881, 1970-75).

Typical of the aggressive Detroit competition throughout the 1930s and refuting any pricing system were the successful price raids on respondent's valuable customers. The large number of respondent's customers owning their retail or bulk storage facilities were supplied on a short-term contractual or even informal day-to-day basis, and were free to negotiate with rival suppliers or switch to anyone offering more favorable prices or terms (R. 5104, 5058).[42]

Apart from the four customers which respondent retained by meeting competitors' prices, a number of accounts were lost because of competitive offerings which respondent failed to meet. Carnick and Dick Lock, two of respondent's jobber customers already receiving the lower tank car price, accepted better offers of another supplier which in one case permitted free storage at its bulk plant for the customer's benefit (R. 1912, 1915-16). A third customer, Middleton, also buying at respondent's lower tank car price, shifted to a competitor for "a better proposition" (R. 1913-15).

---

[42] Respondent's Detroit tank car customers which maintained their own bulk plants were supplied on a day-by-day basis without any term contract or agreement (R. 5058, 5104, 115-16). Of the approximately 358 retail service stations supplied by respondent in Detroit, about 208 were company-owned and leased to operators ordinarily for a one-year term, and the remaining 150 stations, independently owned and operated, purchased on a one-year contractual basis (R. 5057-5058).

As the Examiner reported, "the 'jobber' customer market is subject to intense competition and frequent attempts by Standard Oil Company's competitors to proselyte accounts by offering more advantageous terms and service" (R. 5103-4).

In addition to losing these tank car accounts to more attractive competitive offers, respondent also lost several tank wagon customers. One dealer went over to Phillips 66 gasoline distributed by Red Indian Oil Company when offered a "concession" (R. 489-90). Another dealer went over to Argo Oil Company, a distributor of Ohio Oil Company's Linco and Marathon gasoline (R. 179-80, 567, 560-61), and a Montgomery-Ward service station did likewise after respondent failed to meet competitive offers which would have entailed giving its lower tank car price for tank wagon deliveries (R. 2079). Ned's, respondent's biggest Detroit dealer, was already purchasing motor oil from Red Indian when he seriously considered accepting Red Indian's offers of Phillips 66 and Standard of Ohio Fleet Wing gasoline (R. 1804, 3108-9).[43]

It was in this context of persistent price raids and actua lost accounts that respondent tried to hold its remaining valuable Detroit customers. Out of a total annual volume of 60 to 75 million gallons annually sold by respondent in the Detroit area, 8 to 15 million gallons were taken by the four customers: Ned's, Citrin, Wayne, and Stikeman. (R. 5061. 4879). Loss of these four could have sacrificed almost 20% of respondent's annual Detroit sales (R. 5061, 4879).

---

[43] The record does not purport to cover all losses of customers for the Examiner excluded proof concerning the loss to other brands offered at lower tank wagon prices, including Gulf, Dixie Hi-Speed, and Fleet Wing, of numerous dealers supplied by respondent's jobber customers (R. 1686-95).

The variety of the competitive offers tendered to respondent's four tank car customers likewise dispels any trace of systematic industry pricing in Detroit.

Take, for example, the offers received by respondent's customer Citrin-Kolb (R. 5102, 5410-12, 1253-1310, 2002-10): Hicock Oil Company, a Pure Oil distributor, offered a proposition permitting Citrin to buy Hi-Speed gasoline at a 1¢ per gallon more favorable basis than his arrangement with respondent, and a share in a new jointly owned corporation with Hicock (R. 5102, 2002-5, 1259-69). Shell tendered to Citrin and Middleton Oil Company the exclusive Wayne County distributorship for Shell's Silver Flash gasoline at ½ to ¾¢ per gallon below respondent's price, coupled with free advertising and equipment (R. 5102, 2006, 1269-74.)[44] Gulf underbid respondent's price by tendering the free use of Gulf's bulk storage plant as well as "pumps and other station equipment, including repairs to pumps, painting the dealer stations, and equipment used in connection therewith" (R. 5102-3 5411, 2006, 1277-80). The Texas Company offered ½¢ a gallon below respondent's tank car price, together with free "advertising, paint and globes" and a guaranteed 5 year contract (R. 5103, 5411, 2008, 1282-90). Argo Oil Company, a distributor of Ohio Oil Company Marathon gasoline, offered Citrin 2¢ or more below respondent's tank wagon price (R. 2010, 5411, 1295-1301). Finally, Aurora, a local Michigan refinery with a heavy Detroit volume, tendered to Citrin gasoline with a guaranteed octane rating higher than respondent's gasoline at ½¢ per gallon less (R. 5103, 5412, 2010, 2013, 1301-10), and repeatedly made the same offer over a period of years to another customer of respondent. (R. 5101, 1147-52, 1165).

---

[44] Middleton accepted this offer and thereafter ceased to be respondent's customer (R. 1272).

Equally varied were the bids to respondent's other tank car customers.[45] Red Indian Oil Company, distributor of Phillips 66, repeatedly offered gasoline at 1½¢ below respondent's tank wagon price, with free storage at Red Indian's bulk plant (R. 1804-5, 1988, 5406). One customer temporarily accepted a better offer by White Star Refining Company (R. 2013-14). Phillips Petroleum also bid for this customer with a price lower than respondent's (R. 2013-14). And National Refining Company, a substantial gasoline supplier in the United States and Canada already selling to jobbers just outside Detroit, over a period of months negotiated for the exclusive Detroit area distribution of its White Rose brand by two of respondent's customers jointly at ½¢ per gallon below respondent's tank car price (R. 5101-2, 5415, 1152-55, 1211, 1949-50, 2013-14).

This miscellany of competitive offerings tendered by respondent's rivals disproves any industry pricing system. For the wide range and diversity of their bids reflected no common industry-wide pricing formula, but rather showed individual efforts to capture respondent's valuable customers with a variety of inducements. It was at respondent's own insistence before granting its lower tank car price, and not because of any industry system; that respondent's customers possessed bulk storage and transportation facilities enabling them to take tank car delivery of gasoline so as to qualify as jobbers.[46]

---

[45] See also additional offers made to Ned's, discussed at pp. 35-39 infra. Besides the detailed competitive offers to these customers, respondent's District Manager told of "being informed by them from time to time of other offers and inducements" (R. 2014).

[46] Counsel's assertion that respondent was "arbitrary" in classifying as jobbers customers performing the jobber function.

C. The "Tug of War" Preceding the Successive Lower Prices to Ned's, Respondent's "Most Valuable" Customer, Belies Any Systematic Pricing by Respondent.

The record's most prominent instance of lower prices illustrates the competitive rather than systematic nature of respondent's own pricing in Detroit. Ned's, "respondent's most valuable tank-wagon customer" whose aggressive resale pricing tactics were the Commission's prime target (R. 5093, 5111, 955), received respondent's lower price not pursuant to any formula or system, but only after a "constant tug of war" over several years.[47]

The Hearing Examiner's Report graphically portrays the individualistic character of respondent's pricing relationship with Ned's, which in 1936 received a ½¢ reduction and in 1938 the 1½¢ per gallon lower tank car price:

Ned's Auto Supply Company since its establishment in 1918 had bought gasoline from respondent on a tank wagon basis at the price quoted to other Detroit dealers. However,

> "from 1930 to 1936 Ned's had received offers from responsible companies handling branded gasolines comparable in quality to those furnished by respondent at substantially lower prices—one cent per gallon less by tank-wagon, and from two to five cents per gallon less by tank car than the price respondent was charging because they also sold at retail (Br., pp. 44-45), was not only discounted by this Court in 1951 (R. 5309 n. 4), but appears repudiated by the Commission itself. After discussing the instant proceedings, the opinion of the Commission in Doubleday & Co., Inc., Dkt. 5897, declared: "In our view, to relate functional discounts solely to the purchaser's method of resale without recognition of his buying function thwarts competition and efficiency in marketing, and inevitably leads to higher consumer prices." CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, par. 25,634 (1955).

---

For detailed refutation of counsel's system argument, see pp. 39-47 infra.

[47] Ned's president testified to the "constant tug of war between Standard Oil and us" (R. 1809).

Ned's. Some of these offers were communicated to respondent's District Manager with the request that Ned's be accorded a lower price but respondent's District Manager refused to allow an increased margin" (R. 5093-4).[48]

According to the Examiner,

> "as a final effort to obtain a lower price from respondent, Ned's Company by letter dated August 27, 1936 advised respondent's District Manager that it had received an offer from a competitive major oil company to supply it gasoline at a lower price than it was then receiving from respondent and it was then its intention to accept the offer. This was followed by a conference between Charles H. Gershenson, President of Ned's and P. A. Raupagh, respondent's District Manager, at which Gershenson informed Raupagh that the letter dated August 27 was an ultimatum and that Ned's Company had definitely decided to accept the lower offer from the competing company unless it 'got a better deal from the Standard Oil Company'" (R. 5094).

In the course of an interview requested by Ned's with an official at respondent's headquarters in Chicago "before the final break occurred," Gershenson insisted "that if respondent did not grant Ned's a better price, either a better tank-wagon price or a tank-car price, that Ned's was going to stop doing business with Standard" (R. 5094-95). And only after respondent's District Manager "came to the definite conclusion that respondent would lose Ned's business unless respondent met, at least part way, the offers of competitors" was Ned's accorded a ½¢ per gallon reduction on September 1, 1936 (R. 5095).

---

[48] The efforts to dissuade Ned's were thus reported:

"Respondent's District Manager would stress the long private and public association of Ned's with respondent and its branded gasolines which had acquired wide public acceptance, and the volume of business developed; that a change to another competitive brand would result in loss of customers and decrease in volume, which would off-set in profits the difference in the cost of the gasoline. Charles H. Gershenson, President of Ned's Company, testified that he appreciated the force of the argument advanced by respondent's District Manager and that in addition thereto his company did not want to change its supplier of gasoline for sentimental reasons—his father had passed away, and the family entertained 'a superstition that the last thing we wanted to do was change from the Standard Oil Company'" (R. 5094).

In the Examiner's conclusion of fact, "the differential of .5¢ per gallon on Red Crown gasoline respondent granted Ned's Auto Supply Company on tank wagon deliveries from September 1, 1936, to March 1, 1938, was made to meet an equally low or lower price of a competitor or competitors for branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality and to retain Ned's Company's business" (R. 5096).[49]

Respondent was able to hold Ned's business with this ½¢ for a time. But, as the Examiner reported, Ned's "was not satisfied," and in a letter in February 1938 demanded "immediate consideration to the desirability of continuing as our gasoline supplier, but at tank car prices. Otherwise, we shall be compelled to re-open negotiations with other suppliers" (R. 5100).[50] At a final conference, "Gershenson stated that his letter dated February 14, 1938 was an ultimatum" and that unless respondent "met, at least part-way, the competitive offers of the Shell, Red Indian and Texas Companies, which offers were of differentials as much as 2¢ per gallon, Ned's would quit purchasing from respondent and accept a competitive offer" (R. 5100-01).[51]

---

[49] If respondent had quoted its prices pursuant to a system, as the Commission's brief contends, surely Ned's, respondent's "most valuable" customer, should have been the first to get the full system price without having to haggle for months and then reluctantly settling for a mere ½¢ reduction as "better than nothing" (R. 1813-15, 1991-94).

[50] "Gershenson informed Raupagh that the available offer from the Red Indian Company quoted a price ⅜ of a cent lower on tank-car deliveries than respondent's price, and had an additional advantage in that it would be unnecessary for Ned's to have and maintain its own bulk plant; that the price quoted by the Shell Oil Company was .5¢ lower than respondent's tank-car price; and that the offer from the Texas Company for 2.5¢ lower on the house brand and 3.25¢ lower on Ethyl gasoline" (R. 5100).

Determined to get a tank car price, Ned's shortly thereafter acquired a bulk plant and made arrangements for hauling, "with the expectation of buying gasoline in tank cars from either Standard or somebody else" (R. 226-7, 1823; 1868, 5100). Only then, as the Examiner found, respondent on March 7, 1938 finally "acceded to Ned's demands" and granted Ned's its lower tank car price (R. 5101). The testimony of respondent's Detroit District Manager, adopted by the Examiner, was that he "was convinced that if respondent did not meet, or approximate, such competitive offers, Ned's would be lost as a customer; that knowing the market, as he did, he was of the definite opinion that the threats made by [Ned's] were made in earnest and would be acted upon unless respondent placed Ned's on a competitive basis" (R. 5101).[52]

Accordingly, the Examiner also reported that "The recognition by respondent of Ned's Auto Supply Company as a jobber or wholesaler was a forced recognition to retain that company's business" (R. 5098).

---

[51] In addition to these specific propositions from Shell, Red Indian, and Texas Company, Standard's District Manager was also told of offers to Ned's by Sun Oil and Gulf, as well as "many more offers" (R. 1998, 2000, 2001). In this connection, he mentioned that his relations with Ned's "haven't been as nice as they should be, when these competitive offers would come up," and that "sometimes the air was kind of hot." (R. 2002).

[52] Several of the offers to Ned's were reaffirmed as late as 1940 (R. 1835-37, 3107). The record fully supports the Examiner as to the offers to Ned's (R. 1800-37, 1990-2002, 3107, 5406-10). Despite the fact that Ned's satisfied Standard's minimum criteria for jobber recognition prior to 1936 (R. 4873-74), its tank car price was withheld until the 1938 "ultimatum."

Contrast these record facts as reported by the Examiner with the Commission's assertion (Br., p. 10 n. 6, 43) that respondent in granting the lower prices to Ned's was not responding to competitive offers, "but instead granted the lower price on the understanding that Ned's would conform to Standard's requirements for 'jobber' status (R. 1821, 1995), the volume requirement having already been satisfied (R. 119, 5372)."

Such a "tug of war" for a price advantage is surely alien to any "dual pricing formula" or "system." It demonstrates price reductions granted reluctantly and in the minimum amounts essential to retain a valuable customer in "individual competitive transactions"—rather than systematically pursuant to any preconceived general plan or system.

III.

THE COMMISSION'S EFFORTS TO CONSTRUCT A PRICING "POLICY, METHOD, OR SYSTEM" ARE UNSUPPORTABLE.

Permeating counsel's brief is the charge that respondent's prices admittedly reflect an industry-wide, perhaps collusive, scheme.[53] Relying mainly on the asserted "admissions" in respondent's answer to the complaint in 1941, the Commission claims that respondent's designation of its tank car customers as "jobbers" corresponded with the practice of other gasoline suppliers—thereby establishing an inherently discriminatory "industry-wide dual price system' (pp. 26, 30, 36, 38-39, 50-52). In light of this assumption, the decision at bar purportedly carries the grave consequence that "as long as competing sellers follow the same discriminatory pricing policies, each is protected," which would "provide a positive incentive to competing suppliers to adopt parallel pricing systems so that each can defend its own system on the basis of similar systems used by others" (pp. 50, 51). Counsel thus conjure up an industry-wide concert whereby sellers practice parallel price discriminations in reciprocal reliance upon the meeting of each other's competition.

---

[53] The brief's allusions to the dangers of a supplier's "attempt to manipulate its overall price scale upward" where "competitors employ the same dual price formula" (p. 30) are not only destitute of a trace of support from the record, but are belied by the Examiner's findings that competition was "intense" in Detroit, which was "a highly competitive market as far as the oil industry is concerned" (R. 5113)—a condition confirmed by scholarly studies of the Detroit market during those years. See McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398 (1956); and Note, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294 (1953).

Counsel's contentions cannot overcome the record and the facts.

A. The Record Contradicts Each Premise of the Pricing System Assertion.

The Commission's brief (pp. 10 n. 6, 25-26, 44 n. 24), interprets the findings of the majority Commissioners as supporting the pricing system contention on three premises: (1) that respondent's lower prices were initially granted prior to the Robinson-Patman Act, or prior to the customer's receipt of competitive offers and "never responded to" such offers;[54] (2) that respondent met the prices of gasolines of lesser public acceptance which could not pose a "serious competitive threat"; and (3) that respondent's lower prices merely reflected an industry wide discriminatory "dual price system".

The record refutes each of these premises:

(1) While now decrying the scarcity of competitive offers prior to the 1936 Robinson-Patman amendments, counsel ignore that evidence of pre-1936 competitive offers was ruled out as immaterial, thus preventing respondent

---

[54] The brief also maintains that some of the competitive offers to respondent's customers occurred after the date the instant complaint was filed (P. 10 n. 6). But, as bearing on respondent's need to continue granting its lower prices, the relevancy of the recurrent offers to its customers, before as well as after the complaint was acknowledged by the Commission in 1942 when it restored precisely this evidence which the Examiner had stricken (R. 93-94, 1240-42). Besides, the very customers allegedly receiving offers after the complaint was filed had in fact been negotiating with the competitor for several months previously (R. 1211-12, 1166-67).

from making a fuller record for these early years (R. 1146, 1242, 1327). Even then, the evidence shows numerous pre-1936 negotiations and offers. Citrin negotiated with Paragon in 1928, and in 1930 had offers from Hicock Oil Company for Pure Oil Hi-Speed gasoline and from Shell for Silverflash (R. 1253-55, 1259-74). Ned's negotiated with Argo Oil Company and Red Indian Oil Company in 1930 for Phillips 66 and Ohio Oil Company Dixie gasoline (R. 1803-64). Wayne actually purchased Pure Oil Hi-Speed gasoline from Highland in 1935 (R. 984-85). Stikeman had purchased White Star in 1932, and actively negotiated with Phillips before 1936 (R. 2013-14).

Counsel's contention that respondent failed to "respond to" competitive offers misunderstands the purport of the evidence and the issue in this case. Counsel apparently assume that a seller "responds" to competitive offerings only if each particular offer is immediately followed by his price reduction. But the recurrent competitive offers to respondent's customers on this record demonstrate that respondent was forced to continue granting its lower tank car price or lose an account.[55] Respondent's evidence of pre-1936 offers was repeatedly ruled out as immaterial precisely because the basic issue was viewed throughout as whether the continuation of respondent's lower prices after the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act was essential to meet competitors' equally low prices.[56]

---

[55] The Commission itself has recently disclaimed that prices made to meet competitor's equally low price must be "temporary." C. E. Niehoff & Co., Dkt. 5768, CCH Trade Reg. Rep. Transfer Binder, par. 25,467 (1955).

[56] See especially the Examiner's ruling which required proof that as of the date of the Act "it was necessary for this respondent to continue to maintain those prices in order to meet competition." (R. 1241). Moreover, this was the predicate of the Examiner's Report which concluded that respondent's lower prices subsequent to the date of the Robinson-Patman Act were granted to meet competitive offers in order to retain its customers (R. 5104, 5122). The rationale of the minority Commissioners is to like effect (R. 5416-20).

(2) Counsel's disparagement of offers said to involve gasoline of lesser public acceptance is equally misconceived. Section 2(b) does not require that a seller meet lower price offers for gasoline of equal public acceptance. When the customer is earnestly considering a competitive bid for his business, a seller is surely entitled to retain that account by lowering its own price in good faith to meet the offer—regardless of abstract considerations of public acceptance.[57] The real test is whether his own price reduction is truly necessitated by competitive offers threatening to capture his customers.

The fact is that the gasolines of lesser "public acceptance" distributed by Red Indian Oil Company and Argo Oil Company, now belittled by the Commission, were branded products of such important refiners as Phillips (Phillips 66), Standard Oil of Ohio (Fleet Wing) and Ohio Oil Company (Marathon, Linco, Dixie) (R. 1349, 2080). Contrary to the Commission majority, which confused such offers with "off-brand gasolines" (R. 5387), the Examiner considered them "in immediate and direct competition" with respondent's and other major branded gasolines, and "of substantially the same quality in the public mind" (R. 5107).[58]

---

[57] If the competitive offer involves gasoline which finds less favor with the public and hence can command only a lower price in the market, a seller may perhaps not reduce his own price far enough to meet exactly the price offer for the less popular product, since this may be tantamount to undercutting it in a marketing sense. Cf. Samuel H. Moss, Inc. v. Federal Trade Commission, 155 F. 2d 1016 (2d Cir. 1946). This does not mean, however, that the seller may never lower his price part way in order to hold his customers when they are solicited with such products at prices so low as to warrant their serious consideration.

[58] Actually, the Standard of Ohio Fleet Wing gasoline distributed by Red Indian, which the Commission majority singled out for special scorn (R. 5387), was posted at the same tank wagon price as respondent's gasoline (R. 2118), and was marketed through at least 100 outlets in Detroit (R. 1866-67).

The Commission's confusion may have stemmed from testimony concerning the cut-rate competition offered in Detroit by oil companies such as Charles E. Austin, Inc., Puritan, Sunny Service

They had forcefully demonstrated their competitive "threat" by taking several customers away from respondent (R. 489-90, 560-61, 2079).

Moreover, unless the suppliers and respondent's customers negotiating with respect to these gasolines seriously weighed their appeal as a competitive "threat" to respondent's product, why did they spend the time to negotiate?[59]

(3) The evidence does not disclose the "industry-wide dual price system" asserted throughout by Commission counsel (Br., pp. 26, 30-34, 36-39, 42-55).[60]

The claim of an "industry-wide dual price system" rests on the pricing of a small minority of the more than twenty substantial gasoline suppliers in the Detroit area—Shell, Gulf, and Texas, against whom the Commission filed its abortive complaints (Br., pp. 40 n. 22, 47, 51). But besides these three, there were many important suppliers in Detroit which counsel ignore entirely—such as Socony-Vacuum, Sun, Sinclair, Pure Oil, Phillips, Cities Service, Standard of Ohio, Ohio Oil Company, and Mid-Continent Petroleum. (Resp. Ex. 55-A & B, R. 4875-76, 1923). Of these, several marketed in Detroit through large distributors or jobbers

---

Leonard and Roosevelt, which marketed off-brand gasoline such as Zip and Joy at prices up to 6¢ per gallon below the nationally known brands (R. 5107, 1686, 1398, 882, 1843-46, 1960-68).

[59] The Commission's efforts to minimize these offers is undercut by the concession that respondent's initial ½¢ reduction to Ned's is no longer challenged (Br., p. 13). For that lower price to Ned's met, among others, the very Red Indian gasoline offer for Fleet Wing which the findings undertake to disparage (R. 5387). Also, the Examiner excluded testimony that retailers of respondent's gasoline were actively solicited by distributors of Standard of Ohio Fleet Wing, Ohio Oil Company Dixie, as well as Pure Oil Company and Cities Service gasoline (R. 898-903, 1688-95).

[60] The system contention is not even reached unless the offers concerning gasolines of alleged lesser public acceptance are first properly ruled out. For the claim of a system is based on the assumption that the only offers at issue are those involving gasolines of admittedly equal public acceptance. Unless the other offers are disposed of, the system assertion is manifestly untenable.

purchasing on a tank car basis only (Cities Service, Stan ard of Ohio, Ohio Oil Company, Phillips) (Ibid., Resp. E 38-C, R. 4866, 3092-98, 1259, 1955, 1982, 1805, 2013).[61] N tional Refining Company sought to invade the Detroit ma ket on the basis of exclusive jobber sales (R. 1949, 2012
And respondent's three largest Detroit rivals sold only a single uniform tank wagon price, either to dealers d rectly (Sun, Socony-Vacuum) or through commissi agents (Sinclair) (R. 5301, 2129-30, 2075, 977, 945, 32 Resp. Ex. 55-B, R. 4876, 1923).

Under these circumstances, counsel's references to thr suppliers, not even ranking within the five largest in Detr (R. 2129-30), hardly suffice to construct an industry-wi dual price system[62]—particularly in view of the Commi sion's own dismissal of these three cases.

B. The Claimed "Admission" in Respondent's Asserti in 1940 of an Alternate Defense of Functional Custom Classification Is Baseless.

The evidence does not support any "industry-wide du price system," and Commission counsel's brief does n make any serious contrary showing. Instead, the syst claim today rests mainly on an asserted "admission" in r spondent's answer filed in 1941 (Br., pp. 36-42).

This so-called admission had not been heretofore d tected during many months of hearings and fifteen yea of litigation. No claim of any admission is contained

---

61. The pattern of distribution employed by the respective s pliers in other communities varied. (Resp. Ex. 23, R. 93, 51, 332-942-43, 971, 978, 1074-75, 1623, 2535). Phillips, for example, m keted through both jobbers and retailers in Milwaukee and Louis (Resp. Ex. 23, R. 93, 51, 1072).

62. The record's failure to indicate clearly how the other pr cipal suppliers marketed in the Detroit area is doubtless due to fact that the "system" issue was never raised while the record being built.

the Commission's original 1955 or post-remand 1953 report. Although counsel assert that the "Commission's basic findings do little more than repurase these admissions" on which they "rest almost exclusively" (Br. pp. 38, 39), these findings profess to rest on the evidence of record and nowhere refer to admissions (R. 5382-90). Nor did the staff brief filed in support of the Commission's proposed findings in 1952 perceive any admissions on respondent's part.

The fact is, as the Examiner recognized, that respondent's answer asserted several alternate and entirely consistent defenses to justify its price differentials to the four Detroit customers. In addition to the meeting competition defense based entirely on lower prices made individually to retain its four accounts in separate instances,[63] respon-

---

[63] The Commission's brief quotes heavily from the averments in respondent's answer relating to its functional classification defense, reprinted in a special Appendix (Br. pp. 60-63), but ignores respondent's specific averments relating to its meeting competition defense. For the Court's convenience, these are reprinted as Appendix A, pp. 71-76 infra. In most directly pertinent part, they state that:

> "Respondent alleges that said four dealers named in Paragraph Three Complaint, or their predecessors, have been continuously, for many years last past, the gasoline customers of Respondent; that at the time each of said customers went onto a tank car basis of purchasing gasoline that it could purchase on such basis, comparable gasoline to that sold by Respondent, from a number of Respondent's competitive gasoline suppliers for an equally low or lower price than from Respondent, and upon equally or more advantageous terms and arrangements in the matter of facilities, services, inducements and benefits than it could or did receive from Respondent, and each of said customers knew of such existing and current opportunities and offers from competitors of Respondent and had from such competitors specific offers equally as low or lower in price, and equally or more favorable in terms and the furnishing of services and facilities than it had from Respondent; that Respondent knew of the existence of such competitive offers to said customers from various sources and was advised of them by said customers and advised that Respondent must meet or approach meeting such offers to retain said customers; that had dent's refusal, at the risk of losing a customer, to grant its tank car price unless the customer assumed the entire jobber function supported the separate statutory defense of cost justification.[64] The same circumstances indicated the preservation of the additional defense of functional customer classification, in the event that this justification, implicit in the original Clayton Act, had survived the Robinson-Patman amendments.[65] These averments supplied the basis for separate motions to dismiss (R. 845-46), and were throughout treated by the Examiner as "Alternative Affirmative Defenses". They were concisely summarized as such in his Report (R. 5050).

Far from vitiating its meeting competition defense, these alternate averments of legal justification confirm respondent's conservative exercise of its right to meet a competitor's lower price offer in good faith. It met competition only in circumstances where it also had the foundation for not Respondent at such time given to each of said customers the tank car basis and price for purchasing gasoline, each of said customers would have been lost by Respondent to a competitive supplier" (R. 19).

---

[64] Evidence by respondent's distributors confirmed that the 1½¢ per gallon differential approximately corresponded to their costs of performing the jobber function (R. 1771, 5154). Additional aspects of the jobber function included the responsibility on the part of a tank car customer for aiding his retail outlets with advertising, service station equipment such as pumps, tanks and insignia, as well as repairs and maintenance including the painting of buildings and paving of driveways (R. 1772, 1895-97).

[65] This customer classification, providing for lower prices to jobbers, rewarded them for assuming costly marketing functions—irrespective of whether they resold at wholesale or retail—which otherwise would have to be performed by the supplier (R. 951, 1013-16, 1031).

E. g., Chicago Sugar Co. v. American Sugar Refining Co., 176 F. 2d 1, 10 (7th Cir. 1949); Legis., 50 Harv. L. Rev. 106, 112-13 (1936); Van Cise, How to Quote Functional Prices, in CCH Antitrust Law Symposium, pp. 80, 84 (1957); Note, Robinson-Patman Curtailments On Distribution Innovation: A Status Sought for Functional Discounts, 66 Yale L. J. 243, 249 (1956), discussing the recent Commission precedents.

a claim of cost justification and, in addition, could assert the defense of functional customer classification if legally available. In this connection, the Examiner expressly commended respondent's jobber classification as "bona fide in all respects" (R. 5098-99). Surely no confession of a sinister system inheres in respondent's individual preference for losing customers rather than granting a tank car price to accounts not performing the additional bulk storage and delivery function.

In effect, Commission counsel urge the paradox that a conservative exercise of the statutory right to meet competition forfeits that defense. If respondent had met competitive offers indiscriminately—by granting tank car prices to customers buying merely in tank wagon lots, for example—counsel's objections would not apply. Under counsel's theory, therefore, a less moderate exercise of the meeting competition defense, entailing price concession unrelated to cost savings and functional customer distinctions, would be more likely to satisfy the law.

This Court's prior opinion in this case recognized that a seller in meeting competition may have to cope with functional pricing. The Court described the "distinctive characteristics" of jobbers, and noted the "established industry practice of recognizing such dealers as a distinctive group for operational convenience" (R. 5309). It quoted in detail from the Examiner's findings of respondent's "forced recognition" of Ned's as a jobber (R. 5311), interpolated that this "carried with it the tank-car price for gasoline" (R. 5311), and referred precisely to these findings as sufficient to sustain respondent's defense (R. 5315). Indeed, the opinion referred to the term "jobber" as merely one of "convenience and identification, because the result here is the same whether these four dealers are wholesalers or retailers" (R. 5309).

C. Respondent's Lower Prices, Granted in Sporadic Instances to Hold Its Own Customers, Could Hardly Be Relied on by Competitors to Defend Their Price Discriminations.

Counsel's assumption (Br., pp. 51-52) that approval of respondent's defense would "protect" the "same discriminatory price policies" when followed by competing sellers ignores the basis of the holding at bar.

Counsel argue that "under the decision below, the Commission's complaint against Standard must fall because of the availability of an 'equally low price' from Gulf, Texas, or Shell. Similarly, Gulf, Texas, and Shell can presumably defend the validity of their dual price formula because of the availability of Standard's 'equally low price' (the tank-car price involved in this proceeding)" (Br., p. 51).

But there is no occasion for counsel's professed concern that validation of respondent's defense would legitimize the discriminations of competitors who could claim to be meeting respondent's prices.[66] Rather than concerning itself with the mere "availability" of lower prices from Gulf, Texas, or Shell, the decision below expressly rested on evidence showing that "at different times" respondent "reduced its price to meet competitive offers in order to retain a customer" (R. 5501). But this record contains not a single instance where respondent bid for a competitor's account with discriminatory price offers. Because on the instant record, therefore, no rival supplier could show that its discriminatory prices were necessitated by any competitive offers on respondent's part, it could afford no competitor an opportunity to justify his price differential as meeting respondent's offers.[67]

---

[66] There is even less warrant for counsel's extravagant statement that "deeply entrenched" price discriminations in entire industries can gain immunity by what the "decision below apparently holds" (Br., pp. 51, 52).

D. The Geographic Pricing Cases, Condemning Industry-Wide Systematic Discriminations, Are Not in Point.

The decisions which invalidated geographic pricing systems, cited as dispositive by the Commission's brief (pp. 26-34), cannot support counsel's argument. The Statement of Commission Policy Toward Geographic Pricing Practices nine years ago called attention to the economic and legal "peculiarities of the problems of geographic price differences," disclaimed any reliance "upon analogy to concepts elsewhere" in price discrimination cases, and concisely differentiated counsel's key precedents from the issues at bar. Significantly, the Commission's lengthy Statement did not include the instant proceeding in its case-by-case survey of the legal problems raised by such pricing systems. On the contrary, a footnote citation distinguished this case in describing the Commission's then pending efforts to obtain a judicial ruling as to whether a price discrimination creating the statutory "injury" was "nevertheless lawful if it arose by meeting competition in good faith."[68]

---

[67] Accordingly, the court below properly refused to speculate as to the effect of its ruling on other cases, and remarked that "it will be time enough to cross that bridge when it is reached" (R. 5502).

[68] 1 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. 5341, 5346 n., 5350 (1948). The principal cases cited by counsel, Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 (1945); Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 (1948); Federal Trade Commission v. National Lead Co., 352 U. S. 419 (1957), were explained by the Commission in 1948 as follows:

> (1) In Staley, "the seller was not only systematically absorbing freight in certain localities but also matching prices with others in all localities, charging phantom freight in certain localities, and displaying obvious indifference to the question whether or not competition was actually encountered at

In sharp contrast to the intense competition that resulted in reduced individual prices in the Detroit gasoline market in the 1930s, this Court's Staley, Cement Institute, and National Lead decisions concerned industry-wide discriminatory plans conceived in collusion to stabilize an entire price structure. A far cry from respondent's price reductions in four isolated instances over the years to retain choice customers against price raids of aggressive competitors, those cases dealt with the maintenance of industry freight formulas which insured price uniformity among all sellers and minimized competitive solicitations on account of price. None of those industry pricing systems did, or could conceivably, contemplate a single seller's defensive efforts to retain individual customers against competitors' price attacks.[69] particular points where it was supposedly met." 1 CCH Trade Reg. Rep. at 5351.

---

(2) In Cement Institute, "the proof was that discrimination had been inherent in the collusive abandonment of competition," so that it was "consequently impossible to show that this same discrimination consisted merely in meeting competition." Ibid.

(3) In National Lead, "the heart of the complaint is a charge that the respondents participated in a broad price fixing conspiracy" and "the charge of price discrimination was based upon conspiracy by the defendants to establish price differentials between zones and to maintain uniform delivered prices within each zone." Id. at 5347-48.

From its analysis, the Commission concluded that "it appears improbable that the defense of meeting competition can be successfully offered in cases involving systematic matching of delivered price quotations through single or multiple basing point systems or the more complicated types of zone price systems." On the other hand, the Commission declared—years prior to this Court's 1951 decision in the instant case—that the "courts appear to have assumed, though the point has not been squarely decided, that a single seller has a substantive right in good faith to meet the equally low price of a competitor in individual transactions." Ibid.

Needless to add, conspiratorial or collusive practices were never alleged by the Commission, let alone found, in the case at bar.

In Staley, the respondent sought to justify under Section 2(b) by claiming that its adoption of the Chicago-plus pricing system pioneered by the Corn Products Refining Company constituted good faith meeting of a competitor's equally low price. But Staley had not lowered any prices to its nearby customers even when it enjoyed freight advantages over its rivals. As this Court observed, "Instead they maintained their own prices at the level of their competitors' high prices, based upon the competitors' higher costs of delivery, by including phantom freight in their own delivered prices." 324 U. S. at 753 (1945).

The Court rejected the Staley defense because it did not show "the establishment of a 'lower price'" in response to an "individual competitive situation," but rather amounted to a wholesale adoption of an industry-wide uniform pricing system designed for "establishing an artificially high price" throughout the industry. Id. at 756.[70]

This interpretation of Section 2(b) was reaffirmed by the Cement Institute decision which condemned an industry-wide basing point system. 333 U. S. 683, 713 (1948). "A handy instrument to bring about elimination of any kind of price competition," it resulted in cement being sold "in every given locality at identical prices and terms by all [69] Both Cement Institute and National Lead found price-fixing conspiracies in alternative counts. 333 U. S. at 713, 352 U. S. at 422. In Staley and its companion Corn Products proceeding, the Commission later issued orders based on uncontested charges of price-fixing conspiracy through concerted employment of the same delivered pricing system. Corn Products Refining Co., et al., 47 F. T. C. 587 (1950).

---

[70] The Federal Trade Commission's General Counsel restated the holding of Staley thus: "In condemning a system which attached 'phantom freight' to certain sales, the Court held, positing the defense's availability in certain instances where prices were lowered, that it could not prevail in situations where prices had been raised." (Emphasis in original.) Kintner, The Revitalized Federal Trade Commission: A Two-Year Evaluation, 30 N. Y. U. L. Rev. 1143, 1165-66 (1955).

producers." Ibid.[71] The Court reaffirmed that Section 2(b) is concerned with "the seller's 'lower' price" and "places emphasis on individual competitive situations, rather than upon a general system of competition." Id. at 725. Hence it could not sanction "the employment of the multiple basing point system by the respondents as a practice rather than as a good faith effort to meet 'individual competitive situations.'" Ibid.

In National Lead the industry had adopted a zone pricing system providing for identical zones and uniform variations from the base price of lead pigments. The "highly artificial" zone boundaries sometimes led to "bizarre results" when purchasers nearer a plant paid high prices than more remote customers. 352 U. S. 419, 422, 424 (1957).[72] This Court sustained the Commission's order, drafted to thwart resumption of the old "pattern of collusion," which also prohibited all zone price quotations by an individual seller "systematically matching" all the delivered prices of rivals. Id. at 423, 425. This limited ban on "(1) identical prices with competitors (2) resulting from zone delivered pricing" was held to preserve for each seller all rights under the meeting competition proviso, since Section 2(b) was "designed to protect competitors in individual transactions" but did not justify "the use of an entire pricing system." Id. at 426, 431.

---

[71] According to the Court, "thousands of secret sealed bids have been received by public agencies which corresponded in prices of cement down to a fractional part of a penny." Ibid. Contrast this with the range of offers by competitors to respondent's customers.

[72] The contrary is the case where, as here, the lower prices take account of the customer's performance of costly distributive functions. See, e. g., Adelman, Integration and the Antitrust Laws, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27, 63 (1949): "Standard was selling its retailer customers gasoline plus storage plus delivery. It was selling the jobbers gasoline net of these services. Unless it charged these two classes of buyers different prices, it would be discriminating against the jobbers." A practice whereby suppliers sought to avoid reflecting in their prices the economies of functional "integration" was an important element in the restraints of trade condemned in Sugar Institute v. United States, 297 U. S. 553, 588-89, 594-95 (1936).

Indeed, the Court has already distinguished the Geographic Pricing decisions. In comparing its earlier holdings in Staley and the companion Corn Products case, the Court's previous opinion in this case noted the "contrast to that factual situation" presented by this record (R. 5315). The Staley holding was considered not to alter "the assumption, applicable here, that if a competitor's 'lower price' is a lawful individual price offered to any of the seller's customers then the seller is protected, under § 2(b), in making a counteroffer provided the seller proves that its counteroffer is made to meet in good faith its competitor's equally low price" (R. 5315). And the Court compared the rejection of the Section 2(b) defense in those cases owing to "insufficiency of the seller's evidence" with the fact that "the Trial Examiner for the Commission in the instant case has found the necessary facts to sustain the seller's defense." Ibid.

IV.

THE COMMISSION'S FAILURE TO CHALLENGE THE LAWFULNESS OF THE COMPETITIVE OFFERS CONFIRMS THEIR LEGALITY.

Despite the opportunity afforded by this Court's remand in 1951, the Commission majority's post-remand findings, both as proposed in 1952 and as promulgated in 1953, did not question the legality of the offers met by respondent (R. 5336, 5354, 5364-90). The decision below stated that "in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which [respondent] met were lawful" (R. 5501). Furthermore, the Commission's brief concedes that respondent need not prove the lawfulness of its competitors' prices.[73] Notwithstanding this concession and in the face of the Commission's deliberate failure to make such a finding, counsel gratuitously insinuate illegality (Br. 36).[74]

The legality of the competitive offers met by respondent was before this Court on the prior review. The Court's opinion observed that respondent "presented evidence tending to prove that its tank car price was made to each 'jobber' in order to retain that 'jobber' as a customer and in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor" (R. 5311), and referred to the failure "to make findings of fact where evidence is offered that the prices met by the seller are lawful prices and that the meeting of them is in good faith" (R. 5319 n.). Finally, in distinguishing Staley, the Court referred to "the assumption, applicable here, that if a competitor's 'lower price' is a lawful individual price offered to any of the seller's customers," the meeting of such a price in good faith was protected by Section 2(b) (R. 5315).[75]

---

[73] That concession accords with Standard Oil Co. v. Brown, 238 F. 2d 54 (5th Cir. 1956), and the Commission's own Initia Decisions in C. E. Niehoff & Co., Dkt. 5768, and E. Edelmann & Co., Dkt. 5770, affirmed in C. E. Niehoff & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 241 F. 2d 37 (7th Cir. 1957) and E. Edelmann & Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 239 F. 2d 152 (7th Cir. 1956)

[74] In connection with the lawfulness question, the Commission's brief asserts that the Commission does "not have the burden of proving the unlawfulness" of the prices met, but urges that the identical "pricing policies" of respondent's competitors "suffer from the same infirmities" as respondent's prices (p. 36). See also Reply Br. in Support of Pet., p. 4 n. 1.

[75] One Justice remarked in the oral argument as to the riva offers met by respondent that "if it is not shown that they were illegal, you can assume that they were legal." Transcript of Ora Argument, October 9, 1950, p. 74.

Cf. also the immediately preceding colloquy between Mr. Justice Burton and FTC counsel:

> "Mr. Justice Burton: In this case we are assuming these competitive offers from the other companies are legal offers

In oral argument, Commission counsel had conceded that equally low prices were available to respondent's four customers from "at least five major companies," but had alluded to pending proceedings against three of those rivals. (Transcript, pp. 71-78). The Court at the close of the argument requested a special memorandum regarding those cases (Id. at 137-38). As filed by the Commission on October 13, 1950, this document cited the pendency of price discrimination complaints against Gulf, Texas, and Shell—three of the numerous Detroit competitors which had bid for respondent's four jobber customers (pp. 32-38, supra). Perhaps in cognizance of those cases, the Court's opinion directed that "There Should Be a Finding as to Whether or Not Petitioner's Price Reduction Was Made in Good Faith to Meet a Lawful Equally Low Price of a Competitor" (R. 5311).

Upon the remand and on the same record, the Commission majority took the initiative in issuing findings invalidating respondent's meeting competition defense on other grounds, without mention of the "lawfulness" issue (R. 5336).[76] This was done despite respondent's prompt request for a finding that its price reductions were made in

---

is that not true? It has not been raised anywhere in the oral arguments or briefs that they are unlawful offers, as I understand it. * * *

"No point is being made against Standard in this case that they were not lawful offers that they could not meet under the statute.

* * * * *

"Is the Commission objecting to Standard's conduct on the ground that it was trying to meet an illegal offer?

"Mr. Cassedy: No, sir. It is not basing it upon that ground."

Id. at 72-73. A similar colloquy between Mr. Justice Frankfurter and Commission counsel ensued, id. at 77-78.

[76] The Commission ignored staff counsel's contention that respondent must affirmatively demonstrate the lawfulness of its competitors' prices. (Brief of Counsel Supporting the Complaint, pp. 10-11).

good faith to meet a competitor's lawful equally low pric “as called for by the mandate of the Supreme Court” (R. 5354).[77] On the other hand, the author of the minority opinion, expressing the views of two Commissioners, felt “satisfied that there is nothing in the 8,000 pages of evidence in this record which might cause me to suspect that respondent knew, or that it had reason to believe, that th competitor's lower price which it was meeting was or might have been unlawful” (R. 5399, 5420). Accordingly, the minority Commissioners proposed a finding that “The respondent's price reduction was made in good faith to mee a lawful equally low price of a competitor” (R. 5421).

The deliberate failure of the Commission majority to impeach the legality of the competitive offers surely preclude any further challenge here. This is especially so sinc the three proceedings placed before the Court by the Commission's Memorandum on October 13, 1950, were dismisse by the Commission on April 3, 1957, on motion of its staf in 1955.[78]

Furthermore, this Court's recent Automatic Cantee opinion declared that “antitrust policy and the ordinar requirements of fairness” dictate that no businessma should be charged with knowledge that price differentials without more, are illegal.[79] The rationale of Automati

---

[77] The Commission declined to grant respondent's request fo a hearing until after it issued its proposed findings which it late promulgated (R. 5336, 5341-44, 5359).

[78] The three dismissed complaints in no event can supply retrospective inferences of illegality concerning the prices met in th 1930s by respondent as to these three, let alone the offers from th numerous other competitors. Moreover, recent Commission Initia Decisions held that no presumption of illegality as to a respondent or his competitors' prices could arise from the mere subsequen filing of a Commission complaint. E. Edelmann & Co., Dkt. 577 (May 10, 1955), C. E. Niehoff & Co., Dkt. 5768 (May 17, 1955).

[79] Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 34 U. S. 61, 81 (1953). The Court did “not think that price differen tials, even as a matter of uncritical impression, come so often withi

Canteen,[80] requiring the Commission to go forward with any evidence as to unlawfulness, is a fortiori applicable here.[81] Thus, even though a respondent may have the burden of proof to establish every statutory element of the Section 2(b) defense, the legality of the prices met is assumed at least until the Commission comes forward with some record evidence indicating otherwise. Cf. International Shoe Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 280 U. S. 291, 302 (1930).

Here the Commission has declined even to notice the issue, notwithstanding this Court's remand. Consequently, the legality of the competitive offers must now be deemed confirmed, once and for all. Cf. Federal Trade Commission v. Curtis Pub. Co., 260 U. S. 568, 580 (1923).

Even so, respondent was always prepared to show that the record amply supported its requested findings of lawfulness of the relevant offers. In the case of most, the Commission itself would not regard them as subject to the Robinson-Patman Act. The products of Phillips (Phillips 66), Standard of Ohio (Fleet Wing), Pure Oil Co. (Hi-Speed) and Ohio Oil Company (Linco, Marathon) were offered by local Michigan distributors.[82] National Refining Co. offered gasoline at a single uniform price in Detroit (R. 1949-50). And Aurora, which aggressively solicited rethe prohibited range of price discriminations" as to warrant such knowledge on a businessman's part. Id. at 71.

---

[80] That case concerned the buyer's knowledge as to the legality of his own supplier's prices.

[81] For a seller in meeting his competitors' prices in good faith ordinarily cannot foretell their ultimate legality, which may depend on a host of factors and years of litigation, and should not be forced by the Commission into price and cost discussions with his competitors. Such collaboration, the Court observed, might "offend other antitrust policies." Id. at 69.

[82] The Commission has consistently taken the position that distributors who resell within a state gasoline purchased from an out-of-state refinery are not subject to the Robinson-Patman Act. See S. Rep. 2817, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 21-22 (1956).

spondent's customers, was a local refiner selling wi the state products made from Michigan crude oil (R. 1 52, 1354-56, 3058-59).[83]

V.

THE COMMISSION'S "COST JUSTIFICATION" AND "C PETITIVE INJURY" GROUNDS FOR VITIATING MEETING COMPETITION DEFENSE ARE LEGA UNTENABLE.

Besides properly setting aside the factually unsuppo contention that respondent's prices were granted purs to a "system," the Court of Appeals correctly disappr the Commission's additional legal grounds for reje respondent's meeting competition defense.[84]

A. Cost Justification Cannot Affect the Alternati Meeting Competition Defense.

The Court of Appeals held "irrelevant" to the me competition defense the Commission's finding that res ent "knew or should have known" that the lower pri the four customers "could not be justified on the ba differences in the cost of manufacture, sale and deli (R. 5499).

In judging the legal sufficiency of respondent's me competition defense, cost considerations are entirely the legal point. The court below correctly observed cost justification and meeting competition are

---

[83] In 1940 alone, Aurora sold between 40 and 50 milli lons in the area. Its product, represented as of a higher rating than respondent's gasoline, was considered seriously spondent's customers (R. 1147-52, 1308, 2013).

[84] These prime elements in the Commission majority's d are now minimized as "ancillary" and "subsidiary" by (Reply Br. in Supp. of Pet., p. 8 n. 7; Br., p. 56), notwithst one majority Commissioner's subsequent characterization injury finding as the key factor in the post-remand ruling. S 18 supra.

independent statutory defenses under Section 2 of the Act. The fallacy underlying the Commission's doctrine was exposed by one of the Justices during oral argument on this Court's previous review:

> "What good is it if they must justify the cost? Why waste time on the good faith?
>
> "If good faith is not enough, if it requires cost, then what purpose does this section have in the statute?"[85]

On the other hand, if the Commission were correct in asserting that cost justification has some bearing on the "good faith" of a seller in meeting competition, respondent's good faith would be confirmed by its policy of refusing to give its tank car price, even when necessary to meet a competitor's lower offer to an established account, unless the customer assumed certain costly distributive functions. For, as this Court's opinion also observed (R. 5309), obvious cost economies accrued to respondent in serving tank car customers. The only question concerned the precise amount of the saving.[86]

This proceeding began as a "pioneer case" in cost justification under the Act (R. 5068, 5081). Respondent's extensive cost studies, whose good faith was conceded, were rejected by the Commission on unforeseeable and complex grounds (R. 5171-78, 5374-82, 3771-72).[87] In view of the shifting content of costs in competitive pricing and the elusive nature of a statutory cost justification, as recently acknowledged by this Court,[88] respondent surely could not be charged from the outset with knowledge that the Commission's accountants might later disagree with its estimated cost savings.

---

[85] Transcript of Oral Argument, October 9, 1950, p. 112.

[86] Independent studies established that the typical distribution cost between wholesaler and retailer is between 1½¢ and 2¢ per gallon. 2 Bain, The Pacific Coast Petroleum Industry, pp. 222-27 (1945), cited in Adelman: Integration and Antitrust Policy, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27, 64 (1949).

[87] "The development of satisfactory bases of allocation has been the most difficult problem in analyzing distribution costs." Note, Proof of Cost Differentials Under the Robinson-Patman Act, 65 Harv. L. Rev. 1011, 1014 (1952).

B. The Meeting Competition Defense Is Unaffected by Findings of Competitive Injury.

Likewise, the Court of Appeals correctly held respondent's meeting competition defense unaffected by the Commission's finding that respondent "knew or had the means of knowing and should have known that the manner in which it priced and sold its gasoline continually created the probability of injury to competition between retail dealers who bought such gasoline at different prices and resold it in competition with one another" (R. 5498-99).

The Court of Appeals accurately perceived that this was "the same theory upon which the Commission's previous order was bottomed and which was expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court" (R. 5499). This Court previously reversed the Commission's contention that a finding of competitive "injury" made the defense "not material" and procedurally "unavailable" (R. 5179, 5182). For unless the Commission itself first proves competitive "injury," a Robinson-Patman Act proceeding must be dismissed for want of a prima facie case.[89] Thus, if competitive "injury" defeats the meeting competition defense, that proviso is wholly useless: Without competitive "injury" there would be no violation anyway—regardless of the defense; and with such "injury," the defense would fail.

---

[88] This Court commented on "the intricacies inherent in the attempt to show costs in a Robinson-Patman Act proceeding," and concluded that "Proof of a cost justification being what it is, to often no one can ascertain whether a price is cost justified." Auto matic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61, 6 79 (1953).

The then Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission has als observed: "Cost accounting is by no means an exact scienc Methods of allocation and proration of distribution costs are i the evolutionary stage. * * * In none of the cases * * * has th Commission established adequate guiding principles or precedent for cost analysis * * * [T]here are no rules of the game." Sy vania Electric Products, Inc., FTC Dkt. 5728, pp. 5, 6 (Oct. 2 1954).

In now impugning a meeting competition defense on the merits by reason of competitive "injury",[90] the Commission would—by a purely verbal change—resurrect the prior interpretation which this Court rejected as making Section 2(b) of "such little, if any, applicability as to be practically meaningless."[91]

C. No Genuine Competitive Injury Appears in This Case.

Finally, this case does not factually disclose any competitive "injury" cognizable under the Robinson-Patman Act.[92] Proof of the meeting of competitors' equally low prices to retain a customer rebuts any "injury" attributable prima facie to the respondent seller's differential, for it demonstrates that the same low prices were first offered to the same customers by other suppliers. In that event, the respondent's defensive counter-move cannot be held to cause any "injury" within the contemplation of the law.

---

[89] E.g., General Foods Corp., FTC Dkt. 5675 (April 27, 1954).

[90] Although playing down the importance of this aspect of the majority findings against respondent, the Commission's brief stresses the knowledge respondent should have had as to the injury created by its prices (p. 57). But if actual injury findings are immaterial, as held by this Court in 1951, imputed knowledge as to this same injury could have no greater bearing on the meeting competition defense. The Staley decision, as quoted by this Court, expressly recognized the availability of that defense to a seller "who has knowingly discriminated in price." 324 U. S. at 759; R. 5317. In any event, since respondent never granted a lower price unless it knew that the same or still lower prices were at all times available to the customer, it could surely not be charged with knowingly causing competitive injury when the customer was bound to get equally low prices, anyway.

[91] (R. 5320.) "Hence, by a narrow interpretation of 'good faith,' the Commission succeeded in obtaining the same result which had been sought in its 'procedural' arguments before the Supreme Court." Comment, The Meeting Competition Defense Under Section 2(b), 49 Northwestern L. Rev. 261, 263, n. 11 (1954).

[92] Since the meeting competition defense concerns the rebuttal of a prima facie case of injurious discrimination, the injury issue is not closed until that defense is finally adjudicated.

Since on this record respondent's four customers could at any time have accepted lawful competitive offers at prices as low or lower than respondent's tank car price, the competitive situation on the dealer level would be the same—whether or not respondent met its competitors' prices. Disabling respondent from granting its tank car price would have merely shifted the customer's business over to another of the many Detroit suppliers.[93]

Judge Hansen, Chief of the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department, recently stated in testimony before Congress concerning the issues of the instant case: "The injury wasn't done by the lowering of the seller in good faith, the injury was done by the competitor that came in and offered to sell to his customer at a lesser price."[94]

---

[93] See pp. 32-38, 55 supra; and R. 5104, 344-45, 371-74, 947, 971, 1018-19, 1062-63, 1086, 1092, 1093, 1118, 1127, 2097. According to the Commission's own chief witness, therefore, "it would not in any way cure or help to cure this competitive situation" if respondent's customers would simply transfer to other suppliers (R. 345).

This Court appropriately observed that "it must have been obvious to Congress that any price reductions initiated by a seller's competitor would, if not met by the seller, affect competition at the beneficiary's level or among the beneficiary's customers just as much as if those reductions had been met by the seller" (R. 5320).

[94] Judge Hansen summarized the situation in this case as follows: "We have four dealers that are all paying an equal price from one seller. The competitor comes in and goes to one of them and says, 'I will sell it for two cents less.' The damage certainly is done to the other three by virtue of their competitor getting it for two cents less, the damage is not by the original seller coming back and saying, 'I will sell it to you for the same amount that my

Furthermore, respondent's reductions to its four customers were minimized to the extent these were required to perform their own bulk storage and transportation.[95] No customer receiving the 1½¢ per gallon lower tank car price ever received a net price concession in that amount. While the record does not clearly show the precise benefit remaining for the customer after his expenditures for jobber facilities and equipment, that amount was obviously quite small. Accordingly, an impartial study of this case concluded that "any cutting of price with its consequent effect upon competition would be 'caused' not by the discount received but by the integrated retailer's willingness to operate at a lower profit margin."[96] competitor has offered it to you for.' So the seller acting in good faith wouldn't be the one causing the damage, the damage would be caused by the other competitor." Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 85th Cong., 1st Sess. 843 (March 1957).

---

[95] This factor differs from the statutory cost justification defense which relates only to seller's own costs that need not coincide with the costs incurred by a customer in performing a distributive function. See Note, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294, 303-4 (1953); and notes 64 and 86 supra.

Thus, a detailed analysis of Citrin's operations revealed an average resale cost of 1.48¢ per gallon in the years 1937-1940, ranging from 1.3¢ in 1937 to 1.53¢ in 1940 (R. 1771). Comparable costs for Wayne averaged 1.43¢ per gallon between 1938-1940, but this evidence was stricken (R. 5154, 1234-39). Ned's resale costs were doubtless smaller, since its overhead was spread over a general merchandising business covering tires, small and major household and electrical appliances, sporting goods, radios and hardware, which were sold in conjunction with gasoline at its six retail outlets (R. 5109-10, 1799).

The contrary assertions by the Examiner (R. 5123) are obviously incorrect (R. 5147, 1771, 228).

[96] Note, Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act: The Standard Oil Litigation. 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294, 303 (1953). According to this study, "The dealers who received a discount from Standard Oil were 'integrated retailers' in that they performed wholesaling functions for themselves, such as receiving delivery in large quantities, maintaining storage facilities, and delivering to the retail stations. If the discount received by

VI.

THIS COURT SHOULD ACCEPT THE CONCLUSION BELOW THAT RESPONDENT'S DEFENSE WAS "FIRMLY ESTABLISHED" BY THE RECORD.

A. Universal Camera Sustains the Reversal of the Divided Commission, in Light of the Examiner's Findings Confirmed by the Dissenting Commissioners' Independent Appraisal.

The court below in setting aside the Commission's key "system" contention as unsupported by the evidence acted entirely within the bounds of this Court's Universal Camera decision,[97] and its review of the record should not be duplicated here.

According to Universal Camera, the Administrative Procedure Act's directive that agency findings be supported the integrated retailers is no greater than his additional costs on the wholesaling operations, it seems clear that the discount would have no effect on competition among retailers." Ibid.

---

Actually, the sole proof as to adverse competitive effects on this record consists of complaints about gallonage losses by a handful of Detroit service stations. The only two recipients of respondent's lower prices charged with price cutting in many instances did no more than meet the cut prices of other stations amid a general price war and "demoralized retail situation" (R. 5112, 5116, 1783-91, 1843-59). Even then the sole injury to respondent's dealers found by the Examiner related to their "being forced to meet the cut-rate prices which resulted in increasing their volume but not their profits" (R. 5114). At the same time, the record reveals concerted efforts of dealers, under the aegis of the local gasoline retailers association, to agree upon retail prices (R. 461, 593, 597, 1784, 1870, 1877-78, 1905, 2125). Although the extent is not clear from the record, these attempts to fix artificial prices obviously caused a loss of business on the part of these dealers (Cf. R. 461-62).

[97] The court below had some doubts as to its power to set aside the administrative findings, due to its understanding of this Court's Staley decision (R. 5496). But under the broader review standards established subsequent to Staley by the Administrative Procedure Act, as explained by this Court's historic Universal Camera decision, the court's reversal of the Commission action was obviously correct.

by "substantial evidence" requires that "substantiality be determined in the light of all that the record relevantly presents." 340 U. S. 474, 488 (1951). And since Congress sought to "increase the importance of examiners in the administrative process," an agency ruling becomes less persuasive when a different result was reached by an "impartial, experienced examiner who has observed the witnesses and lived with the case." Id. at 495-96. Above all, "Reviewing courts must be influenced by a feeling that they are not to abdicate the conventional judicial function." Id. at 490.

The decision below properly reviewed the "record as a whole," including those parts detracting from the Commission majority's ruling. The court gave "the examiner's report such probative force as it intrinsically commands" (id. at 495) in confirming the evidence that respondent's prices were reduced to individual customers to retain their business and were "at all times" granted "to meet equally low prices offered by competitors on branded gasolines of comparable grade and quality", rather than pursuant to a pricing system (R. 5104).[98] The court also noted that two dissenting Commissioners sustained the Examiner's findings on the basis of an independent reappraisal of the evidence (R. 5496).[99]

---

[98] The Examiner's findings here at issue rested heavily on his appraisal of the oral testimony (R. 5052, 5094-95, 5100-4).

The Commission now belittles the Examiner's report as "only advisory" because filed in 1943 prior to the Administrative Procedure Act (Br., p. 24, n. 11). But the Commission's post-remand evaluation of this record in 1953, here at issue, is governed in all respects by the standards of the APA. Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498, 500 (1951).

[99] On judicial review of an agency's rulings, the "wide difference of opinion among the members may suggest doubts as to some basic findings of fact." Baltimore & O. R. R. Co. v. United States, 298 U. S. 349, 362 (1936); see also Labor Board v. Ohio Calcium Co., 133 F. 2d 721, 724 (6th Cir. 1943); Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 191 F. 2d 786, 789 (7th Cir. 1951).

Accordingly, the Court of Appeals in setting aside the Commission majority's ruling properly applied the guiding criteria established by this Court for the review of agency action.

B. This Court Will Not Supplant the Court of Appeals as the Initial Reviewer of Administrative Action.

The force of Universal Camera can hardly be escaped by counsel's effort to disregard the review below in favor of a direct review by this Court of the administrative findings.[100] The Commission's argument gives scant recognition to the unanimous decision of the Court of Appeals, and in effect urges this Court to weigh the Commission's actions against the evidence ab initio.

But this Court has consistently refused to bypass the intermediate reviewing court in order to undertake an initial review of findings by administrative bodies. "Congress has charged the Courts of Appeals, not this Court, with the normal and primary responsibility" for reviewing the actions of administrative agencies in the first instance. Labor Board v. American Insurance Co., 343 U. S. 395, 409-[100] In seeking review here, Commission counsel obscured the Universal Camera rule by labeling the system issue a "law" rather than a "fact" question (Reply Br. in Supp. of Pet., p. 5). The existence of a pricing "system" motivating respondent's prices is obviously a factual issue. The legal issue—whether such a "system," if extant, could be justified under the meeting competition proviso—is hypothetical unless there is a system. The court below concluded from the record that there was no system, and Commission counsel now disagree with that factual evaluation (Br., pp. 37 et seq.).

---

In this connection, the Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission has twice declared that "the seventh circuit court in the recent Standard Oil decision was passing on a purely factual matter and neither added to nor subtracted from the law laid down by the Supreme Court in 340 U. S. 231." Statement of the individual views of Chairman John W. Gwynne in Hearings before the Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly of the Senate Judiciary Committee on Bills to Amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 233 (1956); 85th Cong., 1st Sess. 634 (1957).

410 (1952).[101] When administrative findings are set aside by the reviewing court as unsupported, this Court will "do no more than decide" whether there was a "fair assessment" of the record. Labor Board v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498, 502-3 (1951). For "whether on the record as a whole there is substantial evidence to support agency findings is a question which Congress has placed in the keeping of the Courts of Appeals. This Court will intervene only in what ought to be the rare instance when the standard appears to have been misapprehended or grossly misapplied." Universal Camera Corp. v. Labor Board, 340 U. S. 474, 491 (1951).

Controlling here is this Court's unanimous affirmance of the Court of Appeals in Federal Trade Commission v. American Tobacco Co., 274 U. S. 543 (1927): "The statement of the petition for certiorari that the judgment and opinion below might seriously hinder future administration of the law was grave and sufficiently probable to justify issuance of the writ." However, after argument and scrutiny of the issues, the Court perceived that "Proper decision of the controversy depends upon a question of fact," as to which the Commission's finding in the affirmative was set aside as unsupported by the Court of Appeals. Id. at 544. Although this Court believed that "The opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals is of uncertain intendment and is not satisfactory as an exposition of the law,"[102] it unanimously affirmed the judgment by following "the usual rule of non-interference where conclusions of circuit courts of appeals depend on appreciation of circumstances which admit of different interpretations" Id. at 544.

---

[101] See also Federal Communications Commission v. Allentown Broadcasting Co., 349 U. S. 358, 365 (1955); Labor Board v. Electrical Workers, 346 U. S. 464, 478 (1953) (dissenting opinion).

[102] Counsel's quarrel with the opinion below at most concerns some ambiguous dicta suggesting that pricing "systems" when not intrinsically illegal may be justifiable under the meeting competition proviso (Br., pp. 33-36). Compare Lawlor v. National Screen Service Corp., 352 U. S. 992, 995 (1957) (dissenting opinion).

Adherence to this "usual rule of non-interference" is a fortiori indicated in the instant case, where the factual conclusions of the court below are corroborated by the persuasive findings of the Hearing Examiner and two minority Commissioners.[103]

CONCLUSION.

The basic issue confronting the Court today is the same as on the first review of this case seven years ago: Whether the Robinson-Patman Act preserves the fundamental freedom of sellers in a competitive economy to meet realistically the prices of their competitors. To ensure effective competition, sellers must react promptly to the price moves of their rivals, and cannot postpone pricing responses pending lengthy accounting and legal studies. Now as before, the unnatural restrictions on pricing flexibility advocated by the Commission foster the very price rigidity that the antitrust laws proscribe. Yet, as this Court's prior opinion in this case declared, "Congress did not seek by the Robinson-Patman Act either to abolish competition or so radically to curtail it that a seller would have no substantial right of self-defense against a price raid by a competitor" (R. 5319).

"Even if the Commission has, by virtue of the Robinson-Patman Act, been given some authority to develop policies in conflict with those of the Sherman Act in order to meet the special problems created by price discrimination," this Court recognized its overriding "duty to reconcile such interpretation * * * with the broader antitrust policies that have been laid down by Congress." Automatic Canteen Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 346 U. S. 61, 74 (1953).

---

[103] That principle was recently reiterated in Labor Board* v. Pittsburgh S. S. Co., 340 U. S. 498, 503 (1951) where the Court unanimously affirmed a Court of Appeals decision which, as here, had set aside an agency ruling upon remand from this Court's reversal of an earlier erroneous legal interpretation. The opinion declared that this Court was "not the place to review a conflict of evidence nor to reverse a Court of Appeals because were we in its place we would find the record tilting one way rather than the other, though fair-minded judges could find it tilting either way." See also Labor Board v. *American Insurance Co., 343 U. S. 395, 41 (1952).

Respondent respectfully requests that the judgment of the Court of Appeals be affirmed.

Respectfully submitted,

WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND,
HOWARD ELLIS,
HAMMOND E. CHAFFETZ,
W. H. VAN OOSTERHOUT,
FREDERICK M. ROWE,
of
KIRKLAND, FLEMING, GREEN, MARTIN & ELLIS,
Prudential Plaza,
Chicago 1, Illinois,
and
800 World Center Bldg.,
Washington 6, D. C.,
Attorneys for Respondent.

THOMAS E. SUNDERLAND,
910 S. Michigan Ave.,
Chicago 8, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

October 30, 1957.

APPENDIX A.

THE AVERMENTS IN RESPONDENT'S ANSWER RELATING TO ITS DEFENSE OF MEETING COMPETITORS' EQUALLY LOW PRICES IN GOOD FAITH (DEFENSE NO. IV). (R. 17-22)

26.

Respondent hereby realleges by reference all of the matter contained in Defense No. I, II, III, V and VI hereof.

27.

For further defense Respondent alleges that for many years last past, and since June 19, 1936, and presently, competition in all phases and branches and classifications of the gasoline marketing business in Detroit, has been, and ~~is~~ extremely keen, vigorous and aggressive; that many refiners, suppliers, wholesalers, jobbers and retailers of gasoline have been, and are, operating therein, and are constantly seeking new and additional outlets, markets and customers for their gasoline: that some of said marketers of gasoline continuously, and some periodically, attempt to invade, proselyte and raid the markets and customers had by other marketers; that competitive conditions and price conditions in relation to marketing of gasoline are and have been continuously chaotic, uncertain and disturbed in varying degrees for many years and are so now; that many devices, schemes, plans, concessions, premium offers, rebates, special deals, special discounts, inducements, preferential considerations, commercial bribery, special allowances, favorable contracts, preferential offers of services and facilities, and cut prices, are constantly being used and offered by a substantial number of marketers in all branches of gasoline marketing. Further, that the State of Michigan and City of Detroit are areas high in gasoline consumption and are well supplied with water, rail and pipeline transportation; that many water terminals for the handling of gasoline exist on the boundaries of the state and more particularly on the water boundaries of the lower peninsula thereof; that there exists a substantial amount of crude oil production within the state and there are numerous large and small refineries scattered through the lower peninsula thereof seeking outlets for their products; that immediately contiguous to the south of the state, and particularly in northern Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, there are many large and small refineries and crude oil and gasoline pipeline terminals which have ready and cheap means of transportation for gasoline into Michigan by means of water, rail and pipeline; that the State, and the cities within it,—particularly Detroit,—offer an attractive market to marketers of gasoline; that abundant supplies of gasoline are easily and readily available from many sources to supply that market; that all of these factors contribute to and stimulate the chaotic and disturbed competitive gasoline marketing conditions in all branches of said marketing in Detroit as referred to above.

28.

Respondent alleges that for many years last past it has operated a gasoline marketing business in Detroit under the conditions described in Paragraph 27 above; that since September, 1936 Respondent has not and does not engage in the operation of retail service stations; that Respondent's business in Detroit in gasoline marketing to resellers of gasoline is confined to (a) sales to retail resellers such as are described in Paragraph Two Complaint and who are supplied and serviced directly by Respondent through its own organization and distribution system in Detroit, and (b) to wholesale and jobber dealers such as those named in Paragraph Three Complaint; that presently, and for approximately three years last past, the four dealers named in Paragraph Three Complaint are the only wholesale or jobber customers in Detroit which Respondent has; that prior thereto Respondent had other such customers but lost them to competitive suppliers by reason of lower price offers and inducements given by Respondent's competitors, which Respondent could not meet or declined to meet.

29.

Respondent alleges that said four dealers named in Paragraph Three Complaint, or their predecessors, have been continuously, for many years last past, the gasoline customers of Respondent; that at the time each of said customers went onto a tank car basis of purchasing gasoline that it could purchase on such basis, comparable gasoline to that sold by Respondent, from a number of Respondent's competitive gasoline suppliers for an equally low or lower price than from Respondent, and upon equally or more advantageous terms and arrangements in the matter of facilities, services, inducements and benefits than it could or did receive from Respondent, and each of said customers knew of such existing and current opportunities and offers from competitors of Respondent and had from such competitors specific offers equally as low or lower in price, and equally or more favorable in terms and the furnishing of services and facilities than it had from Respondent; that Respondent knew of the existence of such competitive offers to said customers from various sources and was advised of them by said customers and advised that Respondent must meet or approach meeting such offers to retain said csutomers; that had not Respondent at such time given to each of said customers the tank car basis and price for purchasing gasoline, each of said customers would have been lost by Respondent to a competitive supplier.

30.

Respondent alleges that from the time each of said four customers began purchasing gasoline on a tank car basis and price there has never been a time, including the present, when each of said customers could not have purchased, and they could now purchase, comparable gasoline to that sold by Respondent at equally low or lower prices and on equally or more favorable arrangements and terms from competitors of Respondent than are granted to them from Respondent; that each of said customers have from time to time, since June 19, 1936, advised of and discussed with Respondent a number of such competitive offers; that in order to have retained, and to now retain, each of said customers it has been, and is now, necessary to continue it on said tank car basis and price, and that if such price or arrangement were made any less favorable to any of said customers by Respondent at the time such price and arrangement was made, or now, that Respondent would have then, or would now, immediately have lost, or would now lose, said customer to a competitive supplier; that Respondent is informed and verily believes, and on information and belief alleges, that in the face of more favorable offers from competitive dealers to said four customers frequently being made, that Respondent could not have heretofore, or could not now, retain said customers except for the existence of a long business association with them, established good will, and the public acceptance that Respondent and said customers have built for Respondent's gasoline.

31.

Respondent alleges that in respect of the reduction of the dealer tank wagon price by ½¢ per gallon of gasoline given to Ned's Auto Supply Company in September, 1936, which continued through February, 1938, that Respondent was forced to make said reduction in price by a specific offer or offers made to said customer in August, 1936, by a supplier of gasoline competing with Respondent; that said competitive offer was in connection with gasoline comparable to that supplied by Respondent and was offered to said customer at a price equally low or lower, and upon terms and arrangements with respect of facilities, services and benefits equally or more favorable to said customer, than were the said reduced price and arrangement that was offered by Respondent to meet such competitive offer; that Respondent was advised by said customer of said competitive offer and advised that said customer would accept it unless Respondent reduced its price; that Respondent agreed to make said reduction to partially meet said competitive offer and because of the compulsion of such competitive offer; that said customer advised Respondent that Respondent's reduced price was not fully competitive nor satisfactory, and did not fully meet said competitive offer, but that it would continue purchasing from Respondent thereunder for the time being; that had not Respondent made such reduction in price in said instance, fully as great as it did, Respondent would have at that time lost said customer and was so advised by it; that if Respondent had not continued said reduction in effect until early March, 1938, when said customer qualified to purchase in tank car lots and on a wholesaler basis, Respondent would have promptly lost said customer upon withdrawing the reduced price, and Respondent was constantly under pressure from said customer, induced by competitive offers to it, to make further reduction and to accord said customer more favorable purchasing arrangements, which matters were frequently discussed by said customer with Respondent; that as hereinbefore alleged said reduced price and basis has not been in effect or used since early March, 1938.

Further, that during the period said reduced price was in effect said customer took deliveries of gasoline in such relatively large quantities at such relatively few service stations compared to other retail resellers being serviced by Respondent, and such other facts and circumstances were existent, as to render such ½¢ per gallon of gasoline price reduction substantially commensurate with savings to Respondent arising from difference in the cost of sale and delivery of gasoline to said customer by Respondent resulting from the differing methods and quantities in which such gasoline was sold and delivered to said customer, and said ½¢ per gallon reduction in price to said customer made only due allowance for said savings accruing to Respondent as nearly as the same are fairly and reasonably calculable.

32.

Respondent alleges that at no time since June 19, 1936 has it offered or granted a preferential price below its established regular price, nor offered or granted concessions not regularly accorded all customers, to any of its customers, or classes of customers, except as the same was made necessary in order to meet an equally low or lower price offered by a competitor of Respondent, and Respondent has never made such preferential or reduced price offers to proselyte customers from other suppliers, and never have such preferential offers or any acts in relation thereto on Respondent's part, had the effect, or tended to have the effect, or were likely to have the effect, of substantially lessening competition in any line of commerce, nor did they tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce (specifically including gasoline commerce), nor did they injure, destroy or prevent competition, or tend to do so, with Respondent or any of its customers, or any of its customers' customers, or with any person or persons whomsoever, or at all, in Detroit or elsewhere.

33.

Respondent alleges that as particularly set forth above, that by reason of competitive compulsion and offers made by competitors of Respondent, which offers were for lower prices and more favorable sales arrangements than those being offered by Respondent, that Respondent, in good faith and because of necessity therefor to retain its customers, met, or partially met, the lower prices and more favorable terms and arrangements in respect of services, facilities and benefits offered by Respondent's competitors to the four dealers named in Paragraph Three Complaint, and Respondent alleges that all of the lower prices alleged to have been granted since June 19, 1936, and all that were granted, to said four dealers, were made to them in every instance in good faith to meet an equally low or lower price and equally or more favorable sales arrangements in respect of services, facilities or benefits made or furnished by a gasoline supplier or suppliers which were and are competitors of Respondent, all in strict accordance with law; and, hence, all of the acts of Respondent in respect of differentials in gasoline prices granted by Respondent, as between that class of dealers described in Paragraph Two Complaint and that class named in Paragraph Three Complaint were fully and completely justified, and do not constitute a violation of Section 2 (a) of the Clayton Act as amended, and are not unlawful thereunder or under any law.

APPENDIX B.

June 27, 1956.

Hon. James O. Eastland,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Eastland: It has recently come to our attention that Federal Trade Commissioners Sigurd Anderson and Robert T. Secrest have withdrawn their objections to the enactment of the proposed bill (S. 11) to amend the Robinson-Patman Act with reference to equality of opportunity and urged its support. In view of the fact that this action results in a majority of the Federal Trade Commissioners now favoring enactment of this proposed legislation and, in view of the fact that the companion House bill H. R. 1840 was passed by the House on June 11, it has been suggested that we reexamine our announced opposition to this legislation.

We understand that Commissioners Anderson and Secrest based their change of position on the recent seventh circuit court's opinion in the Standard Oil of Indiana case and the denial of certiorari by the Supreme Court in the Balian Ice Cream Co. case. We have carefully analyzed the decisions in these two cases and do not feel that these holdings indicate a need for the proposed legislation.

In the Standard Oil of Indiana case the seventh circuit court appeared to place great weight on the fact that Standard Oil had apparently proved in the original proceeding that its lower prices were made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor because of the fact that the findings of the Federal Trade Commission initial hearing examiner to this effect were never repudiated or disproved. The Court commented: "We think it is pertinent to observe that petitioner's good faith has either been recognized or assumed at all levels during this proceeding." The Court apparently was convinced that Standard Oil had proved that it was meeting a "lawful" lower price of a competitor, stating "in the instant situation there is no finding, no contention, and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful." Finally, the Court held that these price reductions, used as a defensive mechanism to retain the four existing customers, were based upon individual competitive situations rather than pursuant to a "pricing system" stating "[t]he bargaining and haggling which took place between petitioner and the four involved 'wholesalers' prior to a reduction in prices to them is hardly consistent with the Commission's theory that prices were reduced pursuant to a system."

In the Balian Ice Cream Co. case (Balian Ice Cream Company, Inc. v. Arden Farms Company), the Supreme Court of the United States denied certiorari and thus refused to review the ninth circuit court's opinion. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals had affirmed a judgment for the defendants in this action. The district court had made extensive findings of fact and had held that Arden Farms by its blanket price cut in the Los Angeles area had not discriminated in price upon a territorial basis in violation of section 2 (a) of the Robinson-Patman Act. The plaintiffs in this action were independent manufacturers and distributors of dairy products in the Los Angeles area. The ninth circuit affirmed the case on the basis that the requisite competitive injury for a section 2 (a) Robinson-Patman Act violation was not present stating "[t]here was no evidence that trade or commerce, interstate or otherwise, was lessened or burdened by any action of defendants in this case. The findings of the trial court expressly negativing the existence of any such consequences or a possibility of such results were supported by substantial evidence." The ninth circuit then proceeded to discuss, at some length, the permissive scope of section 2 (b). Some of this 2 (b) language is disputable in light of the Supreme Court's decision in the Standard Oil of Indiana case; it is our belief that this language should be treated as dictum and, for that reason, should not be considered as precedent for future 2 (b) proceedings.

It is our position that neither of the above cases furnishes sufficient basis for the Department to change its position of opposition to the so-called equality-of-opportunity legislation. They do not broaden the scope or adversely affect what we consider to be the merits of a section 2 (b) defense.

As pointed out in the Department's letter of March 6, 1956, "[w]hile we recognize the competitive problems which arise when one purchaser obtains advantages denied to other purchasers, we do not believe the solution of the problem lies in denying sellers the opportunity to make sales in good faith competition with other sellers." These pricing differences may, we emphasize, be justified under existing law only in response to individual competitive situations and may not be extended beyond what is necessary to meet good faith offers of competitors. A seller's right to meet a competitor's lawful prices by granting price differentials to some customers without reducing his prices to all seems consonant with our national antitrust policy and should remain an essential qualification to any anti-price-discrimination law. A seller constrained by law to reduce prices to some only at the cost of reducing prices to all may well end by reducing them to none.

This proposed legislation would appear to limit the 2 (b) defense to those instances in which the effect of the discrimination would be "to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefits of such discrimination or with customers of either of them." As stated in the Department's letter of March 6, 1956, this anticompetitive effect has so rarely appeared as a basis for either a complaint or a decision involving price discrimination that the result of enactment of this proposed legislation would be to render 2(b) practically meaningless.

In view of the foregoing considerations, the Department of Justice opposes the enactment of S. 11 or its companion bill H. R. 1840.

Sincerely,

WARREN OLNEY III,
Acting Deputy Attorney General.

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
NOV 26 1956
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1956 7

No. 74

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF IN BEHALF OF NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC., AND RETAIL GASOLINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF MICHIGAN, INC., AS AMICI CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

APPELL, AUSTIN & GAY,
30 Rockefeller Plaza,
New York 20, New York,
Attorneys for National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc.

CYRUS AUSTIN,
of Counsel.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1956

No. 465

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,

Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF IN BEHALF OF NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC., AND RETAIL GASOLINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF MICHIGAN, INC., AS AMICI CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc., respectfully move this Court for leave to file a brief, as amici curiae, in support of the petition for certiorari filed herein by the Solicitor General of the United States in behalf of the Federal Trade Commission. The Solicitor General has consented to the filing of such a brief; consent thereto has been requested but not received from Standard Oil Company.

Interest of Amici Curiae

National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. is a trade congress of State and local associations of retail gasoline dealers, national in scope, formed for the purpose of fostering and promoting the interests and welfare of the 275,000 petroleum retailers in the United States. Its membership is comprised of 67 state and local associations located in 34 states and the District of Columbia.

Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc., is a non-profit membership corporation serving the interests of the retail gasoline dealers of that State. It is a member of National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. The Association has more than 2600 members in the State of Michigan and more than 1500 members in the Detroit metropolitan area, where this case arose.

The retail gasoline dealers of Detroit and of the nation have a direct and vital interest in the outcome of this proceeding. This record shows that Standard Oil Company and other major oil companies have engaged in the practice of selling their branded gasolines to certain large volume purchasers, classified by them as "jobbers" but reselling in whole or in part at retail, at a price substantially lower than the price which they charge for the same gasolines to the many hundreds of smaller retail dealers whom they supply in the same marketing area. This discriminatory pricing practice is regularly engaged in by these oil companies not only in Detroit but in other areas in various parts of the United States. The Commission has found, and it is now undisputed, that this price discrimination has had and may have the effect of seriously injuring and destroying competition between the favored large volume purchasers and the other retailers who must compete with them in the resale of said gasolines. The purpose of the order issued by the Commission herein, which the Court below set aside, is to protect the retail gasoline dealers of Detroit and other areas served by petitioner from the injurious effects of such price discrimination. Said order, if affirmed by this Court, presumably will be respected and complied with not only by Standard Oil Company but by the other major oil companies. The dealers represented by these Associations, therefore, are directly concerned with the affirmance and enforcement of said order, and are, in fact, real parties in interest in this proceeding.

Questions Presented

This case presents two questions of great present importance. It is believed that the industry-wide significance of these questions, affecting the welfare and livelihood of retail gasoline dealers throughout the country, is not sufficiently emphasized in the petition for certiorari.

1. The first question may be variously stated as follows:

May a quantity price or discount, regularly granted to a few large volume purchasers by a major supplier of a commodity, and otherwise unlawfully discriminatory, be justified under the "good faith" proviso by showing that other major suppliers of such commodity regularly grant the same differential or discount to purchasers of like volume?

May adherence to a discriminatory pricing practice continuously employed by the dominant suppliers in an industry be justified under the "good faith" clause on the ground that it is an "industry practice" and that a particular supplier not adhering to it might lose customers?

Was it the intent of Congress, in inserting the "good faith" limitation in Section 2(b), to permit the constant allowance of unearned price differentials to large volume buyers by dominant suppliers or as an industry practice?

The above question is directly presented for disposition in this case, for the following reasons:

The assertion of the "meeting competition" defense in this case is an effort by the major oil companies, as represented by Standard Oil Company, to justify and obtain judicial sanction of a long used pricing practice whereby a quantity price differential based on annual volume is granted to a few large gasoline retailers in metropolitan areas, and to wholesalers reselling in part at retail, but is denied to the great number of smaller retail dealers who must compete in the resale of the same branded gasoline with the large volume purchasers.

The major oil companies who, like Standard, sell their gasoline at two prices in the same marketing area, quote these prices as a "tank car price" and a "tank wagon price." The lower or "tank car price" is offered only to those customers who are permitted to purchase in tank car quantities and who are classified by the oil companies as "jobbers." Actually, however, this lower price is neither a tank car price nor a functional price. It is not truly a tank car price since it is not available to any customer who wishes and is able to buy and take delivery in tank carloads. It is not a functional price because the large customers classified as jobbers are so classified without regard to whether they resell in part or in whole at retail. The major oil companies impose an annual volume requirement for "jobber" recognition, and this requirement is made so high that only the largest volume purchasers can qualify.

The tank wagon prices and the tank car prices of the major oil companies are almost always the same. This is true as a matter of common knowledge and is confirmed by this record. There is some testimony as to reports to Standard of "offers" by other major oil companies to sell in tank car quantities at less than the tank car price, or on better terms, but none of these reported offers was substantiated by testimony of any representative of the company involved. Standard never met any such reported offer and never reduced its tank car price below the customary differential; and there is no evidence that any other major oil company did so. It thus appears that there was in reality no price competition for the business of any of the jobbers.

The broad question presented, then, is whether the continuous employment of the same quantity price differential by major suppliers, on terms available only to the largest purchasers, can be justified by one of those suppliers on the ground of meeting its competitors' prices in good faith. The legislative history of the Robinson-Patman Act, as well as the subsequent decisions of this Court, require that this question be answered in the negative.

2. The second question presented is directly raised by the opinion of the Court of Appeals, going to the basic purposes of the Robinson-Patman Act and having an important bearing upon the future administration and enforcement of that Act.

Referring to the changes made in the meeting competition defense by the Robinson-Patman Act, the Court of Appeals cites the statement of this Court in its prior opinion in this case that "None of these changes, however, cut into the actual core of the defense," and thereupon concludes:

> "It would thus appear that a 'good faith' defense available under the Clayton Act would still be avail> able under the amended act. If petitioner's pricing policy was lawful prior to the amendment the same policy was lawful afterward."

The Court of Appeals thus has held that Congress, in enacting the Robinson-Patman Act, failed in its purpose to strengthen Section 2 of the Clayton Act by closing or at least narrowing the loopholes provided by the old defenses. The decisions of this Court are to the contrary.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, this Court said:

> "Furthermore, in enacting the Robinson-Patman Act Congress was especially concerned with protecting small businesses which were unable to buy in quantities, such as the merchants here who purchased the less-than-carloads lots. To this end it undertook to strengthen this very phase of the old Clayton Act."

and in Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746, this Court found that

> "The change in language of this exception was for the purpose of making the defense a matter of evidence in each case, raising a question of fact as to whether the competition justified the discrimination."

We submit that the construction given the meeting competition proviso by the court below, as well as its approval of the discriminatory quantity pricing practice above described, should be reviewed by this Court.

Your applicants request the Court's consideration of this motion and, if said motion be granted, that the foregoing statement in support thereof be accepted as their brief in support of the petition for certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

APPELL, AUSTIN & GAY,
Attorneys for National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc.

CYRUS AUSTIN,
of Counsel.

Office Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC 11 1956
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1956.

No. ~~465~~ 74

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF IN BEHALF OF NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC., AND RETAIL GASOLINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF MICHIGAN, INC., AS AMICI CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND,
HOWARD ELLIS,
HAMMOND E. CHAFFETZ,
W. H. VAN OOSTERHOUT,
FREDERICK M. ROWE,
of
KIRKLAND, FLEMING, GREEN, MARTIN & ELLIS,
Prudential Plaza,
Chicago 1, Illinois,
and
800 World Center Building,
Washington 6, D. C.,
Attorneys for Respondent.

THOMAS E. SUNDERLAND,
ALBERT L. GREEN,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 80, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

December 11, 1956.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1956.

No. 465.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,
vs.
STANDARD OIL COMPANY.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SEVENTH CIRCUIT.

OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE BRIEF IN BEHALF OF NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC., AND RETAIL GASOLINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF MICHIGAN, INC., AS AMICI CURIAE, IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI.

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the
Supreme Court of the United States:

Respondent, Standard Oil Company, respectfully prays this Court to deny the motion with supporting brief filed in behalf of National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. and Retail Gasoline Dealers ~~of~~ Michigan, Inc., and to exclude those papers from the docket of this case as filed in violation of this Court's Rules of Practice governing amici curiae and the contents of their briefs.

1. The Motion Was Not Timely Filed.

Unless this Court's Rules of Practice are construed to sanction the hit-and-run tactic of addressing the Court too late to permit effective rebuttal, the instant motion was clearly not submitted "a reasonable time" prior to the consideration of the petition for certiorari.

Although the petition was filed on September 28, the motion was not filed until November 26, only two days before Respondent's brief in opposition to certiorari was due and had already been printed. While its ostensible purpose is the presentation of issues not adequately covered by the Solicitor General's petition for certiorari, it was filed fully fifty-eight days after that petition—on the eve of the extended deadline for Respondent's brief in opposition to certiorari.

But Rule 42(1) provides that a prospective amicus who fails to secure the consent of both parties must submit his motion "a reasonable time prior to the consideration" of the petition for certiorari. Certainly fifty-eight days after filing of the petition and only two days before the due date of Respondent's brief is unreasonable and suggests a design to foreclose any response.

2. The Supporting Brief Also Flouts the Rules.

Although purporting throughout to speak from the evidence and record, the brief is bare of a single record citation where the truth of its numerous allegations can be checked. According to Rules 42(5) and 40(2), briefs may refer to the record of a case only if citing the pertinent record page number and must be especially "specific" when referring to "a part of the evidence."

Moreover, the brief hardly pretends to address itself to the bearing of the decision of the Court of Appeals on the facts at bar. Instead, the brief resorts to insinuation and innuendo against Respondent—and other oil companies not party to this proceeding—to which there is no opportunity for reply. Such undocumented accusations that stray far beyond the issues of this case are surely barred by this Court's directive against "burdensome, irrelevant, immaterial and scandalous matter." Rule 40(5).

Respectfully submitted,
WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND,
HOWARD ELLIS,
HAMMOND E. CHAFFETZ,
W. H. VAN OOSTERHOUT,
FREDERICK M. ROWE,
of
KIRKLAND, FLEMING, GREEN, MARTIN & ELLIS,
Prudential Plaza,
Chicago 1, Illinois,
and
800 World Center Building,
Washington 6, D. C.,
Attorneys for Respondent.

THOMAS E. SUNDERLAND,
ALBERT L. GREEN,
910 South Michigan Avenue,
Chicago 80, Illinois,
Of Counsel.

December 11, 1956.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 11 1957
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

No. 24

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY,
Respondent.

BRIEF IN BEHALF OF NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC., AND RETAIL GASOLINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF MICHIGAN, INC., AMICI CURIAE

APPELL, AUSTIN & GAY,
30 Rockefeller Plaza,
New York 20, N. Y.

Attorneys for National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc.

CYRUS AUSTIN,

INDEX

PAGE

Interest of Amici Curiae 1

Questions Presented 2

The issues 5

The Facts in Detroit 7

The impact of price discrimination on retail gasoline competition 7

Why the major oil companies refuse to sell to the rank and file of their retailer customers in tank car quantities at tank car prices 9

No price competition among major oil companies 13

The Factual Background of Paragraph 2 of the Commission's Order 15

Standard's retailer customers cannot purchase their gasoline from wholesalers 15

Argument 18

I. The Construction of the Meeting Competition Proviso Adopted by the Court Below is Contrary to the Intent of Congress and in Conflict with the Prior Decisions of this Court 18

Legislative history 19

The Commission's construction of the "good faith" clause is in accord with the prior decisions of this Court and with recent decisions of the Court below 24

A purpose to retain customers is not the sole test of whether the seller's lower price is made "in good faith" 26

PAGE

II. This Court Presumably Was of the Opinion that the Record Herein Contained Substantial Evidence Indicating that Standard's Lower Price Was Not Made "In Good Faith" Within the Meaning of Section 2(b): Otherwise the Court Need Not Have Remanded for Findings on This Question. The Commission's Findings of Fact on Such Remand Are Conclusive 2

III. Standard's Objections to Paragraph 2 of the Commission's Order are Without Merit. Retention of That Paragraph or Its Equivalent is Essential to the Effectiveness of the Order 3

Contentions made by jobbers 3

Conclusion 3

Appendix 3

TABLE OF CASES

Federal Trade Comm. v. Cement Institute, 333 U. S. 683 2

Federal Trade Comm. v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568............................... 3

Federal Trade Comm. v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37 ....20, 2

Federal Trade Comm. v. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 2

Kidder Oil Co. v. F.T.C., 117 F. 2d 892 (7th Cir.) .. 3

Matter of Edelmann & Co., CCH 1955 Trade Reports Sec. 25,445; affd. 239 F. 2d 152 (7th Cir. 1956) .. 2

Matter of Niehoff & Co., CCH 1955 Trade Reports Sec. 25,467; mod. and affd. 241 F. 2d 37 (7th Cir. 1957) 25, 2

Matter of Whitaker Cable Corp., CCH 1955 Trade Reports Sec. 25,443; affd. 239 F. 2d 253 (7th Cir. 1956); cert. den. 4/22/57 2

OTHER AUTHORITIES

PAGE

80 Congressional Record 3119 22

80 Congressional Record 9418 21

Final Report on the Chain Store Investigation Sen. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. 21

Hearings before Special Committee on Investigation of American Retail Federation, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935) 21

H. R. Report 2951, 74th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1936) 21

Investigation of Trade Practices of Big Scale Retail and Wholesale Buying and Selling Organizations, 74th Cong., 1st and 2d Sess. (1935-1936) .. 21

No. 24

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY,
Respondent.

BRIEF IN BEHALF OF NATIONAL CONGRESS OF PETROLEUM RETAILERS, INC., AND RETAIL GASOLINE DEALERS ASSOCIATION OF MICHIGAN, INC., AMICI CURIAE

Interest of Amici Curiae

National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. is a trade congress of State and local associations of retail gasoline dealers, national in scope, formed for the purpose of fostering and promoting the interests and welfare of the 275,000 petroleum retailers in the United States. It is the only trade association of retail dealers in petroleum products having a nationwide representation. Organized as a non-profit membership corporation under the laws of the State of Michigan, its membership is comprised of 57 state and local associations located in 36 states and the District of Columbia.*

---

* A list of the affiliated gasoline retailer associations comprising the membership of National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc., is set forth as an appendix to this brief.

Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc., is a non-profit membership corporation serving the interests of the retail gasoline dealers of that State. It is a member of National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. The Association has 2,785 members in the State of Michigan and more than 1500 members in the Detroit metropolitan area, where this case arose.

The retail gasoline dealers of Detroit and of the nation have a direct and vital interest in the outcome of this proceeding. This record shows that Standard Oil Company and other major oil companies have long engaged in the practice, in Detroit and other metropolitan areas, of selling their branded gasolines to a few large volume purchasers, classified by them as "jobbers" but reselling in whole or in part at retail, at a price substantially lower than the price which they charge for the same gasolines to the many hundreds of smaller retail dealers whom they supply in the same market areas and who must compete with the large volume buyers. The Commission has found that this price discrimination has had and may have the effect of injuring, destroying and preventing competition with the favored "jobbers" in the retail resale of said gasolines. The purpose of the cease and desist order issued by the Commission herein, which the court below has set aside, is to protect the retail gasoline dealers of Detroit and other areas served by Standard from the injurious effects of such price discrimination. Said order, if reinstated by this Court, presumably will be respected and complied with not only by Standard but by the other major oil companies as well. The dealers represented by these Associations, therefore, are directly concerned with the affirmance and enforcement of the Commission's order, and are, in fact, real parties in interest in this proceeding.

Questions Presented

As viewed by the retail gasoline dealers, the assertion of the "meeting competition" defense in this case is an effort by Standard Oil Company to justify and obtain judicial sanction of a discriminatory pricing practice long used by major oil companies, whereby a quantity price differential based on the customer's annual volume is granted to a few large gasoline retailers in metropolitan areas, and to wholesalers reselling in part at retail, but is denied to the great number of smaller retailers who must compete in the resale of the same branded gasoline with the large volume purchasers.

The major oil companies who sell their gasolines at two prices in the same marketing area quote these prices as a "tank car price" and a "tank wagon price". The tank car price, however, is not offered to any dealer who wishes and is able to buy and take delivery in tank car quantities (R. 146-7, 552-8, 2088-9, 1256). This lower price is available only to those dealers whom these oil companies choose to classify as "jobbers" (Answer, R. 12-14). It appears that by industry definition a gasoline jobber is any dealer, whether wholesaler or retailer or both, who buys in tank carloads, has bulk storage, and delivers to his own or other service stations (R. 934, 5096). The major oil companies, however, do not permit the rank and file of their retailer customers in metropolitan areas to qualify as jobbers even under this industry definition. They impose an arbitrary volume requirement of their own for jobber recognition, and this requirement (the purchase of 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 gallons or more of gasoline annually) is made so high that only the largest volume purchasers can qualify (R. 119, 1891).*

---

* Mr. Raupagh, manager of Standard's Detroit division, testified:

"Q. What must the character of the business be? A. Well, he must have a bulk plant; he should have some established business; he should be able to purchase from a million to two million gallons a year.

"Q. Why do you make that volume requirement? A. I don't know of any particular reason excepting that for an in-

(Footnote continued on following page)

It is thus evident that the so-called "tank car price" actually is neither a tank car price nor a functional price, but is nothing more nor less than a quantity discount based on an arbitrarily high annual volume requirement. It is not truly a tank car price since it is not available to any customer who wishes to buy and is able to take delivery in tank carloads. It is not a functional price because the large customers classified as jobbers are so classified without regard to whether they resell at wholesale, or in part or in whole at retail. Any customer buying the required gallonage could qualify as a jobber and get the tank car price.

The Commission found that Standard's allowance of this quantity price to the four "jobbers" as retailers gave them a substantial competitive advantage over its direct retailer customers paying the higher price, which has resulted and may result in serious injury to competition (R. 5372-4). The Commission also found that the lower price to the jobbers was not justified by any cost savings to Standard in serving them. These findings are not now in disute.

Stripped of its non-essentials, then, this case boils down to the simple matter of one chain retailer and three wholesaler-retailers, who, because of the large volume of their purchases, were permitted to buy as "jobbers" at a price dividual or a concern to be a jobber there must be some volume involved, and that's what we consider as a proper volume.

---

(Footnote continued from preceding page)

"Q. Does the jobber, to you, simply mean somebody who buys in certain quantities? A. Who buys in certain quantities and performs a function of a jobber.

"What is your understanding—what is the function of a jobber? A. First, that he buy in sufficient quantity.

"Q. Is it necessary that he resell to other dealers? A. No."

As to the requirements for jobber qualification other than volume (storage and delivery facilities and good credit), tank storage and trucking are easily obtainable (R. 984, 395), and there is no indication that Standard was willing to sell gasoline in carload lots to smaller purchasers even for cash.

substantially lower than the price charged their smaller retailer competitors. The question here presented would be the same if Standard's practice had been to make deliveries to the large volume buyers directly to their service station tanks at the lower price.

The Issues

1. A single substantive issue remains for decision in this case. That issue is whether, upon the findings of fact of the Commission and other undisputed facts of record, Standard has established the defense that its discriminatory price to the four jobbers, on gasoline resold by them at retail, was made, in fact and in good faith, to meet the equally low prices of competitors, within the meaning of Section 2(b) of the Clayton Act.

As related to the pricing practice above described, this issue may be variously restated as follows:

> May a quantity price or discount, regularly granted to a few large volume purchasers by a major supplier of a commodity, and otherwise unlawfully discriminatory, be justified under the "good faith" proviso by showing that other major suppliers of such commodity regularly grant the same differential or discount to purchasers of like volume?
>
> May adherence to a discriminatory pricing practice continuously employed by the dominant suppliers in an industry be justified under the "good faith" clause on the ground that it is an "industry practice" and that a particular supplier not adhering to it might lose customers?
>
> Was it the intent of Congress, in inserting the "good faith" limitation in Section 2(b), to permit the constant allowance of unearned price differentials to large volume buyers by dominant suppliers or as an industry practice?

The Commission has answered these questions in the negative. The Court of Appeals refused to meet this issue, but instead substituted its own findings of fact for those of the Commission. In so doing it ignored the numerous admissions made by Standard in its answer to the complaint, in the testimony of its witnesses, and in its prior briefs that both its higher and its lower prices were fixed in accordance with a defined pricing policy based on customer classification. In fact, Standard's principal reliance at the trial, as to meeting competition, was upon its adherence to the same criteria for jobber classification and the same tank car—tank wagon price differential which was employed by its major competitors.

Referring to the charges made in the meeting competition defense by the Robinson-Patman Act, the Court of Appeals concluded:

> "It would thus appear that a 'good faith' defense available under the Clayton Act would still be available under the amended act. If petitioner's pricing policy was lawful prior to the amendment the same policy was lawful afterward."

The court below thus has held that Congress, in enacting the Robinson-Patman Act, failed in its purpose to strengthen Section 2 of the Clayton Act by closing or at least narrowing the loopholes provided by the old defenses. As will hereinafter be pointed out, this Congressional purpose abundantly appears from the legislative history of the Act, and has been recognized by this Court in prior decisions.

The basic question, therefore, is as to the proper construction to be given the "good faith" clause of Section 2(b), in the situation here presented.

The Facts in Detroit

We believe this brief will best serve the Court by presenting the factual background necessary to an understanding of Standard's price discriminations in Detroit, and of the dual pricing system there employed by most of the major oil companies.

The writer of this brief has been connected with this case since its inception in 1940. As trial attorney for the Federal Trade Commission he prepared the complaint, tried the case, briefed and argued it before the Commission. He has represented the retail gasoline dealers at all stages of the case before the Commission and in the courts since 1946. He is, therefore, thoroughly conversant with the record herein in all its aspects.

The impact of price discrimination on retail gasoline competition

There is no retail business in which competition is more immediately affected by discriminatory pricing practices of suppliers than the retail gasoline business. There are several reasons why this is true.

First, the gasoline trade is on wheels. In a large metropolitan area like the Detroit area the average driver of an automobile can without inconvenience buy gasoline at any one of hundreds of service stations throughout a territory of many square miles through which he drives regularly. At the time this case was tried there were 3700 or 3800 retail gasoline service stations in metropolitan Detroit (R. 298), of which some 450 stations (including those supplied by wholesalers) dispensed Standard's gasoline from Red Crown pumps (R. 5057-60). Price is the most potent factor in gaining and regaining customers at a service station (R. 338-9, 5113). An automobile owner can and will transfer his business from one station to another when he sees a sign advertising a cut of a cent a gallon or even less in the brand of his choice or another brand of equal public acceptance. For this reason, competition with a retail gasoline station is not limited to nearby stations, and a competitive advantage obtained by one station, particularly where located on a main artery of traffic, will be felt by other stations many miles away.

A second reason for the sensitivity of competition between retail gasoline dealers is that the volume of retail gasoline business is practically constant, except for seasonal variations, depending almost entirely upon the number of automobiles in use in the area from year to year (R. 153, 5372). There is no such thing as "new" gasoline business to be obtained by advertising salesmanship or price cutting. This means that when a gasoline retailer obtains a wholesale price advantage over other dealers and uses it to cut his retail price, the business attracted will be taken from other dealers to their immediate loss (R. 5114-5).

In a highly competitive area like Detroit the dealer's margin between the price he pays and the price at which he sells is very narrow (R. 5372). At the time this case was tried the margin in Detroit between the posted tank wagon price of the major oil companies and the prevailing retail selling price was only 3.3 cents a gallon (Comm. Ex. 3, R. 4715). A survey of retail gasoline marketing costs in Detroit made in 1938 by Herbert F. Taggart, Professor of Accounting at the University of Michigan, showed that the average cost of selling gasoline at retail service stations was 4.8 cents a gallon, and that the average cost of sale by the most efficient 25% of the stations was 3.5 cents a gallon (R. 674, 4748, Comm. Ex. 76). This explains why most retail dealers paying the tank wagon price cannot further reduce their narrow selling margin to obtain additional volume and why their ability to survive is seriously endangered when their customers are diverted to the stations of other dealers who are enabled to cut their price by reason of being permitted to buy in tank car quantities at a differential greater than their cost of distribution (R. 323-4).

Standard's tank car price to the four favored dealers for its Red Crown gasoline which they resold at retail was 1½ cents a gallon below the tank wagon price charged other retailers. This differential gave the tank car buyers a net price advantage over their competitors of something more than a cent a gallon. (Citrin-Kolb was able to resell to one customer at a cent below tank wagon price (R. 1878-9); and Ned's Auto Supply Company abandoned employing contract haulers to transport its gasoline to its service stations at .45 cents a gallon in favor of using its own trucks, which presumably cost less (R. 1825.) This meant that the four tank car buyers had a retail operating margin about 30 per cent greater than the margin available to other retailers at prevailing prices, which, of course, constituted an enormous competitive advantage.

Why the major oil companies refuse to sell to the rank and file of their retailer customers in tank car quantities at tank car prices

Eighty-seven percent of the total volume of gasoline sold in the Detroit area is sold by major oil companies under their own brands (R. 335). This business is established and has been built up as the business of selling gasoline direct to retail dealers by tank truck delivery to the service station. The success of this business depends upon maintaining the volume of gasoline sold by that method of tank wagon prices. Only about 18 percent of the gasoline sold by Standard under its brands in the Detroit area in 1940 was sold to tank car buyers (Res. Ex. 58, R. 4879).

Until 1936 the major oil companies operated their own retail service stations in the Detroit area, selling direct to the public. They then acquired, and have continued to acquire, many valuable and strategically located service station properties. In 1941 Standard owned about 200 such properties in Detroit, and nearly 80 percent of its tank wagon sales were to lessees of these properties (Comm. Ex. 119, R. 4783). Gasoline service station properties are not readily converted to other use since they are constructed with underground storage tanks, driveways, pumps and fixtures suitable only for dispensing gasoline.

Standard maintains six bulk plants in the City of Detroit for the purpose of supplying its tank wagon retailer customers (R. 108). Tank car sales are not made from its bulk plants, but from its marine terminal. Standard owns and operates a fleet of tank trucks in which the gasoline is delivered from its bulk plants directly to retail service station tanks. Standard also owns an office building in Detroit, and employs over 350 persons in the operation of its business of distributing and selling to retailers (R. 184).

Standard makes a greater profit per gallon on tank wagon sales than on tank car sales. This follows from the Commission's finding that its tank car differential is not justified by differences in cost of sale and delivery. Tank car sales are made on credit and a cash discount of 1% for payment within ten days is allowed, whereas gasoline delivered by tank wagon is sold for cash with no discount (R. 159).

The major oil companies thus have an enormous stake and investment in their business of selling gasoline by tank wagon delivery to retail service stations as above described. Obviously, the business so developed would be disrupted if any service station customer or group of customers desiring to do so were permitted to arrange to take tank car delivery and purchase at the tank car price. In this situation it is to be expected that these companies would adopt a sales policy designed to prevent their tank wagon customers from buying as jobbers or buying from jobbers. The record shows that that is in fact their policy, and that the policy is enforced.

In a number of instances retail service station operators have applied to Standard for permission to buy in tank car quantities at tank car prices, but such requests have been denied (R. 147, 552-558, 2088-9), in spite of the fact that bulk storage ~~and hauling~~ facilities could readily be secured by any dealer or group of dealers if permitted to purchase on a tank car basis (R. 984). There are a number of transportation companies in Detroit who make a business of hauling gasoline for hire (R. 395). Some service stations in Detroit have sufficient storage capacity to receive delivery of gasoline in 8,000 to 10,000 gallon quantities (R. 395): there is no reason why transport truck (tank car) deliveries could not be made to their tanks (R. 114). Standard even refused to permit one of its jobbers, Citrin-Kolb, to share joint storage facilities with another jobber, on the ground that it did not wish to set a precedent of allowing two or more dealers to buy in tank car lots by obtaining bulk storage (R. 1256).

The arbitrary and artificial nature of the major oil companies' Detroit annual volume requirements for tank car purchasing is further evident from the fact that the same requirement is not imposed by Standard in other areas, nor, insofar as appears, by non-major companies selling by tank car in Detroit. Of eighteen jobbers in Oklahoma supplied by Standard in 1939, only one bought over a million gallons, and eight bought less than 100,000 gallons during the year (R. 2575-6). This is less than the annual volume of the average Detroit service station.

The materiality of this annual volume requirement on the issue of "good faith" lies in the fact that it is imposed, not as a competitive measure, but as a protective measure to prevent diversion of the major oil companies' tank wagon business while at the same time meeting the demands of the largest volume purchasers for preferential price treatment. The regular adherence to such a sales policy by the dominant suppliers in an industry is designed not to promote, but to prevent, price competition for the business of individual customers.

This case notably presents the anomalous situation of the market leader in the Detroit area insisting that it should be permitted to sell to a large chain retailer (Ned's Auto Supply Company) at discriminatory tank car prices which have been used to take away gallonage from the very retail dealers whose sales are the lifeblood of Standard's business and the majority of whom are its lessees. The Court may well ask why the major oil companies are willing to give a preferential quantity price to any large retailers to be used as a competitive weapon against their bread-and-butter customers.

During the period covered by this record Ned's was the only dealer in the Detroit area reselling Standard's gasoline wholly or principally at retail who was permitted to buy as a jobber. Two of Standard's witnesses testified that throughout its entire territory Standard has very few jobber customers (R. 1064, 3230). The majority of these jobbers are wholesalers, but an occasional sole retailer, such as Ned's, is permitted to qualify. It appears that the practice of other majors is the same (R. 1072, 1897, 5113).

The explanation of this practice is that it results to the advantage of the major oil companies to have a limited number of retail operators in an area like Detroit who, by being given a lower price, are enabled to cut retail prices from time to time, thereby forcing other retailers to reduce their prices or lose business. The effect is to foment price wars at the retail level and depress the retailer's margin to cost of sale or below. The tank wagon and tank car prices of the oil companies in the meantime remain the same or can be raised, thereby assuring to these refiners the greatest possible share of the price paid by the public. Unfair competition at the retail level is thus fostered by giving an unearned advantage to a few, while price competition between major oil companies remains practically non-existent.

Prior to the spring of 1938 the retail dealer's margin in Detroit (difference between tank wagon price and prevailing service station price) was from 4¢ to 4.5¢ a gallon (Comm. Ex. 3; R. 4715). In March 1938 Standard began to sell to Ned's at tank car prices. Numerous witnesses testified that during this period Ned's was advertising discounts of from 1½¢ to 2¢ a gallon on Red Crown gasoline; that this price cutting spread and became prevalent in the Detroit market during that year, and that they lost business to Ned's (R. 5115). In the fall of 1939 the price cutting engendered by these "subsidized" jobbers reached a point where the tank wagon customers of other major companies were seriously affeeted. Sun Oil Company, which does not sell to jobbers in Detroit, retaliated by reducing its price to its dealers to enable them to meet competition (R. 328-9). This cut was promptly met by Standard and other majors, and the public benefited. Within six weeks the major tank wagon price was restored to its exact former level, and advertised price cutting by Ned's was stopped. The retail dealers' margin, however, became stabilized at only 3.3¢ a gallon, after having reached an even lower figure during the preceding months (Comm. Ex. 3; R. 447, 5114). This margin of 3.3¢ was below the average cost of sale of the most efficient 25 percent of Detroit service stations and far below the average selling cost of all stations, as established by the Taggart Survey (Comm. Ex. 76; R. 674, 4748).

No price competition among major oil companies

Both the tank wagon prices and the tank car prices of the major oil companies in a given marketing area are almost always the same. This is true as a matter of common knowledge and is confirmed by this record (R. 126, 129). The lower or tank car price to large buyers is not the result of a competitive reduction on a customer-to-customer basis. The record presents no instance where Standard reduced either its tank wagon price or its tank car price to any customer except in the single case of the tank wagon price reduction of $\frac{1}{2}$ cent a gallon allowed Ned's from September 1936 to March 1938.*

There is some testimony that one or two of the jobbers reported to Standard that certain major oil companies had offered to sell to them in tank car quantities at less than the tank car price, or on better terms, but none of these reported "offers" was substantiated by testimony of any representative of the oil company involved. Standard never met any such reported offer and never reduced its tank car price below the customary differential; and there is no evidence that any other major actually sold to any jobber in Detroit at below the "going" tank car price. None of these companies could lawfully have sold at a lower price to one of Standard's jobbers without lowering its price to its other jobbers; and it is evident that Standard did not regard these "offers" as bona fide. It thus appears that there was in reality no price competition for the business of any of the jobbers, and that Standard's recognition of Ned's as a jobber was only a customer reclassification in recognition of Ned's annual volume, pursuant to the established pricing policy of Standard and the other majors.

---

* As to that instance, the Commission has found that the only competitive offer which was then available to Ned's was for Fleet Wing gasoline, a non-major brand, and that Standard "could not have regarded the offer * * * as a serious competitive threat" (R. 5387). These findings are supported by testimony at R. 1809-10, 1815-16, 1866, 3098.

 It was agreed between counsel at the hearings that the word "offer" when used in the testimony on this subject would be regarded as used without legal significance and not as supporting a conclusion that any conversation or negotiation so referred to amounted to an offer in the legal sense (R. 1301-2, 1802-3).

The Factual Background of Paragraph 2 of the Commission's Order

Standard sold its branded gasolines to three wholesalers in Detroit. These wholesalers in turn resold at wholesale to about 100 retail service stations which competed at retail with Standard's 350 direct retailer customers. One of these wholesalers, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, passed along a part of its tank car price advantage to certain of its retailer customers, thereby giving those customers a competitive advantage over the retailers buying from Standard direct. It is this situation which paragraph 2 of the Commission's order was designed to meet.

In other words, paragraph 2 of the order prohibits Standard from discriminating against its retailer customers indirectly through wholesalers, where the discrimination has the same effect on retail competition as the direct discriminations prohibited by paragraph 1. An understanding of the relationship which existed between Standard, its wholesaler customers and its retailer customers is essential to an understanding of the reasons and necessity for paragraph 2 of the order.

Standard's retailer customers cannot purchase their gasoline from wholesalers

As between Standard and its jobbers, Standard's tank wagon customers constitute a captive market. Not only are these customers not permitted to buy gasoline from Standard at the jobber price; they also are prevented through lessee relationship or by contracts from buying Standard's gasoline from wholesalers.

About 60% in number of the retail dealers purchasing gasoline from Standard in Detroit are Standard's lessees. Standard leases its 200 service station properties on the understanding that the operators will purchase their gasoline from Standard by tank wagon delivery at tank-wagon prices (R. 2123-4). Most leases are for one year periods (R. 107, 4702); none of these lessee stations have ever been serviced with gasoline by any other company (R. 2092).

Service station operators purchasing from Standard, but who are not its lessees, are required to enter into contracts with Standard requiring the dealer to buy from Standard all of his requirements of Standard's gasolines at tank wagon prices (R. 4713). Thus about 40% of Standard's retailer customers are prevented by contract from purchasing Standard's gasoline from any other source.

All business done by Standard with tank wagon customers in Detroit after 1936 was done under one of these leases or contracts (R. 210). The result is that Standard's tank wagon customers are not at liberty to shift all or part of their gasoline purchases to wholesalers dealing in Standard's brands, even if the wholesaler should offer them a price below Standard's tank wagon price.

The retail dealers purchasing at tank wagon prices from Standard are tied to Standard not only by leases and contracts, but by Standard's ownership of the tanks, pumps and tools used in service station operations and its control of the identification advertising used at the stations selling its gasoline. "Identification advertising" includes the Red Crown globes on the gasoline pumps, "Standard Service" signs, road maps and circulars. Such advertising is furnished by Standard to all retail service stations selling its branded gasolines, including stations supplied by wholesalers. The globes and signs are installed by Standard, remain its property, and can be removed by it from the service station at any time. They can be obtained from no other source, and without such identification the dealer would lose business (R. 157-8, 2107-8).

The major oil companies have almost equally effective means of controlling the operations and pricing policies of their wholesalers. Standard has no contracts with its wholesalers, and may refuse to sell to any of them at any time. Each of them sells only Standard's gasoline and has built up its business upon the public acceptance of Standard's brands. Standard does not sell in tank car quantities, for resale under its brand names, to jobbers or others who deal in other brands (R. 2086-7). It installs and retains ownership of the pump insignia, globes and signs at the service stations supplied by its wholesalers and can remove these insignia and signs at will (R. 157-8, 2914). It is obvious that these jobbers, in both their wholesale and their retail operations, are dependent from day to day upon Standard's good will and necessarily subject to its control.

If these wholesalers were in any true sense competitors of Standard, then Standard's exclusive dealing contracts with its non-lessee retailer customers, preventing them from buying its gasoline from wholesalers, would be unlawful under Section 3 of the Clayton Act. In no instance has a wholesaler openly reduced its price to its retail outlets even fractionally below Standard's tank wagon price, or offered such a price to a customer of Standard or of another wholesaler. If even sporadic instances of such competition had occurred in Detroit Standard would have been quick to put them in evidence. Citrin-Kolb, the largest of the wholesalers, never sold to a single customer who was formerly a direct customer of Standard (R. 1316).

ARGUMENT

I

The construction of the meeting competition proviso adopted by the Court below is contrary to the intent of Congress and in conflict with the prior decisions of this Court.

The decision of the court below appears to have been due in part to a refusal to accept the Commission's findings of fact, and in part to a misconstruction of this Court's prior opinion in this case (340 U. S. 231).

There can be no question but that Standard's allowance of its lower price to the four "jobbers" in Detroit was made pursuant to a policy of customer classification regularly followed by it and by other oil companies as an industry practice. In its answer Standard stated that after the time each of these four customers acquired bulk storage and distribution facilities "such customer is entitled to be classified as a wholesale or jobber buyer of gasoline as distinguished from a retail reseller" (R. 12); that it had a "general policy and practice of bona fidedly selecting and classifying gasoline customers as wholesale or jobber customers, as distinguished from retail resellers" (R. 13); and "that said four customers are each bona fidedly qualified to be regarded and are regarded by the oil industry in Detroit as within the classification of wholesale or jobber customers" (R. 14).

In its brief filed in the Court of Appeals in 1948 Standard asserted that "Subject to Standard's right to select its customers, anyone could qualify as a Standard jobber" if he conformed to Standard's requirements for tank car purchasing. In Standard's brief filed in this Court in 1950 it is stated (p. 3) that > "Petitioner sold to all its service station customers at the same price—i. e., the tank wagon price. * * *

>
> "Petitioner sold to all its jobber customers at the same price—i. e., the tank car price."

and (at pp. 42, 43) that "these customers all belong to a distinct class of buyers, so recognized throughout the industry", and that "petitioner sells to two classes of customers in the same area, admittedly at the going price to each of them."

In its prior opinion in this case this Court held that the meeting competition defense under Section 2(b) extends only to a seller's lower price "made in good faith to meet a lawful and equally low price of a competitor" (emphasis supplied). The court below has stated that here "there is no finding, no contention and not even a suspicion but that the competing prices which petitioner met were lawful." Obviously, this is not true. The record abundantly shows that the other oil companies whose prices Standard claims to have met, including Texas, Gulf and Shell, sold their gasolines in Detroit and in other cities by the same dual pricing and distribution system used by Standard. (See, for example, R. 1072, 1897, Res. Ex. 38, R. 4864-7.) The prices of these other major oil companies to jobber-retailers, therefore, were discriminatory and prima facie unlawful: and this is also true of the price offered Ned's Auto Supply Company for Fleet Wing gasoline by Red Indian Oil Company (R. 3093-4). Standard offered no evidence to show that the prices which it claims to have met were lawful prices, or that it believed or had reason to believe that they were lawful prices.

Legislative history

The primary remedial objective of the Robinson-Patman amendment of the Clayton Act was the protection of the smaller independent merchants from injury to their competitive position resulting from discriminatory advantages extended by sellers to chains and other large distributors who were found to have been using their mass buying power to demand and obtain preferential prices, discounts and allowances. As stated by this Court in Federal Trade Comm. v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37, 43:

> "The legislative history of the Robinson-Patman Act makes it abundantly clear that Congress considered it to be an evil that a large buyer could secure a competitive advantage over a small buyer solely because of the large buyer's quantity purchasing ability. The Robinson-Patman Act was passed to deprive a large buyer of such advantages except to the extent that a lower price could be justified by reason of a seller's diminished costs due to quantity manufacture, delivery or sale, or by reason of the seller's good faith effort to meet a competitor's equally low price."

In so referring to "the seller's good faith effort" we do not believe that this Court meant to imply that Section 2(b) permits a seller to give an unearned price advantage to a large buyer as a regular and continued practice wherever he can show, as he usually can, that other sellers offer the same price or discount to buyers of the same large quantities.

In summarizing the purpose of the Robinson-Patman bill, the Conference Report stated:

> "The object of the bill briefly stated is to amend Section 2 of the Clayton Act, so as to suppress more effectually discriminations between customers of the same seller not supported by sound economic differences in their business positions or in the cost of serving them." (H. R. Rep. 2951, 74th Congress, 2nd Sess. (1936))

The Chairman of the House Conferees, in explaining the meeting competition proviso upon presentation of the Conference Report, said:

> "It leaves it a question of fact to be determined in each case, whether the competition to be met was such as to justify the discrimination given, as one lying within the limitations laid down by the bill, and whether the way in which the competition was met lies within the latitude allowed by those limitations."

He pointed out further that this provision should not be construed as permitting "oppressive discriminations in violation of the obvious intent of the bill" (80 Cong. Rec. 9418).

The Robinson-Patman Act grew out of the Federal Trade Commission's chain store investigation, completed in 1934.* The Commission's report showed that many large chains were receiving discounts, allowances and other advantages greatly in excess of those granted, not only to competing retailers, but even to wholesalers. Section 2 of the Clayton Act had been found insufficient to cope with these practices. With regard to the provisos of that section, the House Judiciary Committee stated in reporting the Patman bill in 1936:

> "These provisos have so materially weakened section 2 of that Act, which this bill proposes to amend, as to render it inadequate, if not almost a nullity." (H. R. Rep. 2287, 74th Cong. 2d Sess., p. 7.)

---

* Final Report on the Chain Store Investigation, Sen. Doc. No. 4, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. See also: Hearings before Special Committee on Investigation of American Retail Federation, 74th Cong., 1st Sess. (1935), and Investigation of Trade Practices of Big Scale Retail and Wholesale Buying and Selling Organizations, 74th Cong., 1st and 2d Sess. (1935-1936).

In the Senate, Senator Logan stated:

> "The purpose of the bill is to stop up loopholes found in section 2 of the Clayton Act. Section 2 of the Clayton Act has been abated. There was a provision in it, as Senators will remember, allowing the granting of price differentials to meet competition in a particular community. That was perhaps unwise, although at the time of the passage of the Clayton Act it was well designed to remedy the evils then in existence. However, since then time has proved that there are ways to evade the Clayton Act, and therefore it is necessary to strengthen its provisions; and the bill seeks to do nothing else." (80 Cong. Rec. 3119)

While the congressional purpose to narrow the former meeting competition exception is thus clear, the court below has here held that "If petitioner's pricing policy was lawful prior to the amendment the same policy was lawful afterward."

In the Morton Salt case (F.T.C. v. Morton Salt Co., 334 U. S. 37) this Court was unanimously of the opinion that a quantity pricing system such as that used by Standard runs directly contrary to the purposes of the Act. There the Morton Salt Company employed a carload discount available to all carload purchasers, and on top of that granted an allowance of 10 cents a case to customers purchasing 5,000 cases or more in a year, and an additional 5 cents a case to purchasers of 50,000 cases a year. These carload and volume discounts, like Standard's tank car price here, were offered to all purchasers buying in the required quantities, regardless of method of resale. Only the five largest retail grocery chains in the country were able to qualify for the 15 cents a case allowance. After pointing out that these allowances "were enjoyed by certain wholesalers and retailers who competed with other wholesalers and retailers to whom these discounts were refused", the Court said:

> "Furthermore, in enacting the Robinson-Patman Act Congress was especially concerned with protecting small businesses which were unable to buy in quantities, such as the merchants here who purchased the less-than-carload lots. To this end it undertook to strengthen this very phase of the old Clayton Act." (334 U. S. 49)

Mr. Justice Jackson's dissenting opinion, agreeing with the majority as to the unlawfulness of the volume discounts, states:

> "On the one hand [the Act] recognizes that the quantity discount may be utilized arbitrarily and without justification in savings effected by quantity sales, to give a discriminatory advantage to large buyers over small ones. This evil it would prohibit. * * *
>
> "It is not merely probable but I think it is almost inevitable that the further ten-cent or fifteen-cent per case differential in net price of sale between the large number of small merchants and the small number of very large merchants, accelerates the trend of the former towards extinction and of the latter towards monopoly." (334 U. S. 58, 60)

The major oil companies' allowance of a quantity price to large buyers permitted to qualify as "jobbers", without regard to the competitive level at which they resell, is typical of the discriminations which Congress sought to reach and prevent in passing the Robinson-Patman Act. Since it is clear that the primary objective of that Act was to prohibit the constant allowance of discriminatory prices and discounts to large purchasers, a provisory exemption such as that contained in Section 2(b) should, if possible, be construed consistently with that objective.

The Commission's construction of the "good faith" clause is in accord with the prior decisions of this Court and with recent decisions of the Court below

The record shows that Standard has persistently employed a dual pricing policy based upon customer classification according to definitions so framed as to permit only the largest buyers to qualify for the lower price. In every case heretofore in which an attempt has been made to justify the use of a discriminatory pricing system under the meeting competition proviso, the attempt has failed.

This Court first had occasion to construe and define the scope of the 2(b) proviso in Federal Trade Commission v. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 (1945). The Commission's present findings are in accord with the following statements from that opinion:

> "The change in language of this exception was for the purpose of making the defense a matter of evidence in each case, raising a question of fact as to whether the competition justified the discrimination."
>
> "Respondents have never attempted to establish their own non-discriminatory price system, and then reduced their price when necessary to meet competition. Instead they have slavishly followed in the first instance a pricing policy which, in their case, resulted in systematic discriminations, * * *".

Standard here is in a less favorable position to defend its pricing system than was the Staley Company. Standard is the market leader in Detroit and cannot argue, as did Staley, that it was a newcomer to the market and forced to adopt the pricing practices of its competitors.

In Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute (333 U. S. 683, 725), this Court reaffirmed that Section 2(b) is not to be construed as permitting justification of the continuous use of discriminatory pricing methods. It was there stated:

> "Section 2(b) permits a single company to sell one customer at a lower price than it sells to another if the price is 'made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor'. But this does not mean that Sec. 2(b) permits a seller to use a sales system which constantly results in his getting more money for like goods from some esutomers than he does from others. We held to the contrary in the Staley case."

In three recent decisions the Federal Trade Commission has reaffirmed that "good faith" is not shown where the seller's lower prices are regularly made pursuant to an established pricing policy.

Matter of Whitaker Cable Corp., CCH 1955, Trade Reports Sec. 25,443; affd. 239 F. 2d 253 (7th Cir. 1956); cert. den. 353 U.S. 938;

Matter of Edelmann & Co., CCH 1955, Trade Reports Sec. 25,445; affd. 239 F. 2d 152 (7th Cir. 1956);

Matter of Niehoff & Co., CCH 1955, Trade Reports Sec. 25,467; mod. and affd. 241 F. 2d 37 (7th Cir. 1957).

In each of these cases the Court of Appeals upheld the Commission's denial of the meeting competition defense. In the Whitaker case it appeared that Whitaker used a dual pricing system similar to the system used by Standard here. Whitaker sold its automotive parts to oil and tire companies at a lower price than to automotive jobbers. Its price differential between these two classes of customers resulted primarily from the application of a rebate schedule based on total annual volume of purchases. Whitaker contended "that its pricing policies followed custom and trade practice in an attempt to meet equally low prices of competitors". The Court Appeals held that "the fact that petitioner adopted and followed the discount system employed by its competitors does not necessarily preclude a finding of Section 2(a) violation", citing this Court's decision in the Staley case.

In the Niehoff case the Commission found "that the net prices accorded by Niehoff were a reflection of its nationwide pricing system formulated to meet competition generally and not designed to meet any particular competitor's prices." The court sustained the Commission's conclusion that this defense was insufficient.

A purpose to retain customers is not the sole test of whether the seller's lower price is made "in good faith"

In the court below Standard asserted that this case depends on the "single proposition of law" that "price reductions to meet competitors' lower prices are in 'good faith' * * * when granted to established customers by a seller who 'was convinced' and 'had substantial reasons for believing' he would otherwise lose these accounts". Standard's position was that belief by the seller that its lower price is necessary to retain the customer is the sole test of statutory good faith, regardless of the purposes and pattern of the discrimination or the nature of the competition to be met.

This "proposition of law" is patently unsound. It is contradicted by the history and wording of the statute, and is at variance with this Court's statement of the requirements for "good faith" justification in its prior opinion in this case.

A seller will rarely, if ever, reduce his price to a particular customer, to the detriment of his other customers, except with his eye on his competitors' prices and in the belief that he might otherwise lose the customer. The words "in good faith" would be largely superfluous if they required no more than a showing of purpose to retain a customer. In any case where a preferential price is constantly granted large buyers by a number of competing suppliers of goods of equal public acceptance one supplier could always show reason to believe that customers might be lost if the preferential price were not given. . .

In its prior opinion herein this Court expressly referred to retention of customers and good faith as separate requirements for 2(b) justification. At the very outset of its opinion the Court said that

> "under the Act, the lower price to the jobbers was justified if it was made to retain each of them as a customer and in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor" (R. 5307-8; emphasis supplied).

Many examples come to mind of situations where statutory good faith would not be established by showing that the seller "had substantial reasons for believing" that the lower of his two prices was necessary to hold the customer. Such would be the case if several sellers by agreement adopted discriminatory price differentials favoring large buyers, or where it is the practice for a number of dominant suppliers to classify chain retailers distributing to their own stores as wholesalers and grant them the wholesaler price; or where sellers discriminate between purchasers at different points by the use of fictitious basing points because it is industry practice for competitors to do the same. In any such case an individual seller departing from the established pricing plan adopted by himself and his competitors might well expect to lose customers, yet certainly such regular and continuing patterns of discrimination could not be justified on the ground of meeting competition in good faith. Justification is equally lacking here, where the major oil companies regularly sold at the same discriminatory differential to two classes of customers classified arbitrarily to suit their own purposes, with no price competition for customers of either class.

While the facts in this case are old, the major issue presented is as important now as it was in 1940, and perhaps more important. Its importance, moreover, is national and not confined to Detroit. Standard's continued resistance to the enforcement of this order even on a factual basis is sufficient evidence of that importance. Affirmance of this order is needed to settle once and for all that the 2(b) proviso is not a loophole through which the objectives of the Robinson-Patman Act may be circumvented and defeated.

II

This Court presumably was of the opinion that the record herein contained substantial evidence indicating that Standard's lower price was not made "in good faith" within the meaning of Section 2(b); otherwise the Court need not have remanded for findings on this question. The Commission's findings of fact on such remand are conclusive.

The Commission has specifically found that Standard's lower price to at least three of the four "jobbers" was not made or continued to meet actual price offers of competitors (R. 5383-5388). It was found that the only offer open to Ned's Auto Supply Company (a chain retailer) was an offer by the distributor of Fleet Wing gasoline, a non-major or "off" brand selling at lower prices (R. 5387); and that during the period in question no major oil company offer was available to Ned's, Wayne or Stikeman (R. 5384, 5386). The evidence fully supports these findings.*

In the absence of probative evidence that any of its major competitors offered an equally low price to its

---

* For an analysis of the testimony regarding these reported "offers", see the Exceptions to Trial Examiner's Report filed by the Commission's trial attorney (R. 5128-5134). These exceptions were not ruled upon by the Commission since at that time the Commission deemed it unnecessary to make factual findings as to the meeting of competitive prices.

"jobber" customers, Standard now has no alternative but to rely upon the general testimony of its marketing experts that it was industry practice to sell at tank car prices to anyone who purchased in the quantities in which these customers were purchasing and who otherwise qualified for tank car delivery. The Commission gave full recognition to such testimony in concluding that adherence to such an industry practice as an established pricing policy was insufficient to justify price discriminations otherwise unlawful (R. 5388).

Standard can not seriously claim that the Commission's findings of fact herein are not supported by substantial evidence. Nevertheless, it made some attempt in the court below to obscure the conclusiveness of the Commission's findings by reference to findings of the trial examiner, to excerpts from prior opinions, and to certain comments of judges and counsel gleaned from transcripts of previous oral arguments.

Of course, it is not true that Standard's "good faith" has heretofore been "documented" or "acknowledged." There has been no previous findings, and no previous determination, on this issue either by the trial examiner, by the Commission, or by this Court.

The trial examiner and the Commission both were originally of the opinion that the decision of this case depended upon evidence of substantial injury to competition, and that the 2(b) proviso did not afford a defense in any case where such injury was affirmatively shown. Relying upon this construction of the statute, both the examiner and the Commission expressly found it unecessary to make findings on the issue of good faith.

The trial examiner twice carefully posed the question whether Standard's differentials granted the four jobbers were "made in good faith" to meet equally low prices of competitors (R. 5093, 5099), and each time as carefully omitted any finding of good faith in answering these questions (R. 5096, 5104). In view of the care and detail exhibited by the examiner's findings as a whole, his failure to conclude that the lower prices were made in good faith was clearly deliberate.

The examiner found, as the Commission has found now, that following the enactment of the Robinson-Patman amendment Standard's recognition of the three wholesalers as jobbers without regard to retail resales "was continued without inquiry into the question of any possible infraction of the law" (R. 5097-8).

Further, it should be noted that under the Commission's Rules in effect when this case was tried the trial examiner's findings were advisory only. Such findings then did not have the effect of an initial decision, as is now the case under the Administrative Procedure Act.

In any event, the examiner's findings, the 1949 opinion of the Court of Appeals, and all of the off-the-record comments and remarks relied on by Standard, including this Court's own remarks, were before this Court when it decided to remand. If this Court had considered the evidence to be conclusive as to Standard's good faith, it need not have remanded for further findings. In that case the Court could and no doubt would have directed final disposition of the case to avoid further delay.

In Federal Trade Comm. v. Curtis Publishing Co., 260 U. S. 568, 580 (1923), this Court said:

> "But as the statute grants jurisdiction to make and enter, upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings, a decree affirming, modifying, or setting aside an order, the court must also have power to examine the whole record and ascertain for itself the issues presented and whether there are material facts not reported by the commission. If there be substantial evidence relating to such facts from which different conclusions reasonably may be drawn, the matter may be and ordinarily, we think should be remanded to the commission—the primary fact-finding body—with direction to make additional findings, but if, from all the circumstances it clearly appears that in the interest of justice the controversy should be decided without further delay the court has full power under the statute so to do."

See also: Kidder Oil Co. v. F.T.C., 117 F. 2d 892, 896 (7th Cir.).

III

Standard's objections to paragraph 2 of the Commission's order are without merit. Retention of that paragraph or its equivalent is essential to the effectiveness of the order.

Standard sells its branded gasoline at tank car prices to three wholesalers in the Detroit metropolitan area each of whom resells to from fifteen to sixty retail gasoline service stations in that area. The price at which these wholesalers resell is normally the posted tank wagon price of their supplier. They make deliveries by tank truck to their customers' service station tanks in the same manner that deliveries are made by Standard to its retailer customers.

Standard also sells its branded gasolines at its posted tank wagon price by tank truck delivery to some 350 retail service station operators in the Detroit area, who are engaged in competition with the tank wagon customers of the wholesalers.

This record shows without dispute that at the time this case was tried the wholsaler's price differential was sufficient to enable wholesalers buying in tank car quantities to resell at a profit to their retailer customers, or to some of them, at prices lower than Standard's tank wagon price.

The best, but not the only, evidence of this is the fact that the largest of the wholesalers, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, actually did so. Citrin-Kolb from 1936 to 1941 sold a million gallons of Standard's gasoline a year to the operator of a chain of five retail service stations in Detroit, delivered at the stations, at a cent a gallon below Standard's tank wagon price. The general manager of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company testified that "the only expense involved is the hauling and we can make money at hauling gasoline for a half a cent a gallon" (R. 1878-9). Citrin-Kolb Oil Company also gave a rebate of ½ cent a gallon off the posted tank wagon price to at least one other service station in Detroit during the period covered by the testimony in this case (Comm. Ex. 33, R. 4733).

We have shown at pages 15 and 16 of this brief that Standard's tank wagon customers are not at liberty to buy Standard's branded gasolines from wholesalers even if a wholesaler should offer them a price below Standard's tank wagon price. All of these 350 dealers are prevented either by means of short term leases or by contracts from purchasing from wholesalers, and Standard does not permit them to purchase in tank car quantities at tank car prices. In this situation, if a wholesalers passes along a part of his wholesale margin to certain of his retailer customers, selling to them below the price paid by Standard's direct retailer customers, the resulting competitive injury is the same as if the favored customers of the wholesaler purchased directly from Standard at the discriminatory price.

Section 2(a) of the Clayton Act prohibits discriminations in price in interstate commerce between purchasers of goods of like grade and quality, sold for resale, where the effect of the discrimination may be "to injure, destroy or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination, or with customers of either of them". The Commission has found that Standard's discrimination in price to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company had the effect of substantially lessening competition and injuring, destroying and preventing competition between the favored customers of Citrin-Kolb and other gasoline retailers. Upon the state of facts above outlined, this finding cannot be challenged, and Standard has not heretofore challenged it. Apart from its general defense of meeting competition, its objections to paragraph 2 of the Commission's order go only to the terms of that paragraph and amount at most to a plea for modification.

Paragraph 2 of the present order is the equivalent of paragraph 6 of the Commission's prior order as modified and affirmed by the court below in 1949.* The effect of the two paragraphs is the same, the difference in terminology being only one of emphasis. Both the old and new paragraphs offer Standard the same alternatives for compliance. Under either paragraph Standard might (1) discontinue selling to wholesalers and retailers in the same area at different prices, a practice which its two largest competititors in Detroit do not engage in; (2) narrow the differential between its wholesaler and retailer prices in such areas to the point where the differential can be cost justified; (3) reduce its tank wagon price when necessary to eliminate discrimination between its own retailer customers and those of its wholesalers; or (4) exercise its right to choose its customers by refusing to sell to a wholesaler known to be passing along part of its price differential to retailers competing with Standard's own retailer customers.

In the court below Standard made the same objections to paragraph 2 which it previouly raised here as to old paragraph 6. Its argument was, and still is, that this paragraph of the order would require resale price maintenance. The court below summarily dismissed this contention in 1949, and it has no more vitality now. As that court pointed out:

> "The petitioner does not have to make price control agreements with anyone. It has only to govern its own conduct to avoid the impact of an unlawful discrimination" (R. 5301).

Standard says that it should not have to be concerned with the prices at which its wholesalers resell because it cannot control those prices. It might as well argue that it should not have to be concerned with whether its jobber customers resell at retail because it cannot control the manner in which they resell.

Although paragraph 6 of the former order was the subject of some discussion in the briefs and argument in this Court in 1950, this Court in its opinion did not mention paragraph 6. If it had disapproved of this paragraph in substance or in terms it would almost certainly have made appropriate comment for the guidance of the Commission upon remand. The minority opinion suggested only that in the event of affirmance they might have concluded that "some amendment might be required in the wording of the order". If it be inferred that this reference was directed to paragraph 6, still there is no suggestion whatever that that paragraph was not approved in substance.

There is nothing startling about prohibiting a supplier from selling to wholesalers and retailers in the same sales area at a differential so great as to enable the wholesalers to undersell their supplier, where the retailer customers of the supplier cannot buy from wholesalers but are in direct competition with the wholesaler's customers. If the order did not include such a prohibition there would be nothing to prevent Ned's Auto Supply Company from transferring its business to Citrin-Kolb at a cent or more a gallon below the tank wagon price, delivered at Ned's stations. Ned's would obtain substantially the same competitive advantage over other retailers which it has obtained by purchasing in tank car quantities from Standard.

Standard would achieve the same result which it now obtains, merely using Citrin-Kolb as a conduit for sales to Ned's.

Contentions made by jobbers

Briefs filed in the court below by two jobber associations and by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company asserted that paragraph 2 of the Commission's order would place restrictions on them which they cannot accept "and still compete with other jobbers not similarly restricted".

Standard's three wholesalers, Citrin-Kolb, Wayne and Stikeman, supply about 100 service station customers in Detroit. The evidence is that except in only two instances (where Citrin-Kolb passed along part of its wholesale margin), each of these wholesalers has always resold to these retailer customers at Standard's tank wagon price. These 100 retailers, and the wholesalers as their suppliers, will be protected by the Commission's order against the injurious effects of Standard's price discrimination along with the 350 retailers purchasing direct from Standard. There is no evidence that any one of the three wholesalers ever lost a retailer customer through an offer of a lower price by a wholesaler of another major brand. Neither does it appear in the two instances where Citrin-Kolb resold to retailers at below the tank wagon price that it did so to meet such competition.

Another argument made by the jobbers is that enforcement of this order would simply result in these jobbers transferring their business to other suppliers at the same or lower prices, at some expense to themselves and loss to Standard, without any offsetting benefit to Standard's tank wagon customers. It is stated that they would still be able to buy "at the jobber price" from Michigan refiners or from some supplier selling only to tank car buyers in Detroit. This conjectured result does not find support in the facts of record.

The Michigan gasoline referred to is non-major or "off brand" gasoline which sells at a lower price, obviously has little public acceptance, and is a minor competitive factor. As to the claim that some suppliers sell exclusively to tank car buyers, the record shows no instance of a major oil company engaging in such operation in Detroit or other metropolitan areas. Standard's two largest competitors in Detroit (Sun and Socony-Vacuum) do not sell to jobbers.

It should not be forgotten that wholesaler associations were the principal lobbyists for the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act which was primarily directed against just the type of continuing preferential discounts to chains and other large buyers which the major oil companies have been granting here. The only wholesalers who might be adversely affected by this order are those who have been using their jobber price differential to gain an unfair competitive advantage in reselling at retail, or to discriminate among their own customers with the same result.

CONCLUSION

The judgment of the Court of Appeals should be reversed, with direction that a decree be entered affirming and enforcing the order of the Federal Trade Commission.

Respectfully submitted,

Appell, Austin & Gay,
Attorneys for National Congress of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. and Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, Inc.

Cyrus Austin,
Of Counsel.

APPENDIX

Affiliated Member Associations
National Congress of Petroleum Retailers—1957

Arizona	Arizona Gasoline Retailers Association 3341 N. 16th Street Phoenix, Arizona
	Tucson Service Station Operators Association, Inc. 1500 E. Broadway Tucson, Arizona
California	California Gasoline Retailers 1589 N. Fruit Avenue. Fresno, California
Colorado	Petroleum Retailers Association of Colorado 2402 Curtis, Room 207 Denver, Colorado
Delaware	Delaware Gasoline Dealers Association 903 Delaware Avenue Wilmington, Delaware
Dist. of Columbia	Metropolitan Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n., Inc. 5200 New Hampshire Avenue, N. W. Washington 11, D. C.
Florida	Allied Gasoline Retailers Association of Florida 208 Guaranty Life Building Jacksonville, Florida
Georgia	Georgia Association of Petroleum Retailers, Inc. 551 E. College Avenue Decatur, Georgia

Idaho

Petroleum Retailers of Greater Idaho, Inc.
P. O. Box 2253
Boise, Idaho

Illinois

Illinois Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n., Inc.
8 N. Ogden Avenue
Chicago 7, Illinois

Gasoline Retailers Association of Metropolitan Chicago
8 N. Ogden Avenue
Chicago, Illinois

Central Illinois Gasoline Dealers Association
Carpenters Bldg., 234 N. Madison Avenue
Peoria, Illinois

Indiana

Gasoline Retailers of Indiana
P. O. Box 241
Fort Wayne, Indiana

Gasoline Retailers of Greater Indianapolis, Inc.
917 Circle Tower Building
Indianapolis, Indiana

Iowa

Iowa Petroleum Retailers Association
316 Walnut Street
Des Moines, Iowa

Kentucky

Kentucky Gasoline Dealers Association, Inc.
200 W. Main Street
Louisville, Kentucky

Louisiana

Louisiana Petroleum Retail Dealers, Inc.
3915 Gilbert, P. O. Box 3631
Shreveport, Louisiana

Maryland	Independent Gasoline Dealers Ass'n. of Maryland 7517 Marston Road Baltimore 7, Maryland
Massachusetts	Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n. of Massachusetts, Inc. 1105 Commonwealth Avenue Boston 15, Massachusetts
Michigan	Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n of Michigan, Inc. 325 Farwell Building Detroit 26, Michigan
Minnesota	Northwest Retail Gasoline and Service Ass'n. 1821 University Avenue St. Paul, Minnesota
Minnesota and North Dakota	Cass-Clay Retail Gasoline Dealers Association 922 Center Avenue Moorhead, Minnesota
Missouri	Associated Petroleum Retailers of Greater St. Louis 6223 Juniata Street St. Louis 9, Missouri
Montana	Gallatin Petroleum Dealers Association 136 W. Main Street Bozeman, Montana
Nevada	Nevada Association of Petroleum Retailers 201 E. 4th Street Reno, Nevada
New Hampshire and Vermont	Gasoline Retail Dealers Ass'n of New Hampshire, Inc. 653 Main Street, Masonic Temple Bldg. Laconia, New Hampshire

New Mexico	New Mexico Service Station Association P. O. Box 422 Albuquerque, New Mexico
New York	Gasoline Merchants of Brooklyn, Inc. 1640 Eastern Parkway Brooklyn 33, New York
	Buffalo and Suburban Gasoline Retailers Ass'n. 405 S. Union Road Williamsville 21, New York
	Suffolk County Gasoline Retailers Ass'n., Inc. 38 Oakdale Avenue Central Islip, New York
	Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n. of Monroe County 130 Franklin Square Rochester 5, New York
	Niagara Falls Gasoline Dealers Association 770 Main Street Niagara Falls, New York
	Inter-City Gasoline Dealers Association 101 Cedar Street New York 6, New York
North Carolina	North Carolina Service Station Association 2514 Farthing Street Durham, North Carolina
Ohio	Ohio Gasoline Dealers Association 970 Spitzer Building Toledo 4, Ohio

Ohio

Summit County Gasoline Dealers Ass'n., Inc.
229 Madison Avenue
Akron 20, Ohio

Independent Gasoline Dealers, Inc.
2319 McGuffey Road
Youngstown, Ohio

Ashland County Gasoline Dealers Association
141 Clarimont Avenue
Ashland, Ohio

Stark County Gasoline Dealers Association
624 S. Main Street
N. Canton, Ohio

Central Ohio Gasoline Dealers Association
1738 Ashland Avenue
Columbus 12, Ohio

Muskegum Gasoline Dealers Association
530 Commissioner Street
Zanesville, Ohio.

Northwestern Ohio Gasoline Dealers Association
970 Spitzer Building
Toledo 4, Ohio

Greater Cincinnati Gasoline Dealers Association
785 Clanora Drive
Cincinnati 5, Ohio

Cleveland Independent Gasoline Dealers Ass'n. Inc.
4730 Woodland Avenue
Cleveland, Ohio

Oklahoma

Oklahoma Gasoline Retailers Association, Inc.
208 Wright Building Annex
Tulsa 3, Oklahoma

Oregon

Portland Automotive Trades Association
1832 S. W. 11th Street
Portland 1, Oregon

Pennsylvania

Associated Retail Gasoline Dealers, Inc.
5991 Center Avenue
Pittsburgh 6, Pennsylvania

South Dakota

Gasoline Retailers Association of Sioux Falls
P. O. Box 396
Sioux Falls, South Dakota

Tennessee

Tennessee Service Station Association, Inc.
308 Cherokee Building, P. O. Box 303
Knoxville, Tennessee

Texas

Texas Service Stations Associated 1509 Guadalupe
Austin, Texas

Utah

Utah Association of Petroleum Retailers
202 Crandall Building, P. O. Box 1251
Salt Lake City, Utah

Virginia

Virginia Gasoline Retailers Association, Inc.
Peoples Federal Building
Roanoke, Virginia

Roanoke Valley Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n.
Peoples Federal Building
Roanoke, Virginia

Virginia	Tidewater Independent Gasoline Dealers Ass'n. 3119 Elm Avenue, P. O. Box 707 Portsmouth, Virginia
Washington	Washington Gasoline Dealers Association, Inc. 127 Mercer Street Seattle 9, Washington
West Virginia	West Virginia Gasoline Retail Dealers Ass'n., Inc. 1100 Fairmont Avenue Fairmont, West Virginia
Wisconsin	Retail Gasoline Dealers Ass'n. of Wisconsin, Inc. Route #3 Lake Geneva, Wisconsin

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT, U.S.

Office - Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
OCT 25 1957
JOHN T. FEY, Clerk

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

No. 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, Respondent

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE

FOR

EMPIRE STATE PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION

NATIONAL OIL JOBBERS ASSOCIATION, INC., AND MEMBER ASSOCIATIONS IN APPENDIX A

WILLIAM SIMON
ROBERT L. WALD
JOHN BODNER, JR.
1300 Connecticut Avenue
Washington, D. C.

Attorneys for Empire State Petroleum Association

OTIS H. ELLIS
1001 Connecticut Avenue
Washington, D. C.

Attorney for National Oil Jobbers Association and Member Associations

October 1957

INDEX

Page

Interest of Amici Curiae 1

1. Statement of the Case 4

2. The Economic Function Performed by Jobbers in Gasoline Distribution 5

Argument

I. The Commission's decision disregards the wholesale function in gasoline distribution, encourages elimination of independent jobbers and will not help retailers 8

II. The Commission refuses to follow this Court's 1951 decision. It now adopts a theory unsupported by its own findings, contrary to the undisputed facts, and in conflict with the law as stated by this Court 16

A. The Commission's historical opposition to the views expressed in this Court's 1951 decision and its request to Congress to overturn the decision 16

B. The "afterthought" argument of an alleged illegal pricing system of the type condemned in Staley and Cement 17

C. The actual grounds assigned in the Commission's decision for not finding good faith—now relegated to a subsidiary portion of the argument—were all raised and rejected in this Court's prior decision 23

D. The Commission persists in equating normal, hard competition with theoretical "injury" to competition 24

Conclusion 26

Appendix A 28

CITATIONS

CASES: Page

Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U. S. 726 18
Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U. S. 746 .... 18, 19, 20, 23
Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 332 U. S. 683 .... 18, 19, 20
Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 173 F. 2d 210 11
  340 U. S. 231 .... 5, 11, 17, 26
Standard Oil Company v. Federal Trade Commission, 233 F. 2d 649 .... 17, 20, 23, 24
Standard Oil Company v. United States, 337 U. S. 293 10

STATUTE:

Clayton Act, as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act, 49 Stat. 1526, Section 2, 15 U.S.C. 13 .... 4, 23

ARTICLES:

Adelman, Integration and Antitrust Policy, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27 (1949) 11, 12
Functional Discounts Under the Robinson-Patman Act: The Standard Oil Litigation, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294 (1953) 8
McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398 (1956) 19
The Swinging Door—or How to Obey One Antitrust Law by Violating Another, 59 Yale L. J. 158 (1949) 11

OTHER:

Hearings, House Judiciary Committee, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 17
Hearings, House Judiciary Committee, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. 16
Hearings, House Small Business Committee, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. 21
H. Rep. 2966, 84 Cong., 2d Sess. 2
Letter of FTC Chairman, March 16, 1953 16
Sen. Rep. 293, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. 16

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1957

No. 24

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION, Petitioner,

vs.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY, Respondent

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE

FOR

EMPIRE STATE PETROLEUM ASSOCIATION

NATIONAL OIL JOBBERS ASSOCIATION, INC., AND MEMBER ASSOCIATIONS IN APPENDIX A

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Empire State Petroleum Association, Inc. is a trade association of the independent petroleum jobbers and wholesalers of New York State. The National Oil Jobbers Council, Inc. is a federation of similar state and regional jobber associations; its member groups, who join in this brief, are listed in Appendix A and represent thousands of independent petroleum jobbers.

Empire State has appeared, amicus curiae, at all stages in this litigation since 1949. National Oil Jobbers Council filed a separate brief, amicus curiae, in the court below, and several of its members joined Empire State in its brief before this Court in 1951.

These independent petroleum jobbers have a direct and vital interest in the disposition of this proceeding. They oppose the position of the Federal Trade Commission and have done so throughout this proceeding. If the Commission's view prevails, the independent jobber function in gasoline distribution will be seriously jeopardized.

This proceeding was initiated by the Commission seventeen years ago on a complaint filed in 1939 by retail gasoline dealers who appear here, amici curiae, in support of the Commission decision.[1] (Their present counsel was formerly the Commission attorney prosecuting the complaint.)[2] These retailers avowedly sought to use the 1936 Robinson-Patman Amendment to the Clayton Act and the 1937 Miller-Tydings Amendment to the Sherman Act, to achieve anti-competitive pricing of the character the antitrust laws were designed to prohibit.[3]

---

[1] "Complaints to the FTC in 1939 by the Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, among others, led to the Standard (Indiana) case." H. Rep. 2966, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 167 (1956).

[2] See Retailers Brief, p. 7.

[3] The primary interest of these retailers is retail price fixing. During trial, Standard placed in evidence articles from the Retail Gas Dealers' News, the official journal of amicus Retail Gas Dealers of Michigan. These are typical:

> "PREPARE FOR STATE-WIDE STABILITY
>
> Federal Hearing Could "Cinch" Fair Trade for All Michigan Gas Dealers
>
> When will the Federal [Trade Commission] Hearing begin? . . .
>
> The ultimate result will benefit the entire State. With the proper follow-up as contemplated by the Association, all of Michigan will be rid of subsidy and chiseling and the illegitimate children of these ogres—price wars and lost sales."
>
> (Retail Gas Dealers' News, August, 1940, R. 76)

* * * * * * * * * * *

> "DEALERS ACCLAIM U. S. ACTION
>
> Simultaneous with the Federal Trade Commission's announce-

The brief of the retailer amici is based on the premise that reinstating the Commission's order will achieve (noncompetitive) price stability—a premise patently in conflict with national antitrust policy and contrary to the realities of gasoline marketing.

Historically, these retailers have sought to eliminate price competition. Their goal, however, can be accomplished effectively only through the use of "Fair Trade" by all sellers or by a price-fixing conspiracy. It cannot be accomplished through this Federal Trade Commission decision.

Retailers' expectations are accurate only to the extent that they anticipate the Commission's decision will effectively prevent Standard from selling simultaneously to both retailers and jobbers. But it would still not prevent jobbers from lawfully buying elsewhere at tank car prices: Many refiners sell gasoline only in tank car quantities at tank car prices. A number of major suppliers, who sell to retailers in some markets, sell only to jobbers in other markets. Still others market gasoline purely on an intrastate basis.

Notwithstanding the retailers' contrary statements, gasoline is freely available at the tank car price to any jobber who has the credit and the facilities to buy in tank car quantities. Despite these retailers' hopes for jobber liquidation, jobbers will continue to exercise their (unwelcome) competitive influence on gasoline distribution.

While achieving no benefits for retailers, the Commission's decision would have a harsh impact on jobbers. It would: (a) force jobbers (whose present suppliers also sell ment of [complaints against Standard and others] came the news that the Battle-Creek-Kalamazoo area had responded to Association efforts. Market stability had been attained. . . ."

---

(Retail Gas Dealers' News, January, 1941, R. 87)

* * *

"DOOM AT HAND FOR SECRET REBATES

Combination of bright prospects for gasoline dealers: a favorable verdict in the Federal Trade Commission's complaint of price discrimination in Michigan; and passage of . . . the new improved fair trade law."

(Retail Gas Dealers' News, April, 1941, R. 85)

direct to retailers) to shift, at great expense, to other suppliers selling only to jobbers; (b) encourage suppliers to assume the distribution functions formerly performed by their jobbers in order to retain the retail customers of the ex-jobbers; and (c) reduce the number of suppliers competing for jobber business (as suppliers selling retailers abandon sales to jobbers).

1. Statement of the Case.

The Commission complaint, filed November 29, 1940, charged price reductions in the sale of gasoline to four Detroit jobber customers of Standard, resulting in an alleged injury to competition among gasoline retailers, in violation of Section 2(a) of the Robinson-Patman Amendment. Standard previously had lost 3 other jobbers to competitors offering lower prices (R. 1912-1916). This Court has previously noted, and the Commission tacitly concedes, that the price reductions at issue were made to retain those customers, in response to lower prices offered the four buyers by Standard's competitors.

The Commission expressly found that Standard had reason to believe it would lose those customers to competitors offering lower prices if it did not grant the lower prices. The lawfulness of Standard's competitors' prices stand unchallenged on this record; the Commission has persistently refused to make any finding as to their legality, despite requests by Standard and these amici to do so.

The evidence largely concerned 1936-38 sales of "distress" gasoline in the "demoralized" Detroit area (R. 5116)). The Examiner found the market characterized by "price cutting orgies" (R. 5118). Detroit was a "dumping ground" for surplus gasoline from the Mid-Continent fields. One Commissioner described competition as "dog-eat-dog" (R. 5416).

The market instability was pervasive: this Court found that the competitive effect would have been the same on the retailers whether or not Standard met the competitors' lower prices. But the Commission view here would prohibit a petroleum supplier—whether a major refiner or a jobber—from retaining a customer by meeting a price that is already lawfully available to the buyer from a competing supplier. This rule of law is, of course, applicable to 1957 commercial conduct, although based exclusively on evidence arising out of the depressed mid-30s. It would place independent petroleum jobbers in an ever tightening competitive vise; but it would in no way affect price competition among retailers.

In 1951, this Court held that "meeting competition" was a full defense and remanded the case to the Commission "to make findings in conformity with the opinion of this Court." That decision required the Commission to find "good faith" unless the Commission found the competitors' lower prices unlawful, or produced additional evidence negativing "good faith." Yet the Commission offered no new evidence and declined to find that the competitors' lower prices were unlawful.

2. The Economic Function Performed by Jobbers in Gasoline Distribution.

An understanding of the function of independent jobbers in gasoline distribution is critical to an understanding of the impact this case will have on those jobbers.

Gasoline for motor vehicles originates in a "refinery" and is pumped ultimately from underground tanks in a retail service station into the gasoline tanks of vehicles. In simplest terms this case is about how gasoline gets from the refinery to the retailer's tank.

A retailer owns or leases his service station. Gasoline is delivered to his station in trucks called "tank wagons."[4] The storage capacity of a service station is limited. Frequent deliveries of gasoline are necessary to meet the demand. Tank wagon trucks delivering this gasoline may be owned by the supplier-refiner, in which case they are supplied out of the refiner's own storage facilities, or they may be owned and operated by an independent gasoline jobber, in which case they are supplied out of storage facilities owned by the jobber.

---

[4] 700 to 800 gallons was the average tank-wagon delivery at the time of the hearing; modern tank-wagons are somewhat larger.

The jobber fulfills the intermediary distribution functions which the supplier would otherwise have to perform himself if he were to deliver directly to retailers. A jobber must own a "bulk plant" for storage of large quantities of gasoline shipped to him either directly from the refinery or from a storage terminal maintained by the refiner. The jobber is supplied in "tank-car" quantities or greater. A tank-car shipment, ordinarily 8,000 to 12,000 gallons, is many times larger than a tank-wagon shipment. Jobbers may receive deliveries, as well, by barge (20,000 barrels of 42 gallons each) or even by oil tanker (125,000 42-gallon barrels). Jobbers are also supplied by pipeline.

Jobbers function principally to maintain an even, continuing flow of distribution at the local level. They operate fleets of trucks for local deliveries to service stations and maintain bulk storage facilities to receive large-scale shipments of gasoline. The maintenance of adequate jobber facilities requires a large capital investment, and jobbers frequently extend a line of credit to their service station customers and finance all or a part of the local advertising of their products.

The evolution of independent gasoline jobbers is a typical story of American enterprise. Most gasoline jobbers start out as retailers. After nurturing one profitable service station, a dealer may acquire a second, a third, and more stations. He may, in time, acquire volume commercial accounts. Small retailers may purchase their gasoline requirements through him. With growth his total volume of business may expand to a point where it is prudent for him to invest in a bulk plant and in tank-wagon distribution facilities. At this point he becomes, in physical terms, a jobber as well as a retailer, meaning that he is capable of performing intermediary wholesale functions of storage and distribution between refiner and retailer. When he attains this status, gasoline is freely available to him from many sources in the industry at a jobber or tank-car price.

This growth from retailer to jobber is, in fact, the actual history of most gasoline jobbers. Few jobbers enter into business full-grown. Almost inevitably, the emergence of a jobber is through his former identity as a retailer. But it would be impossible for a retailer, however efficient and aggressive, to expand his operations and become a jobber if he were compelled, at that point where he first undertakes jobber functions, to abandon his retail operations.

Once established, jobbers prefer not to operate retail stations; generally they lease their stations to other operators. This tendency is confirmed by the record in this case which shows that, after 1936, Wayne, Stikeman, and Citrin-Kolb (3 of the 4 buyers whose purchases are here at issue) sold only from 0.3% to 15.4% of their gasoline purchases at retail. After 1938, Stikeman abandoned all retail selling, and by the time the Commission's complaint issued herein in 1940, Wayne and Citrin-Kolb had limited retail operations to those temporary periods when one or more of their stations were without a lessee.

ARGUMENT

I

THE COMMISSION'S DECISION DISREGARDS THE WHOLESALE FUNCTION IN GASOLINE DISTRIBUTION, ENCOURAGES ELIMINATION OF INDEPENDENT JOBBERS AND WILL NOT HELP RETAILERS.

The immediate impact of the Commission's decision will be felt primarily by gasoline jobbers, not by Standard.[5] It will have no effect upon competition among retailers. The Commission's decision, through circumvention, achieves precisely the same anti-competitive result rejected by this Court in 1951. If validated, the Commission's theory will drive many jobbers from business, will compel numbers of surviving jobbers to shift suppliers at great loss, will drastically weaken competition among suppliers for jobber business, and will spur displacement of independent jobbers by the major oil companies themselves.

This threat to jobbers was recognized during oral argument before this Court in the prior appeal. Mr. Justice Black said to Commission counsel: "Are you attacking the wholesale system and trying to put the wholesalers out of business . . . from what you have just said in your answer to the question of Justice Frankfurter it sounds like you are . . ."[6]

The threat remains.

The Commission and the retailer amici ignore the jobber function. They consistently describe the tank car price as a "quantity discount" or the "allowance of an unearned discount." They treat the issues here as though there were no distinction between a refiner's tank car deliveries to a jobber's bulk plant and its tank wagon deliveries to a retailer's service station pumps. (See, e.g., Retailers Brief, pp. 34-5). They assume that the performance of wholesaling distribution functions cost the jobber nothing.

---

[5] See generally, Functional Discounts under the Robinson-Patman Act: The Standard Oil Litigation, 67 Harv. L. Rev. 294, 312-317 (1953).

[6] Transcript of Oral Argument, pp. 101-102.

Yet the Commission found, as did this Court in 1951, that each of the customers whose purchases are here at issue maintained its own bulk plant, had fleets of tank wagons for local service station distribution, and had sufficient credit responsibility and physical facilities for wholesale operations. The trial examiner and the Commission both found that these customers would be granted a lower tank-car price by many suppliers.

The future of the independent jobber is at best uncertain. The weight of capital investment to establish a going concern is heavy. Jobbers of major-brand gasoline must invest heavily in the brand name of their supplier. They frequently must build and lease to retailers service stations conforming to an architectural style of the supplier. They must brand their stations and trucks with the colors and mark of the supplier and promote the supplier's brand on signs or billboards.

The jobber level of distribution is fiercely competitive. Jobbers compete not only with other jobbers but also with major suppliers. Not unusually, jobbers are compelled by supplier-competition to furnish pumps, to paint stations, even to pave driveways for service station customers.

The cost of performing the jobber function, plus a fair profit, is substantially equal to the margin between the tank-car and the tank-wagon prices. If the jobber function could be performed for less than this price spread, suppliers would perform it themselves, rather than permit jobbers to do so. This is simple commercial realism. As the retailer amici state, the major suppliers are not anxious to sell at lower tank car price, and do not when it is not to their advantage to do so (Retailers Brief, pp. 9-11).

Gasoline jobbers are, inelegantly, the goat of this proceeding. The likely result of an endorsement of the Commission view here will be the decline or outright elimination of the independent jobber function in oil distribution. The logical consequence of the modified decision pressed here by the Commission "favors rather than discourages monopoly" and would bring full circle "the tragic loss to the nation" foreseen by Mr. Justice Douglas in his dissent in Standard Oil Company v. U. S., 337 U.S. 293. His words have an almost uncanny pertinence in 1957:

> "Today there is vigorous competition between the oil companies for the market. That competition has left some room for the survival of the independents. But when this inducement for their survival is taken away, we can expect that the oil companies will move in to supplant them with their own stations. There will still be competition between the oil companies. But there will be a tragic loss to the nation. The small, independent businessman will be supplanted by clerks. The oil companies will command an increasingly larger share of both the wholesale and the retail markets" 337 U.S. at 320-21.

There can be no inducement for the long-range survival of independent jobbers if the Commission's view prevails. As a matter of simple business pragmatics, the Commission's decision inevitably will accelerate the supplanting of independent jobbers by the oil companies themselves.

While the precise terms of the Commission's order may or may not, in a technical sense, be before this Court,[7] it is fundamental that the Court must concern itself with what the Commission seeks to accomplish through its decision. The order to cease and desist embodied in the Commission's 1953 modified findings is the fourth order drafted in the course of this proceeding. Yet, manifestly, it suffers from the same infirmities as its predecessor orders—so roundly censored by courts and commentators alike—and it would most surely have the same debilitating effect upon independent jobber competition as the earlier orders. The fact is that the Commission, so long as it persists in its present course, cannot draw an order which will not gravely injure jobbers.

---

[7] The Commission contends that the only matter before this Court is the ruling of the Court of Appeals, and should this Court reverse that decision, it should then remand to the Court of Appeals for the consideration of the appropriateness of the Commission's order (Brief p. 24, n. 10).

The effect of the Commission's order before this Court in 1951 was clearly to sanction the outright purge of jobbers by Standard or else to compel unlawful resale price maintenance. The Court of Appeals, in its 1949 opinion affirming the Commission, stated frankly:

> "To avoid the force of [the order], the petitioner may do one of two things. First, discontinue selling to wholesalers at a price different than that made to retailers. . . .
>
> "Secondly, the petitioner may under the right to choose its customers refuse to sell to wholesalers who sell to retailers below the price the petitioner makes to its own retailers . . ." (173 F. 2d 210, 217)

It was presumably the restrictiveness of this anti-competitive option which led the dissenting Justices in this Court in 1951 to conclude:

> "We would affirm the decree below, in principal, even though we should conclude some amendment might be required in the wording of the order" (340 U.S. at 267).

The conflict of such an order with the basic purposes of other antitrust laws has been seriously attacked.[8]

The Commission's present order, though simplified, is essentially the same as the earlier orders.[9] The changes are semantic only. This fact is frankly conceded by the retailer amici. They state:

---

[8] See, e.g., The Swinging Door—Or How to Obey One Antitrust Law by Violating Another, 59 Yale L. J. 158 (1949). Adelman, Integration and Antitrust Policy, 63 Harv. L. Rev. 27, 72-74 (1949).

[9] The 1953 order bars:

> ". . . selling such gasoline to any retailer thereof at a lower price than to any other retailer who in fact competes with the favored purchaser in the resale of such gasoline to the public ("Retailer" as here used applies to that portion of the business of any purchaser which consists of the retail sale of gasoline to the public.)

and

> ". . . selling such gasoline to any retailer at a price known by respondent to be higher than the price at which any wholesaler-purchaser is reselling such gasoline to any retailer who competes with such direct retailer-customers . . ." (R. 5392)

> "The present order is the equivalent . . . of the Commission's prior order as modified and affirmed by the Court below in 1949. The effect of the two paragraphs is the same, the difference in terminology being only one of emphasis. Both the old and new paragraphs offer Standard the same alternatives for compliance" (Retailer's Brief, p. 33).

The Commission's decision would: (1) deny jobbers (of suppliers who also sell to retailers) any compensation for the jobber distribution function they perform on gasoline ultimately resold through a station they operate; (2) compel many jobbers to shift suppliers at great financial loss without countervailing gain to competition, eliminating a major degree of competition among suppliers for jobbers sales; (3) compel unlawful resale price maintenance; and (4) encourage forward vertical integration by the major oil companies:

(1) Under the Commission's decision, the jobber is classified as a "retailer" and must purchase at the retail price all gasoline which he resells at retail, even though he performs all the wholesale distribution functions such as storage and delivery. In effect, he is discriminated against, for he must perform those functions himself without compensation.[10] And even if, as a technical matter, the jobber were permitted a lower price in the amount of the supplier's cost-savings in marketing through him, the jobber would still be discriminated against; he would receive only partial compensation. He would not be entitled to any interest on his investment, or profit, while the supplier would receive a phantom profit on the distributive functions performed by jobbers and a phantom return on the jobber's investment in facilities to perform the function.

Insofar as the Commission would theoretically permit suppliers, who sell to both dual-functioning jobbers and to retailers, to continue selling to the jobbers by segregating that portion of the jobber sales which will be resold at wholesale and apportioning a functional discount thereon, the whole concept of a seller requiring from his customers detailed accountings of what they do with their own property after purchase is, like resale price maintenance, totally alien to a system of independent enterprise and lends itself to snooping, deception, control and abuse.

---

[10] See Adelman, op. cit., supra, 63.

(2) The basic theory of the Commission's case requires jobbers to resell to retailers only at Standard's tank-wagon price in order to maintain retail price uniformity. Jobbers cannot competitively accept such restrictions and still compete with other jobbers not similarly restricted. As a simple matter of business survival they must shift to other, unfettered suppliers, thus eliminating their former supplier as a source of supply. This necessarily reduces competition among suppliers for jobber business. And the necessity for jobbers to give up existing suppliers would destroy jobber investments in real estate, pumps, signs and other facilities carrying their supplier's trade banner.

Yet even then, as a practical matter, the Commission's decision would not foreclose jobbers from purchasing elsewhere at a tank-car price. The decision would only succeed in barring Standard's jobbers from preserving their investment in Standard's trade name and good will, and would compel them to shift to other suppliers at great physical burden and financial sacrifice.

(3) The sharpest criticism leveled at the Commission's early decision was that it would force Standard to engage in resale price maintenance if it were to continue selling to jobbers at all. The earlier order required Standard to discontinue selling to any jobber who resold to retailers below the price Standard charged its retail customers. In effect, it would have required each of Standard's jobber customers to maintain Standard's tank wagon price at the risk of being cut off by Standard. The Court of Appeals in 1949 denied that the order would compel resale price maintenance on the ground that it did not technically require Standard to enter into resale price contracts; but this essentially ostrich-like response drew this comment from Mr. Justice Jackson, during oral argument:[11]

> "If Standard did just what they are ordered to do by this, they certainly would be in danger of prosecution, would they not, if they did it voluntarily without an order? * * * If I was enforcing the Sherman Antitrust Act and I thought they were making provision not to supply anybody who did not maintain their prices, I would give them some trouble. I do not see how the Department of Justice could fail to strike at that sort of a voluntary arrangement as a restraint of trade, holding up prices."

There is no substantive change in the Commission's present decision and order. It requires Standard to charge all of its 358 retail customers the lowest price that any of its four jobber customers may charge to any of their customers. It is difficult to believe that any supplier, with four jobber customers, would permit a jobber to depart from the supplier's price to its retailers—if the penalty for permitting that independent competitive action was that the supplier be required to reduce its price to 358 other customers.

Instead of requiring that the deviating jobber be cut off, as the earlier order did, the present order requires the supplier to reduce its price to all of its customers to meet the lowest price offered by any of the jobber customers. Even more effectively than before it insures that no jobber will resell gasoline at other than the supplier's price to its retailer customers, for the earlier order put the penalty on the jobber and this one puts it on Standard. The order was obviously intended to accomplish just that purpose, for the Commission must know that Standard, as a practical business matter, would not let a jobber reduce his price to so much as one station if doing so required Standard to lower its price to 358 other customers. Whatever the route followed, the result is the same: resale price fixing.

---

[11] Transcript of Oral Argument, pp. 88-89.

(4) The Commission's decision invites eventual forward vertical integration by oil suppliers. The alternative to a heavily policed system of jobber surveillance and resale price maintenance, which the Commission would require if Standard continues selling to jobbers, is for Standard to assume the intermediary distributive role of the jobber and in time to cut off jobber sales entirely. While this, on its face, seems a drastic step, it is a development that may reasonably be expected under the Commission's order. The elaborate system of supplier supervision over the sales of dual-functioning jobbers, and the rigid supplier controls which would be required in order to maintain strict price conformity among jobbers would probably prove anathema to any business. Rather than assume this role and risk the hazards of non-compliance, a supplier, such as Standard, would seek to bypass the jobber and sell directly to the jobbers' retail customers.

Added to these pressures are the market restrictions which the order places upon Standard's jobbers themselves which would aid in disintegrating those jobber operations and would leave a distributive vacuum that only the supplier could fill. While this Court has held that Standard can reduce its price in good faith to meet a lower price of a competitor (although the Commission would seek to frustrate that ruling), the Commission would effectively bar Standard's jobber customers from meeting in good faith the lower price of their competitors.

There is no practical difference between the Commission's present decision and its earlier decision. Standard must force into price conformity any jobber known by it to be reselling to retailers below the tank-wagon price, or cut him off, without regard to the reasons, however justifiable in legal terms, for the jobber's lower price.

When a supplier cuts off a jobber, it may be assumed that the supplier will move into that gap and seek to retain the jobber's retailer customers by selling directly to them. Even if the jobber then finds a new supplier he will have to develop an entirely new retailer clientele in the face of aggressive, tightly-entrenched jobber and supplier competition.

II

THE COMMISSION REFUSES TO FOLLOW THIS COURT'S 1951 DECISION. IT NOW ADOPTS A THEORY UNSUPPORTED BY ITS OWN FINDINGS. CONTRARY TO THE UNDISPUTED FACTS. AND IN CONFLICT WITH THE LAW AS STATED BY THIS COURT.

A. The Commission's Historical Opposition to the Views Expressed in This Court's 1951 Decision and Its Request to Congress to Overturn the Decision.

This appeal represents the final attempt of the Commission to reach the result repudiated by this Court in 1951. The Commission's unrelenting position can best be understood in the light of its own public statements.

Unwilling to accept this Court's holding, the Commission majority (Commissioner Mason dissenting) in April, 1951 urged Congress to overturn the decision. The Standard decision, the Commission's chairman wrote, "reaffirmed the good-faith proviso as a complete defense regardless of the effects which may flow from discrimination" and, he said, "raises the anomaly of monopoly power being permitted to use the same weapons to maintain itself which are denied to others for fear of creating a monopoly." [12] In June 1951, another Commissioner, spokesman for the majority, again bitterly assailed the decision, before the House Judiciary Committee and urged nullifying legislation.[13]

In that context of strident philosophical opposition to the Court's decision the Commission, on remand, made its modified 1953 findings (two Commissioners dissenting). Two months later, in a letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee (the Commissioners who dissented from the modified findings also dissenting), the Commission Chairman wrote:[14]

---

[12] Letter of FTC Chairman Mead, April 18, 1951, Sen. Rep. 293, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. 7 (1951).

[13] Testimony of FTC Commissioner Spingarn, Hearings before Subcommittee on Monopoly Power, House Judiciary Committee, 82d Cong., 1st Sess. 21 (1951).

> "The present law, as interpreted by the majority decision of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil of Indiana case (340 U.S. 231) is in the opinion of the Commission too weak to meet the problem to which the Robinson-Patman Amendment was originally addressed."

Again, on April 19, 1956, speaking for a majority of the Commissioners before the House Judiciary Committee, a member of the Commission said:[15]

> "H. R. 11 would largely overturn the Standard Oil of Indiana decision. This would remove the grave potentialities for an impaired antitrust policy that are inherent in the Standard Oil holding, by reinstating the original concept of the Robinson-Patman Act. . . .
>
> "I am frank to admit that I believe the Supreme Court's holding in Standard Oil of Indiana to have been founded on a misapprehension of the legislative purpose behind the good-faith proviso and, indeed, behind the Robinson-Patman Act generally." (Emphasis added.)

The decision now under review is not responsive to this Court's 1951 mandate, but to long-held views of a Commission majority which has been, and is, bent on frustrating the directive of this Court.

B. The "Afterthought" Argument of an Alleged Illegal Pricing System of the Type Condemned in Staley and Cement.

In the Court of Appeals, Commission counsel argued, for the first time, that Standard "adhered to a price system in reducing its prices to the four jobbers." The court characterized this argument as an "afterthought" which was "designed to bring the case within the scope of the system condemned by the Supreme Court in the Staley and kindred cases." 233 F. 2d 649, 653.

---

[14] Letter of FTC Chairman Mead to Chairman, Senate Judiciary Committee, March 16, 1953.

[15] Testimony of Commissioner Kern, Hearings before Antitrust Subcommittee, House Judiciary Committee, 84th Cong., 2d Sess. 206 (1956).

This "afterthought" pricing system theory, now the Commission's principal contention in this Court, depends wholly upon the existence of a "price system" of the type condemned in the Staley and Cement cases.[16] The argument was plainly improvised on appeal to circumvent this Court's 1951 decision. It is now presented to this Court as if it were the basis of the Commission's decision and order, although no mention was made of either Staley or Cement in the decision on remand.

The Commission's 1953 silence is understandable: both Staley and Cement were entirely distinct cases, involving the use of inherently discriminatory pricing systems.

The complaint in Staley charged the seller with having mechanically adopted in their entirety not only the lower but also the higher prices of its competitor, Corn Products Refining Company. In a companion case the Commission found, and this Court affirmed, that Corn Products' prices were unlawful.[17]

The complaint in Cement charged, and the Commission and this Court found, a conspiracy among all producers of cement to use a common multiple basing point system.

In contrast, the complaint in this case charged solely and specifically the granting of a lower price to four named individual customers. There was no charge in the complaint and no finding by the Commission of a pricing system or of unlawfulness in competitors' prices.

Nowhere in the complaint, in the Commission's detailed 1945 decision, nor in its modified 1953 findings is the term "pricing system" used in reference either to Standard's or to its competitors' prices. Yet, in its brief in this Court, we find nearly 100 references to "system," "pricing system," and "systematic pricing."

While the Staley case was decided by this Court several months prior to the Commission's original 1945 decision, and was the sole Supreme Court decision interpreting

---

[16] Federal Trade Commission v. A. E. Staley Mfg. Co., 324 U.S. 746 (1945); Federal Trade Commission v. Cement Institute, 333 U.S. 683 (1948).

[17] Corn Products Refining Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 324 U.S. 726 (1945).

Section 2(b) at that time, the Commission made no reference to Staley. And the Commission's modified 1953 decision failed to refer either to Staley or to Cement—upon which cases the Commission now claims its decision was primarily founded. But the brief of the Commission before this Court abounds with references to the two cases: 43 times to Staley and 27 times to Cement.

In attempting to bring this case within the doctrine of the basing point decisions, the Commission makes essentially two arguments: First, that Standard used a "general pricing system" in granting price concessions to four of its 362 Detroit customers. Second, that Standard's price reductions to the four jobbers were made in response to lower prices made by competitors pursuant to their own general pricing systems. Both contentions must fail, for the record conclusively shows that Standard's lower prices to Ned's, Citrin-Kolb, Wayne and Stikeman were made as reductions from a pre-existing uniform price scale and were made in good faith, in individual competitive situations, to meet the equally low prices offered by competitors.[18]

The evidence compels the following conclusions (which the Commission has never contested): that from 1921-1940 Standard's share of the Detroit market gradually declined; that Standard had lost three jobber customers to competitors' lower-price offers; that the price reductions to the four jobbers were made in response to numerous and continuing specific offers from rival companies; that the price reductions were not below the competitors' offers; that if Standard had not granted the price reductions it would have lost the four jobbers; and that the price reductions were granted to retain and not to gain customers.

---

[18] See McGee, Price Discrimination and Competitive Effects: The Standard Oil of Indiana Case, 23 U. of Chi. L. Rev. 398 (1956). The article reviews all the evidence relating to offers by rival companies to Standard's four jobbers and concludes that "Standard's four remaining jobbers were not passive agents in the process of price-making at the wholesale level. They had to bargain for what they got, and they bargained hard and well. Their supplier was evidently unwilling to give them better terms than it had to give, and it calculated well just what it would take to keep their business" (p. 435).

In short, each of the price reductions made by Standard was in accordance with every requirement of the statutory defense of "meeting competition." Indeed, if anything is remarkable about Standard's use of the defense, it is the fact that it was used so conservatively in view of the competitive activity in the Detroit gasoline market.

According to the Commission's theory, a seller apparently must meet all competitive offers, for as soon as he exercises restraint he is, ipso facto, using a discriminatory general pricing system. This assertion is plainly without merit. The court below rightly rejected it, and declared that "a seller must be permitted in the exercise of a sound judgment to determine when and under what circumstances it will reduce its price in order to meet that of a competitor," 233 F. 2d at 654.

The other side of the Commission's pricing system argument is that Standard's price reductions were in response to prices of competitors who themselves were using a pricing system, a practice condemned by this Court's holding in its Staley and Cement decisions. But the analogy with Staley and Cement is inapposite, and the Commission's assumption that the prices of other suppliers selling to jobbers in Detroit were unlawful is unwarranted.

The Staley Company, entering the glucose market, adopted in its entirety the unlawful basing point system used by the market leader, Corn Products, and then sought to justify the illegal pricing system on the ground that it was simply matching the prices of a competitor. This Court rejected the argument.

Cement reiterated the Staley doctrine, holding that the meeting competition defense did not permit sellers to adopt a conspiratorial, industry-wide, multiple-price basing point system on the ground that they were simply meeting the lower prices of competitors using the same system.

This record provides no basis for an equation with Staley and Cement, ~~in each~~ of which cases this Court expressly found the competitors' prices illegal. Here the Commission persistently declined to find the competitors' prices unlawful.

The remarks of two Justices of this Court, during oral argument on the prior appeal, are significant. Commission counsel had said: "Now, if [the competitors' offers] were illegal offers then, of course, under the Staley case Standard had no justification in meeting these illegal offers with another illegal offer." Mr. Justice Jackson then said: "Of course, if they were illegal offers, you would not need to go into ~~the~~ question of good faith." Commission counsel replied: "That is right" (Mimeo. Transcript, p. 72). Later, Mr. Justice Frankfurter said that this Court could not "be shuttlecocked and battledored by the legal and illegal, because if this is meeting an illegal competition, all we have to do is cite the Staley case and then do no more" (Mimeo Transcript, p. 77).

In our amici brief to the Commission on remand, we urged the Commission to make a finding as to the legality of the competitors' prices, a request acknowledged only by the two dissenting Commissioners who stated that they were "satisfied that there is nothing in the 8,000 pages of evidence in this record which might cause [us] to suspect that the respondent knew, or that it had reason to believe, that the competitor's lower price, which it was meeting, was or might have been unlawful" (R. 5420).

In later testimony before the House Small Business Committee, one of the majority Commissioners, testifying as to this case, stated that the Commission found Standard not in good faith because it discriminated in price while its, "competitors [were] moreover, abiding by the statute."[19]

Lacking any finding of unlawfulness, the Commission, in its Petition for Certiorari, relied heavily upon its 1940 companion complaints against Gulf, Texas and Shell, to support its contention that Standard's competitors used discriminatory pricing systems. While the Commission brief merely suggests illegality, the retailer amici flatly state that the prices of those competitors are "prima facie" unlawful (Brief p. 19).

---

[19] Testimony of Stephen Spingarn, Hearings before House Small Business Committee, 84th Cong., 1st Sess. 853 (1955).

Yet on April 3, 1957, following the granting of certiorari, the Commission (without publicity) dismissed those complaints. The Commission's brief now seeks to make light of the dismissals by grasping at a press release of June 18, 1957, announcing a new investigation into the pricing practices of Shell, Texas and Gulf. Surely the re-investigation and the press release are no more than transparent attempts to shore up the Commission's position before this Court.

The order dismissing those complaints was based upon a motion made in January 1955 by Commission counsel; the Commission waited until April 1957 to dismiss. In those 2½ years the Commission had ample opportunity to reinvestigate the complaints if basis existed.

Whatever the reason for the issuance of the June 1957 press release, the Commission, having dismissed the earlier complaints, is certainly not now reinvestigating 1936-39 pricing practices. And an investigation of present pricing practices in the Detroit area could have no bearing upon the legality of the 1936-39 prices involved here.

The issue as to the legality of these three competitors' prices, is, in any event, a smoke screen, for Standard lowered its prices in response to offers from many other competitors as well. There were 20 oil suppliers in the Detroit market. A number of these companies made offers of lower prices to the four jobbers who received Standard's reduced prices. The Commission does not impugn the validity of the prices used by all suppliers in the Detroit area and does not question the prices of other than those three suppliers.

Surely, there is no basis for attacking the legality of prices of the many suppliers who sell only to tank car buyers, who sell only in intrastate commerce, or who have a legal defense such as cost justification for their lower prices.

C. The Actual Grounds Assigned in the Commission's Decision for Not Finding Good Faith—Now Relegated to a Subsidiary Portion of the Argument—Were All Raised and Rejected in This Court's Prior Decision.

Subsidiary to its pricing-system argument, the Commission argues that the findings that Standard knew or should have known that its price reductions were not cost-justified and would result in an injury to competition, and its finding as to Standard's failure to revise its price scale at the time of the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936, negative the "good faith" defense. These were, in fact, the major bases for the Commission's rejection of Standard's defense in 1953. The Commission now suggests they simply constitute "another aspect" of that question (Brief, p. 58).

If Standard could have cost-justified its price reductions, or if the Commission had found no injury to competition, the lower price would have been lawful and there would have been no occasion to invoke the "good faith" defense. The court below, as had this Court earlier, pointed out that cost-justification and absence of injury are separate and distinct defenses from the "good faith" defense in 2(b). It noted: "This is the same theory upon which the Commission's previous order was bottomed and which was expressly repudiated by the Supreme Court," 233 F. 2d at 652.

Equally untenable is the Commission's newly improvised argument that Standard "knew or should have known" that its price reductions were not cost-justified and would injure competition, and that this "knowledge" impugned Standard's good faith. (Brief, p. 57)

This Court in Staley clearly suggested that such "knowledge" is irrelevant:

> "The statute at least requires the seller who has knowingly discriminated in price to show the existence of facts which would lead a reasonable and prudent person to believe that the granting of a lower price would in fact meet the equally low price of a competitor" 324 U.S. at 759-60 (emphasis added).

Similarly there was nothing improper in the fact that Standard did not revise its prices after 1936. The passage of the Robinson-Patman Act narrowed the good faith defense to meeting, but not undercutting, competitors' prices. The amended statute, as this Court said in 1951, did not "cut into the actual core of the defense"; Standard still had the self-defensive right to meet a lower price offered by a competitor. But Standard never undercut the offers of competitors; its price reductions were lawful both before and after 1936. For this reason, as the court below noted, "the mere fact that [Standard] did not change its policy was of little, if any, consequence." 233 F. 2d 649, 653.

D. The Commission Persists in Equating Normal, Hard Competition With Theoretical "Injury" to Competition.

The sole aim of the Commission's complaint and decision (and of the original charges filed with the Commission by the retailers) is the elimination of retail price cutting.[20] The decision will have no such effect.

The Commission can bar Standard's tank-car sales to jobbers, but it cannot bar jobbers from lawfully obtaining the tank-car price from any one of many suppliers.

Unadorned, this is a case about Standard's prices to Ned's.[21] At trial, Commission counsel (now counsel for the retailer amici) conceded that "the testimony taken regarding injury to competition centered upon Ned's" (Brief of Counsel prosecuting the complaint, July 12, 1943, p. 20).[22]

But Ned's was a symptom of competition, not a cause of injury.

---

[20] Cf. Retailers Brief, p. 2.

[21] The Commission found that "there is no evidence that any discount was allowed to purchasers by any retail service station operated by [Wayne and Stikeman]" (R. 5167). The only retail price reductions by Citrin-Kolb were de minimis: 2¢ discount cards offered for three weeks at one station in "1938 or 1939" (R. 5170).

[22] Ironically, while the Commission based its finding of injury largely on Ned's, it concedes Ned's to be an exception to the alleged system it claims precludes a finding of good faith (Brief 42-45).

The Hearing Examiner found that "in the latter part of 1936 and early in 1937 five tank-car customers of the major oil companies" were selling gasoline below the "prevailing retail market price" and this underselling continued in 1937 and 1938 (R. 5113). But four of the five so-called price cutters were supplied by major oil companies other than Standard. And Ned's, the one that was supplied by Standard, did not receive the tank-car (jobber) price from Standard until 1938.

The competitive struggle was intensified by "non-major" retailers. The hearing examiner found that:

> "When the price differential between gasoline of the major and non-major companies was not more than two cents per gallon, there was but little or no competition, but that a competitive situation arose when the normal difference in price between the branded and non-branded gasolines rose above two cents per gallon, [and] grew more intensive after the price spread increased" (R. 5180, emphasis added).

The evidence showed, and the examiner found, that non-major gasoline sold as much as six cents a gallon below the "prevailing major-brand retail price" (R. 5107). The prices of the Austin and Sunny-Puritan stations, selling Zip and Joy gasolines, were five to six cents a gallon below Ned's prices in 1938 and 1939 (R. 1843-46). The Austin stations sold 20 million gallons of gasoline a year (R. 4377) and the Sunny-Puritan stations over 12 million gallons (R. 4878). In contrast, Standard's largest customer sold only 5 million gallons a year.

To the extent then that retail service stations in the Detroit area were "injured" by Standard's lower price to Ned's—and to permit such an inference it is necessary to define "injury" in a way which equates it simply with hard price competition—Standard's tank-car price was not the proximate cause. At all times, Standard was meeting or partially meeting a lower price which competitors were making freely available to their own customers and were offering to Ned's.

Any retailer "injury" flowed not from Standard's prices but from the fact that Ned's and its competitors could freely and lawfully obtain the same prices from competitors of Standard selling branded gasoline of comparable quality and public acceptance, and from non-major competitors selling comparable quality gasoline at appreciably lower prices. Whether or not Standard sold at the lower price was immaterial; Ned's was bound to get the lower price in any event, and so were his competitors.

This Court recognized this fundamental market fact in 1951 when it stated:

> "It must have been obvious to Congress that any price reduction to any dealer may always affect competition at that dealer's level as well as at the dealer's resale level, whether or not the reduction to the dealer is discriminatory. Likewise, it must have been obvious to Congress that any price reductions initiated by a seller's competitor would, if not met by the seller, affect competition at the beneficiary's level or among the beneficiary's customers just as much as if those reductions had been met by the seller" 340 U.S. at 250.

The net effect of the Commission's decision will be a loss to jobbers and a spur to forward vertical integration by oil companies. Price competition at the retail level will continue as virulent as ever.

CONCLUSION

The Commission's decision is no more than an effort to circumvent the 1951 decision of this Court. The impact of the order will be felt primarily by independent gasoline jobbers and not by Standard. Restrictions placed upon jobber operations by the Commission's order will hobble competitive activities by jobbers, will reduce competition among suppliers for jobber business, will, at the least, require unlawful resale price maintenance, and will give impetus to forward vertical integration by major suppliers and to the elimination of independent jobbers.

The legal basis of the Commission's decision urged in this Court is a patent afterthought without support in the record of this proceeding or in the several earlier Commission decisions.

The Commission's decision will not prevent price cutting at the retail level of competition, the only relief which the complainant retailers seek. Standard's lower prices were not a causal factor of retail price cutting. They were merely a competitive response to lower prices already lawfully available to Standard customers from other suppliers.

We urge that the decision of the Court of Appeals be affirmed, that the Commission's antiquated complaint derived from another economic era be finally dismissed, and that independent gasoline jobbers be freed from the jeopardy which this proceeding has posed for nearly two decades.

Respectfully submitted,

William Simon Robert L. Wald John Bodner, Jr. 1300 Connecticut Avenue Washington, D. C.	Otis H. Ellis 1001 Connecticut Avenue Washington, D. C.
Attorneys for Empire State Petroleum Association	Attorney for National Oil Jobbers Council, Inc. and Its Member Associations (Appendix A.)

October 1957

APPENDIX A

Alabama Petroleum Association, Inc.
Arkansas Independent Oil Marketers Association
Colorado Petroleum Association
Connecticut Petroleum Association
Florida Petroleum Marketers Association, Inc.
Georgia Independent Oilmen's Association
Illinois Petroleum Marketers Association
Independent Oil Men's Association of New England
Indiana Independent Petroleum Association, Inc.
Intermountain Oil Jobbers Association
Iowa Independent Oil Jobbers Association, Inc.
Kentucky Petroleum Marketers Association
Missouri Petroleum Association
Mississippi Oil Jobbers Association
Nebraska Petroleum Marketers Association, Inc.
North Carolina Oil Jobbers Association
Northwest Petroleum Association
Pennsylvania Petroleum Association, Inc.
South Dakota Independent Oilmen's Association
Tennessee Oil Men's Association
Texas Oil Jobbers Association
Virginia Petroleum Jobbers Association
Wisconsin Petroleum Association
Wyoming Oil Jobbers Association